

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. OUR ADDRESS.

IN assuming the rôle and responsibility of editorial functions, we do so with a hearty fraternal greeting to all our readers. Upon their indulgence we rely to excuse imperfections, and to their sympathies we confidently appeal for support in this attempt to establish a journal which we hope will become a worthy organ of the great Masonic Fraternity.

It is beyond dispute that the progress of Freemasonry, not only in England but in every part of the globe, has been for some time past almost incalculable. Candidates for admission through the hallowed porch-ways of our Temple, while men of every clime and creed, are found zealously promoting the welfare of the Craft by the study of its mysteries and the dissemination of its principles. A society at once so admirable and so extensive, and which embraces within its ample fold so many members of talent and influence, ought to be, we conceive, as fully represented in the Press of Great Britain as it is in that of Germany, France, or the United States of America. It will therefore be our mission to act as the exponent of our brethren's enlightened views, as well as the historian of their proceedings; and in the discharge of this duty we shall sedulously avoid giving publicity to any document, from whatever source, which might in the slightest degree infringe the laws of the Order by disclosing the arcana of Freemasonry. We invite the cordial co-operation of every Mason, as our columns will be opened to reports of meetings in every established degree and every existing rite.

Among other subjects to be considered or discussed in THE FREEMASON, will be found "Masonic Jurisprudence." Under this heading we purpose giving expositions of the laws of the Masonic institution in its several branches, according to the most generally received interpretations, and not merely as our own editorial opinions.

The utility of "Masonic Notes and Queries" is unquestionable; many stray facts may be jotted down, and many little incidents brought to light through the medium of this unpretending mode of inquiring, or of communicating information.

The "Antiquities, Records, and Bibliography" of the Order will occupy the position due to the importance of those monuments of the past, and we rejoice to hail our esteemed Brother HUGHAN as the first craftsman in this department of labour.

In our "Portfolio" we shall give excerpts from choice publications; and this being a work in which all our friends can lend a helping hand, we earnestly solicit them to forward suitable extracts from books in their possession. Non omnia possumus omnes was the saying of an ancient sage, but it is fair to add that we may all achieve something.

A prominent feature in THE FREEMASON will be leading articles upon subjects of interest to the Order, or upon remarkable events in its history and progress. The "Craft Universal" will, of course, first claim our attention, and we promise to devote our utmost endeavours to promote the success of those noble charities which are near and dear to the heart of every true Mason. Arrangements will also be made to obtain foreign Masonic intelligence, and we shall be glad to receive from our brother editors in America and on the Continent copies of their magazines or journals in exchange for THE FREEMASON.

This, friendly readers, is our programme.

Regarding Freemasonry as a pure system of ethics which contains every element that can constitute real greatness and goodness in life, we shall honestly and fearlessly advocate its interests in the most comprehensive sense of the word. We shall direct attention to its principles and its practices, investigate its records, and demonstrate its utility. In short, it will be our constant aim to sustain the reputation and enhance the renown of an Institution which has been so long

To fame immortally allied,
And crowned with glory.

Our readers will observe that our frontispiece is an engraving of Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, the Grand Temple of English Freemasonry, and we trust this will be accepted as an evidence that, whilst working under the ægis of lawfully-constituted authority, and paying due deference to the ordinances of ruling powers, we shall ever remember that we are "free" Masons, and vindicate our position as such by maintaining a just independence as the organ of a great and "free" fraternity.

THE MASONIC PRESS ABROAD.

One of the best magazines published in America is the "Masonic Monthly," of Boston. We extract from it the following apposite remarks upon Masonic Literature:—

The existence of a Masonic Science, and a Philosophy of Masonry, suggests and renders possible, a Masonic Literature. Science and philosophy are essential to the existence of any literature. They are its food and its life. The existence of the one presupposes that of the other.

Of late years the literature of Freemasonry has assumed large proportions. It has been developed to such an extent as to give considerable prominence and importance to the question—What is its mission and its duty. It is a weighty matter how the conductors of the Masonic Press solve this problem. We much fear that some of them have not given the subject very much of their thought, while some, we imagine, regard the earnings as of more consequence than the influence of their organs.

We consider that the mission of the Masonic Press is to occupy the field of Masonic science, history, and philosophy, and to disseminate the principles of true Masonic life, with the end in view of winning back the Craft into the old ways of our ancient brethren, who sought to penetrate into and obtain a mastery over every department of Masonry. The lodges have neglected the pursuit of science and philosophy, and confined themselves simply and exclusively to Masonry as an art. Masonic literature is, or should be, a reaction to this tendency, and as a reaction may we hope for it all success.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Macdonald Lodge, No. 1216.

A meeting of this lodge—formed in May last in connection with the 1st Surrey Rifle Volunteer corps, and taking its name from the esteemed Lieut.-Colonel Commandant of that corps—was held at the Lodge-room, Head Quarters, Camberwell, on Wednesday, the 3rd inst., when were present:—Bro. Major A. L. Irvine, P.M. and P.Z., W.M.; Bro. James Stevens, P.M. and P.Z., S.W.; Bro. John Thomas, P.M. and P.Z., Acting J.W. (in the absence of Bro. P. de Keyser); Bro. J. J. Curtis, Secretary; Bro. Waterall as S.D.; Bro. Wagstaffe, J.D.; Bro. J. Green, I.G.; also Bros. Captains Wire and Thos. Irvine, Lieuts. H. Puckle and Fletcher, Ensign Fourdrinier, Dr. Cronin, Dicker, Hastie, Bridges, Carnell, Ball, Larham, Kethro, Patton, Wolton, Cowdry, Newton, and other members, and Bros. Griffiths, Thomas, Dix, and other visitors.

The lodge having been duly opened in the three degrees, Bros. Fletcher and Cowdry were severally raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, in that most solemn and impressive manner for which the Macdonald Lodge, although so young, has already earned a reputation in the Craft. We have observed that on each occasion of our visits the respective ceremonies—but more especially that in the third degree—have been rendered with enhanced attention to detail and effect, and certainly we have never yet witnessed so perfect and imposing a ceremonial as on this evening. The entire arrangements of the lodge in respect of drapery and lighting, and the musical accessories under the direction of Bro. Captain Wire, are such as cannot fail to impress visitors with a full conviction that Masonry, as it should be practised, is well understood by the members of this lodge, and in their hands will not be allowed to subside into a mere prosaic rendering of sublime language unaccompanied, in too many instances, by even the remotest evidence of feeling or animation. We recommend our brethren to visit the Macdonald Lodge whenever opportunity may offer, if only to observe the working of this degree.

On the termination of the Raisings, the lodge was closed in the third degree, resumed to the first, and called off for light refreshment. After remaining under the charge of the J.W. for about twenty minutes, it was again called on, resumed to the second degree, and Bros. Patton and Wolton were respectively passed to the degree of F.C. The lodge was closed to the first degree, and Mr. William Arthur Willis was introduced to the Light of Masonry. Here again the foregoing observations as to impressiveness of ceremonial apply. Every officer knows his duty well, and the habit of discipline practised in the corps is made available in the lodge-room to cause the business there to go well and smoothly.

Proposals for initiation and joining having been taken, the W.M. proceeded to fill up a vacant office to which no appointment had hitherto been made—that of Director of Ceremonies. Giving consideration to the progress made by one of the junior brethren of the lodge—through his attention to the Lodge of Improvement—and that he had really qualified himself for the office, the W.M. selected Bro. Bridges, and invested him with the collar of D.C.

The W.M. then read a letter from Bro. H. J. Godden, resigning, in consequence of inability to attend on many occasions of the lodge meeting, his office of Treasurer. The resignation having been accepted with regret, Dr. Cronin was proposed by Bro. Stevens, S.W., to fill the office pro. tem., and that Brother was unanimously appointed thereto.

The W.M. stated that he had commenced his canvass, as the representative of the lodge, as Steward at the ensuing Festival of the Boys' Masonic School. He desired to evince his appreciation of the position he had accepted, and his interest in the charity by constituting himself a life governor of the institution.

Bro. Stevens, S.W., proposed, Bro. Wagstaffe, J.D., seconded, and it was unanimously resolved: "That a sum of ten guineas be voted to the Boys' School, to be placed on the W.M.'s list, to constitute the lodge a life governor of the institution."

Several members then gave their names for individual subscriptions, and there can be no doubt that the Macdonald Lodge was not near the bottom of the list, in regard to amount of subscriptions, when the stewards' returns were read out at the Festival on the 10th inst.

Some further matters of business were then attended to, and, although nearly twelve o'clock, in the same orderly manner as at the commencement of the evening.

The lodge was then closed in perfect harmony.

We are informed that it is the intention of the principal officers and some of the members of this lodge to form a Conclave of the Christian and Military Order of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, for which purpose an assembly was called for the 12th instant (last evening). We predict for such Conclave a most brilliant success, and shall be glad to watch and report its progress.

Egyptian Lodge, No. 27.—A regular meeting of this Lodge took place at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on the 4th inst. The W.M., Bro. Libbis, opened the proceedings and went through the entire business of the evening in a careful and efficient manner. Mr. Charles Walter was initiated, Bro. Sutherland passed, and Bro. Jones raised. The election of a Steward to represent the lodge at the Inauguration of Freemasons' Hall resulted in the unanimous choice of Bro. H. G. Buss, P.M., the respected Secretary, as the recipient of this coveted distinction. As usual, the worthy "Egyptians" maintained their reputation for benevolence, as Bro. Jacobs, P.M., who is Steward for the Girls' School Festival reported the subscriptions on his list as having reached the handsome sum of £60.

Lion and Lamb Lodge, No. 192.—A meeting of this old lodge was held on Thursday, the 4th inst., at the Cannon-street Hotel. The lodge was opened by the W.M., assisted by the officers and brethren in due form, and the minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. The lodge was opened in the third degree, and Bro. Cohn raised to the degree of M.M. The lodge was then closed down to the second degree, and Bros. Taylor, Haynes, and Crotty were passed to the degree of F.C. The lodge was then resumed to the first degree, when Mr. Arkell and Mr. Younger were balloted for and approved of, and were regularly initiated into Freemasonry; the ceremonies of the three degrees being worked by Bro. C. Hosgood, P.M. Among the brethren present were Bros. Goodyer, P.M. and Treasurer; I. G. Marsh, I.P.M.; H. Cates, P.M.; Higman, S.W.; Roberts, I.W.; Child, S.D.; Trott, J.D.; Newman, I.G.; and several others. Visitors, Bros. Dr. O'Connor, P.M., 27; Anthony O'Neal Haye, P.M.; J. Brett, P.M., 177; and Levy, P.M., 188. The lodge was then closed in due form and the brethren adjourned from labour to refreshment. Those loyal and masonic toasts were then given and responded to. The W.M. then presented the I.P.M. with a P.M. Jewel, of the value of 10 guineas, manufactured by Bro. G. Kenning, of Little Britain, which gave the greatest satisfaction to the brethren present. The attention of the members was then called to the masonic charity for aged freemasons, when the sum of £31 was collected for the same. The several toasts being interspersed with some very good harmony by Bros. Levy, Garden and Gardner, which brought the evening to a happy termination.

ISLEWORTH.—Villiers Lodge, No. 1194.—A special meeting of this lodge was held at the Northumberland Arms Hotel, Isleworth, on the 27th ult., the W.M., Bro. Sidney E. Clarke, presided, supported by Bros. J. Trickett, S.W.; W. Dodd, J.W.; R. Gurney, Treasurer; R. W. Little, P.M., Secretary; E. T. Osbaldeston, I.G.; T. Smale, D.C.; and a number of non-official brethren. Major Henry W. Palmer was initiated by the W.M., who was then compelled to leave, owing to the illness of a relative. Bro. Walters, P.M., then passed Bro. Tustin to the second degree, and Bro. Little raised Bro. Bailey to the degree of M.M. The circular respecting the Inauguration Festival at Freemasons' Hall, on the 14th April, having been read, Bro. R. Wentworth Little, P.M., was unanimously chosen as the Steward to represent the "Villiers" upon that occasion. The lodge was then closed.

PROVINCIAL.

CUMBERLAND AND WESTMORLAND.—Skiddaw Lodge, No. 1002.—The usual monthly meeting of this lodge was held in the lodge rooms (Bro. Thwaites'), Market-place, Cockermouth, on Tuesday, the 2nd inst. Present, the W.M., Bro. Shilton, in the chair; Bro. Puxley, P.P.G.C., as S.W.; Bro. Robinson, S.W., as J.W.; Br. Thwaites, P.J.W., as Secretary; and Bro. Evening, I.G.; there were also present Bro. Faithfull, I.P.M., and P.P.J.G.W.; Bro. Dodson, P.M.; Bro. Ropley, Bro. Wybergh; Bro. Hammil; Bro. C. Marpon, S.D.; Bro. Bailey, P.S.D.; Bro. Pearson, P.S.W.; and Bro. Potts, Tyler. The lodge being opened the minutes of the preceding meeting were confirmed, as also the minutes of a special meeting, when it was unanimously agreed to subscribe £5 5s. from the lodge funds to the Zetland Memorial Fund, and Bro. Faithfull, P.P.G.J.W., P.M., was unanimously elected steward to the same. The ballot was then taken for the Rev. W. Williams of Christ Church, Cockermouth, and he was afterwards duly entered and initiated; Bro. Dr. Dodgson, P.M., officiating with his usual ability as Deacon; the Senior Warden's chair being filled by the vicar, Br. Puxley. Nothing further remaining to be done the lodge was closed according to ancient usage. One particular feature of this lodge is that it is held at private rooms, which have been fitted up in an elaborate style, and no refreshments (so called) are allowed, so that brethren are not led into the temptation of late hours.

MARGATE.—The Union Lodge, No. 127.—This ancient lodge met on Friday, the 5th inst., when an unusual circumstance occurred—namely, there was no ceremony to be worked, an event of rare occurrence; whereupon Bro. P.M. E. C. Hayward, P. Prov. S.G.D. Kent, who is also the valued Masonic Instructor, Installing Master, and Treasurer of the lodge, in the absence of the W.M. assumed the gavel and ascended the chair. The lodge having been duly opened and the minutes of the last regular lodge read and confirmed, the acting W.M. availed himself of this pause in the general routine of lodge business to test the quality of the brethren in respect to their Masonic knowledge, and at once proceeded to work the seven sections of the 1st degree, and all present were gratified to hear the able manner in which the answers were given by the brethren:—Bro. T. M. Compton, to the 1st section; Bro. Alfred Wootton, to the 2nd and 3rd; Bro. W. K. Treves, S.D., to the 4th; Bro. P. M. Townsend, to the 5th and 6th; and Bro. Geo. E. Hawkes, S.W., to the 7th. The answers were given by each of those Brothers in a distinct and impressive manner, and afforded much Masonic instruction and pleasure to the numerous brethren present. It is intended at any future time when a similar opportunity may occur, to embrace it by working, in open lodge, the sections in all the degrees, thus laying before the brethren the whole of that beautiful teaching which is recognised and esteemed by all good Masons as the most perfect system of morality ever unveiled before the human mind.—At the conclusion of this interesting work, Bro. P. M. Brasier, Past Prov. G.S.B. Kent, proposed, and Bro. P. M. Dixon seconded—

"That as a strenuous and laudable effort is now being made throughout London and the various provinces to raise a sufficient sum to pay off the heavy debt with which the Masonic Boys' School is at present encumbered, at the ensuing Festival on the 10th instant, a further subscription of Ten Guineas be voted from this lodge in aid of the fund for that purpose."

This resolution having been carried unanimously, the gratifying fact was announced that Miss Hayward, the daughter of P.M. Hayward, the presiding W.M., had herself collected a further sum of £10 10s. for the same noble purpose, which would be forwarded at the same time, making a sum of 20 guineas in aid of the movement for the emancipation of one of our magnificent charities from its temporary difficulty.—We may mention that it was intended to have presented to the I.P.M., Bro. Townsend, who is also, and has been for many years, the indefatigable Secretary of the lodge, a P.M.'s Jewel, which had been previously voted by the lodge, but owing to the absence of the W.M. the presentation was deferred, at the suggestion of the I.P.M. himself, until the next meeting, on the 19th inst.

IPSWICH.—Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 959.—The members of this lodge held their usual monthly meeting on Monday, 1st inst., in their beautiful hall, which has just been decorated by Bro. F. Crisp, of Ipswich. The W.M., the Rev. R. N. Sanderson, presided. After the usual preliminaries, two gentlemen were balloted for and, having been duly accepted, were admitted and initiated into the mysteries of the Craft. The working tools of an E.A.P. were described by the M. of the Ceremonies, and the charge delivered to the newly initiated by P.M. Townsend. The lodge was afterwards closed in ancient form.

ABINGDON.—Abbey Lodge, No. 945.—Bro. J. T. Morland has undertaken the duties of steward for this province, in connection with the following Anniversary Festival of the Masonic Institution for Boys, and we are gratified to learn that Br. Morland's appeal for subscriptions and donations on behalf of that excellent institution has been responded to by several lodges.

NEWBURY.—Lodge of Hope, No. 574.—Bro. W. C. Bland, P.G.J.W., has been installed for the fourth year as W.M. of this lodge. The installing member was Bro. W. Biggs, P.M., P.P.S.G.W., Wilts. The officers invested were as follows: I.P.M., Br. G. Boyer; S.W., Bro. W. W. King, P.M.; J.W., Bro. A. Burns; Treasurer, Bro. F. G. Hall, P.M.; Secretary, Bro. Geo. J. Cosburn, (Herold office); S.D., Bro. Johnson; J.D., Bro. Charles Wheeler; I.G., Bro. Jos. Wheeler; Tyler, Bro. Stillmin. A banquet was afterwards held, and several brethren from the Reading lodges were present.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge, No. 279.—A regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Halford-street, on Wednesday, the 3rd instant. There were present:—Bros. Kelly, Dep. Pro. G.M., and W.M., in the chair; P.M.'s Pettifor, P.P.S.G.W.; Dr. Buck, P.P.J.W.; Kinder, P.P.J.G.W.; Weare, P.P.G.D. and Treas.; and Clarke, P.G.S.D., Stanley, S.W.; Stretton, P.P.G. Reg.; J.W. T. Crow, Secy; and about thirty other Brethren. The visitors were Bros. Duff, W.M.; Toller, S.W.;

Sculthorpe, Sec.; Partridge, Bethrey, Baines, and other members of No. 523. The lodge having been opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the previous meeting read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Mr. Jno. Edw. Montague Finch, M.A.; Cantab, M.R.C.S., &c., of the Leicestershire and Rutland Lunatic Asylum; and for Mr. Joseph Hellaby Skevington, of Rothley, as candidates for initiation; and for Bro. Levi Lincoln Atwood, of Garden City Lodge, Chicago, U.S., as a joining member, which was unanimous in their favour. An F.C.'s Lodge was opened, and Bros. Jacobs and Palmer, having passed a satisfactory examination, retired; when the lodge was opened in the third degree, and those Brethren were duly raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The lodge was then lowered to the first degree, and Bros. W. H. Pegg and R. W. Widderson were called to the pedestal and the usual questions put to them to test their proficiency as entered apprentices, after which, the lodge having been resumed in the second degree, they were passed as Fellow Crafts. The lodge having been resumed in the first degree, Mr. James Astill, of Anstey, elected at the last meeting, and Messrs. Finch and Skevington were then severally initiated into Freemasonry.—Letters were read from Bro. the Marquis of Hamilton, M.P., and Bro. Colonel the Hon. Leicester Smyth, C.B., &c. (son-in-law and son of the Right Hon. Earl Howe, senior Past Master of the lodge, and R.W.P. Grand Master), expressing their great gratification at the honour conferred upon them in being elected honorary members of the lodge, and which were ordered to be recorded in the minutes.—The W.M. announced that on Monday, the 8th inst., the young Earl Ferrers would be initiated into Freemasonry, in the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge, at Ashby-de-la-Zouch; an event which would possess a double interest to the Brethren of the St. John's and John of Gaunt Lodges, from the fact that the last Earl but one was a member of the former lodge, and the late Earl was a member of the latter lodge, as well as one of the founders of the lodge at Ashby. He added that it was his intention to pay an official visit to Ashby on the occasion, as Dep. Pro. Grand Master, and would be glad to be accompanied by such of the officers of the P.G. Lodge, and others, as could attend.—Three gentlemen were then proposed as candidates, and the W.M. intimated his intention of holding a lodge of emergency for their initiation, on account of the great amount of business on the minute book. The lodge after being at work from 6 o'clock to 9.30, was then closed, and the Brethren adjourned to refreshment. After supper the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly given and heartily responded to, including that of the newly-initiated Brethren. The harmony of the evening was greatly enhanced by the excellent singing of Bros. C. Johnson, Crow (who presided at the piano), Palmer, Attwood, Hunt, Thorpe, and Bithrey. At twelve the Tylers' toast and the National Anthem brought the proceedings to a close.

MELTON MOWBRAY.—The Rutland Lodge, No. 1130.—The annual Festival of this flourishing young lodge was celebrated at the George Hotel, on Thursday the 25th ult., under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. the Rev. W. Kay Robinson, B.A. There were also present, the Dep. Prov. G.M., Bro. Kelly; the W.M. elect, Bro. the Rev. W. Langley, M.A.; and upwards of thirty other brethren. The visitors were Bro. Corby, No. 466, Stamford; Bros. S. Pettifor, P.M. and P.P.S.G.W., No. 279, Leicester; Hunt, Pro. G. Steward, No. 523, Leicester; and Attwood, Garden City Lodge, Chicago, U.S. The lodge having been opened in the first degree, Mr. Thomas Bernard, architect, was initiated into our mysteries. Bro. Berridge was then examined as to his proficiency as an E.A., and an F.C.'s Lodge having been opened, he was passed to the second degree. Bros. Clarke, Hardy, and Snodin, then passed a satisfactory examination as F.C.'s, and the lodge having been opened in the third degree, they were severally raised to the sublime degree of M.M., in a most impressive manner. The whole of the ceremonies, indeed, were worked by the officers, from the W.M. down to the I.G., in a most efficient and admirable manner. The chair was then taken by the Dep. Pro. G.M., who proceeded, according to ancient custom, to install the Rev. Bro. Langley as the W.M. for the ensuing year, after which the newly-installed W.M. was proclaimed and saluted in the several degrees, and had the usual charges addressed to him. The W.M. then appointed and invested his officers, as follows:—Bro. the Rev. W. K. Robinson, I.P.M.; Douglas, S.W.; East, J.W.; Adcock (elected) Treas.; Weaver, Sec.; Bright, S.D.; Markham, J.D.; Ferneley, Org.; Main, I.G.; and Turville, Tyler. The appointment of Stewards was postponed until the next meeting. The W.M. proposed a cordial vote of thanks to his predecessor, the Rev. Bro. Robinson, for the very efficient manner in which he had discharged the onerous duties of the chair during the past year. This was seconded in strong terms of eulogy by the D.P.G.M., who expressed his great satisfaction, as one of its founders, at witnessing the prosperous condition and the admirable working of the lodge. The vote was, of course, carried unanimously, and the retiring W.M. was then presented with a life subscription to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, the presentation having taken that form at the Rev. Bro.'s request, in lieu of a P.M.'s Jewel voted to him at the last lodge. Bro. Robinson returned thanks. After several gentlemen had been proposed as candidates, the lodge was closed and the brethren sat down to an elegant banquet served in Bro. Selby's well-known first-rate style. The usual loyal and masonic toasts were duly honoured, interspersed with some excellent songs, and a very pleasant evening was spent by the brethren. It should be mentioned that during the ceremonies the chants arranged by Bros. Johnson and Hopkins were performed, conducted by Bro. Ferneley, organist. During the evening a petition was signed by nine of the members for a Royal Arch Chapter to be attached to the lodge, and several brethren who are residents in the county of Rutland are about to apply for a warrant for a new lodge at Oakham, in that county, which has not yet possessed one, and towards the formation of which the officers of No. 1130 will render every assistance.

SCARBOROUGH.—Old Globe Lodge, No. 200.—An emergency meeting of this lodge was held at the Mansion Hall, on Tuesday, the 2nd of March, when the following brethren were present:—Bros. W. Peacock, W.M.; J. W. Woodall, P.M., P.P.G.S.W., Mayor of Scarborough; W. F. Rooke, P.M., P.P.G.J.W.; H. C. Martin, P.M., P.P.G.D., Hon. Sec.; H. A. Williamson, P.M.; F. J. Spurr, P.M.; R. H. Peacock, S.W.; D. Fletcher, J.W.; G. H. Walshaw, S.D.; J. Hardgrave, J.D.; G. Ruddock, I.G.; I. Ash, Tyler; and Bros. J. Verity, C. B. Breary, T. Westlake, F. Robinson, T. Raper, W. Milner, J. D. C. Jackson, and J. Chapman. The lodge was opened at 7.30 p.m. Bro. J. W. Woodall, P.M., P.P.G.S.W., proposed, "That the lodge subscribe out of its funds the sum of 30 guineas, which, with the two life governorships purchased last year, be incorporated into a vice-presidency of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys." Bro. R. H. Peacock, S.W., seconded the same, which was put to the vote, and carried unanimously. Bro. J. W. Woodall, P.M., &c., proposed, and W. F. Rooke, P.M., &c., seconded, a vote of condolence to the family of the late highly-esteemed Bro. Sir J. V. B. Johnstone, Bart., M.P. for Scarborough, who had been a member of this lodge since 1842, which was unanimously agreed to.

RYE.—Wellington Lodge, No. 341.—At the anniversary, on February 25th, Bro. J. Howland was installed W.M. of the lodge, who nominated Bro. J. G. Terry, S.W.; Bro. W. P. Tanner, J.W.; Bro. B. A. Hearn, P.P.J.W., Sussex, P.M., No. 311, Hon. Sec. Bro. W. Dawes, P.M., P.G.R., Sussex, performed the installation ceremony.

CARNARVON.—Segontium Lodge, No. 606.—At a meeting of this lodge, held at the Sportsman's Hotel, Carnarvon, on the 24th ult., the following brethren were present:—Bros. Robt. Humphreys, Secy.; E. H. Williams, S.D.; M. W. Poole, J.D.; Geo. C. Bradbury, I.G.; John Pritchard; John Roberts; O. T. Williams; Percy Hennett; Rev. John Hughes, Chaplain; J. B. Morgan; R. I. Davids; Rob. Arthur Jones; Richard Rowlands, Owen Jones; William Hayward; J. C. Fourdrinier, P.M., No. 2; Edward Westley, Zetland Lodge, Hong-Kong; W. H. Brewis, Alexandria Lodge, No. 993; James Hawkrigge, Tyler. In the absence of Bro. Potter, W.M., the chair was taken by Bro. J. C. Fourdrinier, P.M., No. 2. The lodge was opened in due form, after which Mr. Dyson Weston was duly initiated into Freemasonry. The lodge was opened in the second degree, when Bro. Percy Bennett was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. The lodge was opened in third degree, and Bro. J. B. Morgan raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The lodge was resumed in the first degree, a ballot taken for Bro. J. C. Fourdrinier, P.M., No. 2, and Bro. T. C. Roden, of Llandudno, P.M. of this lodge, and they were unanimously elected Hon. Members of the lodge. The W.M. read a letter received from Bro. Chas. Wigan, Provincial Grand Secretary, announcing that the next Provincial Grand Lodge would be held at Carnarvon in or about August next. The lodge was then closed, and the Brethren sat down at 5 o'clock to the banquet, provided by Bro. John Moreton in his usual liberal style. The Masonic and other toasts were drunk with the usual honours. After spending a very agreeable evening the brethren broke up at eight o'clock.

LANCASTER.—Rowley Lodge, No. 1051.—The members of this lodge held their regular meeting on Monday, 1st inst., at the Masonic Rooms, Athenaeum, Lancaster. The chair of K.S. was occupied by W. Bro. Mason, W.M., who was supported by the following officers and brethren, viz.: Bros. Hall, S.W.; Bro. Dr. Mercer, J.W.; W. Bro. Bagnall, P.M.; Bro. John Hatch, S.W., 281, as S.D.; W. Bro. E. Storey, W.M., 281, as J.D.; Bro. Taylor, I.G.; Bro. Walton, Tyler; Bro. O. Armistead, F.C.; and Bro. Jesse Banning, visitor. After the usual business of the lodge had been transacted, the ballot was taken for Bro. R. Barlow Simpson, of Lancaster, and of St. Michael's Lodge, Tenbury, who had been proposed at a previous meeting, was now unanimously elected as a joining member of the lodge. Notice of motion having been given, the sum of three guineas was voted to the Zetland Commemoration Fund. The W.M. directed the attention of the brethren to several communications he had received. Bro. Armistead, F.C., being a candidate for the third degree, was found qualified and duly raised as a M.M. by W. Bro. Bagnall. Bro. Jesse Banning advocated the cause of the Masonic Life Boat, asking for subscriptions from the lodge, and, after some conversation it was decided to allow the matter to stand over until the next meeting. There being no other business before the lodge it was closed in due order.

ULVERSTON.—Lodge of Furness, No. 995.—The monthly meeting of this prosperous and well-conducted lodge was held on Tuesday, the 2nd inst., at the Masonic Temple. The lodge was opened in due form by Bro. Roper, W.M., supported by Bros. Hodgson, S.W.; Pearson, L.W.; Thompson, S.O.; Podmore, J.D.; Paxton, I.G.; Remington, I.P.M.; Barber, P.M.; Proctor, Chaplain; James, Secretary; Butcher, Treasurer; Callon, Organist; and Wilson, S.S. The minutes of last communication were read and confirmed; Bro. James also read quarterly statement of accounts, which, after some discussion, were agreed to. Bro. Cook, P.M., 119, P.P.G.S.W.; then delivered the lectures on the tracing boards, to which the brethren paid marked attention. In conclusion the W.M. proposed a vote of thanks to Bro. Cook, for the very able and eloquent manner in which he had delivered the lectures, which was heartily agreed to. Bro. Pearson, J.W., was unanimously elected as the steward to represent this lodge on the Inauguration festival, on Wednesday, April 14th, who generously promised to pay all expenses attending it. There being no other business, the lodge was finally and formally closed at 8.50 p.m.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—Milton Lodge No. 1144.—Held at the house of Bro. John Stafford, the Burlington Hotel, this lodge held its third anniversary and installation on Monday, March 1st 1869, when a goodly number of Brethren were present on the occasion. Bro. Robert Kenyon, W.M., opened the lodge up to the third degree. Bro. Past Master S.D. Lees Provincial Senior Grand Warden of East Lancashire, the installing Master proceeded in the installation, when Bro. James Smith Ross, of Stanford House, was presented by Bro. Thomas Stafford, P.P.D.C., Cheshire, in the usual way, for the benefit of installation, the laws were read over to him by the Secretary, which he assented to, the brethren then retired, when a board of Installed Masters were opened, the brethren were then admitted, and Bro. Ross was invested and conducted to his chair, he then appointed his officers. Bros. Alvin Willis, S.W.; James Pollett, J.W.; Samuel Garside, Treas.; Thos. Stafford, Secy.; John Thomas Kerrison, S.D.; David Radcliffe, J.D.; and Bro. John Jones, I.G.; Bro. S. D. Lees, then gave the ancient charges to the W.M. and Wardens. The lodge was then closed by the newly appointed officers, during the year fourteen new members have been added to the lodge, there have been also several valuable presents given to the lodge by Bro. Edward Lees, the three tracing boards framed in handsome gilt frames, &c., Bro. Ross, a charity box, carved in oak, with a beautiful inscription on. Bro. Jones, a splendid burnished lamp, and Bro. Ried. Boley, with a Mosaic floor-cloth. There was also granted at this meeting fifty-five guineas to the Masonic Boys School, it is also the intention to subscribe to all the charities in connection with Freemasonry. The brethren then retired for a short time, when a most sumptuous spread was laid out by the host; after the cloth was drawn Bro. Ross took the chair and was supported by several Provincial Grand officers, after the usual loyal and masonic toasts were given and responded to, the Brethren retired after spending a pleasant evening about 10 o'clock.

METROPOLITAN.

Rose of Denmark Chapter, No. 975.—The fourth anniversary of this flourishing Chapter, was celebrated on the 6th inst., at the Star and Garter Hotel, Kew Bridge, when 26 Companions were present, including Comps. W. Mann, Z. 186; W. Ough, Z. 657; P.Z. 749; C. Hosgood Z. 1056; and F. Walters, P.Z. 73; as visitors:—Comp. Pendlebury, (P.Z. 1056) was induced into the chair of Z., after which Comp. Smith was installed as H., and Comp. Powell as T. The other officers are Comps. R. W. Little, P.Z. S.E.; Tanner, S.N.; Buss, (P.Z.) Treas.; Price P.S.; Dodd, first A.S.; Gurney, second A.S.; Walford, D.C.; Quilty, C.S. Bro. Cazaley, of the Egyptian Lodge, No. 27, was exalted into the Order, the ceremony being most ably worked by Comp. J. Terry, the retiring Z., who with Comp. Brett, P.Z., also performed the installations. Two Brethren were proposed for exaltation, and the Chapter was closed. An excellent banquet followed, after which Comp.

THE PARLIAMENT OF ENGLISH FREEMASONRY.

"Remove not the ancient landmark."

We deem it our duty to call the attention of the English Craft to a series of proposed alterations in the laws respecting the Fund of Benevolence, which, if carried out, will assuredly be the most gigantic innovation ever introduced into the Constitutions of the Order.

It is gravely proposed, not only to alienate a portion of the Fund of Benevolence from the purposes for which it was originally intended, and is still kept sacred—namely, the relief of our brethren in temporary distress—but to limit the future increase of the Fund, by handing over its surplus revenue to other institutions. Such are the main features of Bro. CLABON's scheme, as mooted at the Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge on the 3rd inst., but we are glad to inform our readers that they were not suffered to pass unchallenged.

Bro. J. R. STEBBING, P.G.D., in an earnest and vigorous speech, warned Grand Lodge against the adoption of such a perilous course, and ably protested against laying down a "hard and fast line" as the future sum total of the Fund of Benevolence. He enunciated an opinion, in which we heartily concur, that a capitalized amount of £26,000 would very inadequately represent the resources which a powerful body like the Grand Lodge of England should always have at its command, and intimated that even double that sum would hardly meet the views of those whose thoughts extend to the future, and its possible claims.

To the potential arguments of Bro. Stebbing we may add the following extract from the Book of Constitutions, Art. I. page 96:—"THE FUND APPROPRIATED TO THE OBJECT OF BENEVOLENCE SHALL BE SOLELY DEVOTED TO CHARITY;" and we shall be greatly disappointed if the Freemasons of England will consent thus to limit the just heritage of their successors in the Craft, or permit the funds as they accumulate to be diverted to any other object under heaven, however noble or beneficent. The question will come before Grand Lodge in June, and if the brethren generally realise the importance of the occasion they will delegate a Brother from each Lodge to attend and strenuously oppose the restriction of their Masonic privileges.

With other portions of Bro. Clabon's scheme we are in perfect accord. Increased powers in the award of pecuniary grants ought to be given both to the Grand Master and to the Lodge of Benevolence, and we would therefore entreat our worthy and eminent Brother not to hazard the rejection of many excellent suggestions in his projected alterations by pressing the adoption of measures which, we confidently predict, will never obtain the sanction of the Craft.

ZETLAND COMMEMORATION FUND.

We earnestly commend to the warmest support of the Craft this testimonial to the merits of our noble and venerated GRAND MASTER. The long period during which Lord Zetland has presided over the Freemasons of England has been one fraught with great results to the Order in general, and will doubtless constitute an era in its history. The urbanity and dignity with which the Grand Master has administered the affairs of the fraternity deserve the hearty response of the brethren, and we are satisfied that the contributions eventually received will be worthy of the "Zetland Commemoration," as well as proportionate to the number and importance of the Masonic Order. We shall revert to this subject from time to time as occasion may require.

THE ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

The 71st anniversary festival of this institution was held on Wednesday evening at the Freemasons' Hall, when the chair was occupied by Earl De Grey and Ripon, the Deputy Grand Master of England and Provincial Grand Master of West Yorkshire. About 200 sat down to dinner, among whom were Brothers Lord Eliot, P.G.W.; Stephen Blair, G.M. of East Lancashire; Augustus Smith, G.M. of Cornwall; H. Murray, district G.M. of China; the Rev. G. Senior, P.G. Ch.; — Shaw, G.S.D.; L. Evans, Pres. of B.G.P.; J. Hervey, G. Sec.; Br. Farmer, W.M.; B. Head, P.G.D.; H. Browse, G.J.D.; W. Young, P.G.S.B.; Captain Cope, P.G.S.B.; R. G. Speirs, P.G.S.D.; and Secondary Potter, P.G.W.

The object of the institution is to provide maintenance and education for the sons of indigent Masons. Until the year 1857 grants were made for the purpose of clothing the boys and placing them at various schools near their parents' residences. Appeals having been made to the craft, however, for funds to enable a school of their own to be secured. In 1856 a convenient mansion and ten acres of freehold land at Wood-green were purchased at an expenditure of £3,500. The building, after some alteration, was inaugurated as a school in 1857, when 25 boys were admitted. In 1866 the number raised to 105, but in consequence of a very large expenditure rendered needful from a variety of causes, including the erection of new buildings, there exists a debt of 10,000l.

During the evening the following prizes were presented by the chairman to three of the boys who had distinguished themselves—a silver medal to Adam Andrews James for general good conduct; a silver medal to Walter Rumbelow, for intellectual exertion and success, and a prize of five guineas in cash to Harry Wildman, who had obtained the first prize at the Oxford Local Middle Class examination in June last, who had been in the first class for honours in the Cambridge Local Middle Class examination in December last.

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys," said that, as a Minister of the Crown as well as in virtue of his office, a Deputy Grand Master of England, he was deeply interested in the success of institutions which were established for the purpose of promoting public education. When the funds would permit of the extension of the dormitory accommodation 200 boys could be received into the institution. The boys now in the institution received a sound English education, and those who exhibited talent had every advantage offered them to enable them to pursue their classical and mathematical studies.

The subscriptions announced during the evening amounted to 12,000l., of which Her Majesty had contributed ten guineas, the Chairman 500 guineas, and Brother S. Blair, the Provincial Grand Master of East Lancashire, 1,000 guineas; the Stewards and Provincial Grand Lodges and Lodges of West Yorkshire, 2,411l.; the Provincial Grand Lodge and Lodges of East Lancashire, 3,885l. The body of the hall and the galleries afforded accommodation for about two hundred ladies. The musical arrangements were under the management of Brother William Ganz, who was assisted by Miss Rose Hersee, Miss Agness Flower, Miss Abbott, Miss Eyles, Brother George Perren, Brother Frederick Penna, and Brother Ciabatta.

A BEAUTIFUL MASONIC PRAYER.

O Thou, whose temple we are! On the mountain of Thy truth let our sublime edifice display its glory. Let the eye of the Master meet the Son of Light as he enters. Let the greater lights, by the help of the less, illuminate the whole scene of his duty and of his pleasure. Behold us with Thy brightness, at this hour, leading a young son into Thy temple. Like the temple, let him be beauteous without, and all glorious within. Let his soul be capacious as Thy truth, and his affections pure as the serene heavens when the silent moon gives her light. Let him obey as the sun, who labours until perfect day with increasing strength; and let all the purposes of his heart be as the stars, which tell of worlds unknown, and are notices of boundless benevolence. Let him move like the heavenly orbs, in harmony; and should he stretch across the universe, may he disturb no soul in his course. Within this temple may he be sacred as the altar, sweet as the incense, and pure as the most holy place. Among Thy ministering servants may he be ready as an agent of God, and faithful as a beloved son. And when his service is finished, may his memory be celebrated by love on the durable monuments of eternity; and his reward, in the silent, solemn joy of heaven, be sure from the hand of God, the Grand Master of us all.

A LEGEND.

They tell a story that one day Rabbi Judah and his brethren sat in the church on a fast day disputing about rest. One said it was to have sufficient wealth, yet without sin. The second said it was fame and to be praised of all men. The third said it was possession of power to rule the State. The fourth said it must be only in the old age of one who is rich, powerful, famous, and surrounded by children and children's children. The fifth said it were all in vain unless a man kept all the ritual of Moses. And Rabbi Judah, the venerable, the tallest of the brethren, said, "Ye have spoken wisely, but one thing more is necessary. He only can find rest who to all things addeth this—that he kept the traditions of the elders."

There sat a fair-haired boy playing with lilies in his lap, and hearing the talk, dropped them in astonishment from his hands and looked up—that boy of twelve—and said, "Nay, father, he only can find rest who loves his brother as himself—with his whole heart and soul. He is greater than fame, wealth and power; happier than a happy home without it; better than honoured age—he is a law to himself above all traditions."

We are glad to learn that Lord Leigh, P.G.M. for Warwickshire, has nearly recovered from his late severe accident.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

In England physical defects or deformities are no bar to the admission of candidates whose moral character is sound. All good men and true are justly regarded as fit material to be employed in the construction of a spiritual temple whose pillars are Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth. In the United States the strict letter of the ancient operative law is still enforced, to the exclusion of maimed candidates, however worthy. This is at variance with the principles of Freemasonry as a speculative institution, and ought to be modified or abolished.

"A Mason's Lodge is a Mason's Church," said the late Duke of Sussex, and all are free to enter therein who are known to be brethren, or upon whose reputation no serious stain of dishonour exists. The utmost caution should, however, be exercised in the examination of strangers, and the rules of the Grand Lodge as to production of certificate should be faithfully observed.

During the absence of a Master from the country, or during his illness or incapacity to attend, the S.W. rules the lodge, nor can meetings other than named in the bye-laws be called without his knowledge and consent. A P.M. must, however, occupy the chair and perform the work of the lodge, although it was formerly customary for Wardens to confer degrees, and the legality of their claim to do so is even now a moot point.

Past Masters of Scottish, Irish, or foreign lodges are ineligible as candidates for the chair of an English lodge until they have served as Warden for one year in the usual way. Regularly installed Masters under any jurisdiction are, however, permitted to assist at an English Board of L.M.'s. Scotch P.M.'s are inadmissible, as they know nothing of the secrets restricted to the chair.

Multum in Parvo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

The first Masonic periodical on record was published at Leipzig, on the 4th January, 1738. It was called "Der Freymaurer" (The Freemason), and existed about a year. Bro. Findel now edits "Die Bauhütte," at the same place.—L. W. R.

His Royal Highness Francis, Duke of Lorraine, afterwards Emperor of Germany, was initiated in the Grand Lodge of England, 14th May, 1731, and received the 2nd degree on the same night.—VIATOR.

The Mallet used by King Charles II. when he laid the foundation stone of St. Paul's Cathedral is now in the possession of the Lodge of Antiquity, No. 2, to which Sir Christopher Wren, the architect, then belonged. This curious relic was also used by the Earl of Zetland at a similar ceremony, in 1864, in connection with the New Buildings at Freemasons' Hall.—ANTIQUARIUS.

Red Cross of Rome and Constantine.—As it is correct that this Degree possesses records dating as far back as the same decade of the eighteenth century as the Masonic Templars do, why should not it receive as much support as the latter degree of Masonic Knighthood?—RES NON VERBA.

Ancient and Accepted Rite.—What is the earliest record known that refers to the veritable Rose Croix of Freemasonry; or, in fact, to any degree under the jurisdiction of the "Ancient and Accepted Rite?" We hear that the late S.G. Commander Dr. Leeson possesses a warrant derived from the Pretender of A.D. 1721, conferring authority to give the Rose Croix degree! Would the learned Mason, Dr. Leeson, kindly make this warrant public, so that its nature may be known? He would confer another benefit on the Craft by so doing, and few are better qualified to speak on the matter than he is. My impression is that no such warrant is in existence, but of course I am open to conviction.—ROSE CROIX.

Antiquity Lodge No. 1.—Cannot some qualified Brother in London favour us with reliable information relative to this lodge before the revival of A.D. 1717? Such matter is sadly wanted by intelligent Masons everywhere, and yet neither in "Preston's Illustrations" nor in any other work can we find any quotation from its ancient records. I feel persuaded that it requires but a respectful application to the members to secure much that would prove valuable to the Masonic historian. We hear also that at this time the lodge owns an ancient manuscript? Of what date is it? and of what nature is it?—questions, I know, easily put, but much wanted by Masonic students to be answered.—W. J. HUGHAN.

SPECIMENS FROM A MASONIC QUARRY.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 181 TRURO, Author of "History of Freemasonry in Cornwall," "Sparks from a Mason's Anvil," &c.; Masonic Correspondent of "The Voice of Freemasonry," for England; Corresponding Member of "German Masonic Union," &c.

SPECIMEN NO. 1.—OPERATIVE MASONIC LODGES.

The importance of the records of Operative Lodges anterior to the formation of Grand Lodges cannot be overestimated, seeing that from such minutes we learn the nature and objects of the fraternity from which the present Free and Accepted Masonic Body is derived.

Foremost among the operative lodges is the ancient "Mother Kilwinning" of Ayrshire, Scotland, which until recently possessed records as far back as the sixteenth century; and although, now, an accident has deprived its members of so precious a volume, they have still one, of a century later, of great interest, and invaluable as evidence of what Masonry consisted some two hundred and fifty years ago. Its history has been immortalized by the Masonic historian, Bro. Lyon, of Ayr; and so eagerly has the Craft desired authentic details of this famous and ancient parent of Masonry in Scotland that already the work has been translated into other tongues, for the benefit of Masonry universal; and not only so, but we are glad to state that Bro. Lyon himself is now engaged in preparing a second edition, which will soon be published and no doubt rapidly "bought up." That being the case, we shall leave Mother Kilwinning in able hands, and take upon ourself the pleasing duty of looking after lodges that have not had the powerful aid of such an accomplished historian.

In Scotland, the St. Andrew's Lodge, Banff, No. 52—although it is dated A.D. 1736 in the "Universal Masonic Calendar"—has minutes from A.D. 1703, before a Grand Lodge was formed anywhere. These records refer to older documents, which are now, alas, unknown, but evidently the lodge itself has existed for a very long period. Banff holds a peculiarly prominent position in Scotland, from the fact that the resident members of the Masonic body have been connected with the working of the Masonic Knights Templars and other degrees, including the Royal Arch and the Mark Master, for upwards of a century. Before A.D. 1720 only two degrees are ever mentioned, the Fellow Craft (the second) being questionable as to its being a degree after all. Of course the office of Master Mason was recognised, but never as a degree, before the influence of the Revivalists of A.D. 1717 was felt in the North. In the other lodge held in the town, called "St John's Operative," No. 92, warranted A.D. 1764, the Royal Arch has flourished since A.D. 1765, and it is believed to have been one of the earliest working chapters in the world, and certainly few, if any, possess minute books of the degree before it. We intend referring to this lodge again, but on returning to "St. Andrews" we find that it remained true to pure and unadulterated Craft Masonry until A.D. 1787. Not like "Mother Kilwinning" though, which from the earliest period to the present year has never given more than three degrees, including the choice of the Mark. Under the old system, before modern Freemasonry arose as a phoenix from its ashes, the distinction was always carefully drawn between "operative" and "geometrical" Masons. The latter consisted of gentlemen who had to pay some fifty per cent. more in dues, in consequence of not being operatives, or craftsmen. It is nonsense to talk of the Craft being only operative before A.D. 1717, and that none but bona fide workmen were admitted into its ranks! There is no record before the Revival, but what will prove the fact of the Masonic Craft being then, as now, speculative as well as operative.

We have (through the kindness of Bro. Stenhouse Bairnsfather, P.M., whose accuracy may be relied on) been favoured with a number of excerpts from the minutes of this ancient lodge. One of the earliest of these commences December 27, 1708, in which it is stated that—

"In presence of Alexr. Mill, Mr. for the ensuing year, and Alexr. Forsyth, Warden for the said year, Patric Lealye, John Anderson, Andrew Russell, James Bennet, Laclan Jemison, James Faith, and Alexr. Forsyth, junger, the foresaid number being Measons, heave resolved to pay in four sh. Scots each of them and the rest of the traid, to a box which is to be paid for the use, commencing from [part torn out] at the end of everie year, and the box delivered to Alexr. Forsyth, elder, with two pound fortein shil. Scots, and an bond for four pound forsd, and James Alexr. and John Murhid vests their yearlie contribution; and the meeting ordains al the members concerned to cess the meetings under the payment of four sh. Scots, and ordains the monie in the box ye bond to be lent out upon intrest from Candlmes next headvice."

According to usage, the senior Warden of the lodge was permitted to act as Master in the absence of the regular officer. It was resolved that—

"No Master of the Lodge of Banff shall employ a Cowan, unless he make it appear it was a case of necessity; otherwise he is liable to the cognizance of the next general meeting." (7th Jan. 1773.)

No Brother who was not raised to the degree of a Master Mason was allowed to "undertake or come on work" even so late as A.D. 1774, showing how curiously the operative was still blended with the modern system. But we must look up our notes again, and present a sketch of the "Operative Lodge," which has enjoyed the benefits of Masonry in a practical sense for more than one hundred years.

ODE TO THE SPIRIT OF FREEMASONRY.

By BRO. R. WENTWORTH LITTLE, P.M. & P.Z., 975.

I. STROPHE.

Like one who trembles in the breathless dark
Of midnight, overcome with solemn fears—
I gazed upon the wrecks of rolling years
With awe, till I beheld a wondrous Ark
Floating in peace o'er Life's tempestuous sea,
And guided by a Form whose glory shone
Through the surrounding gloom—"Come thou to me,"
The Spirit cried, "And stand before my throne,
And minister within my sanctuary—
Be thou a Priest of Light!" Then I arose
From bended knee, and sought the sacred shrine
Where truth abides in Strength, and Wisdom grows
In Beauty, like a flower in fields divine.

II. ANTISTROPHE.

O radiant Presence! fairer than the dawn—
To THEE I chant this feebly-uttered psalm,
Not vainly to thy courts have I withdrawn
Nor vainly sought to share thy holy calm.
If to thine altar I can only bring
One votive wreath, 'tis well—for hast thou not Limitless empire over mighty Thought,
And mightier Action? Thou dost strongly sway
Thy secret world, like that immortal King
Who rules the ceaseless course of night and day.
And though around me rise those motes of time,
The ghosts of hours with duties unfulfilled—
And though I tremble at the task sublime,
Thy temple in my heart I fain would build.

III. EPODE.

It is no dream—it cannot be a dream,
For high above the surge of Life we see
A home for all who worship the Supreme—
A haven which is called "Freemasonry!"
And still that mystic Voice cries, "Brethren, come to me!"

MASONIC ODE.

By BRO. ROB MORRIS, P.G.M., Kentucky.

AIR—"Auld Lang Syne."

One hour with you, one hour with you—
No doubt, nor care, nor strife—
Is worth a weary year of woe
In all that lightens life.
One hour with you, and you, and you,
Bright links in mystic chain—
Oh, may we oft these joys renew,
And often meet again.

Your eyes with love's own language free,
Your hand-grips strong and true,
Your voice, your heart do welcome me
To spend an hour with you.
One hour with you, &c.

I come when morning skies are bright
To work my Mason's due;
To labour is my chief delight,
And spend an hour with you.
One hour with you, &c.

I go when evening gilds the west,
I breathe the fond adieu,
And hope again, by fortune blest,
To spend an hour with you.
One hour with you, &c.

Western Freemason.

We understand that the Testimonial to the Grand Master will take a form which cannot fail to be acceptable to the Craft at large, his lordship having decided in favour of instituting "Zetland Annuities" for distinguished Masons, the power of nomination to be vested in the Grand Master for the time being. The details of the arrangement are as yet, however, not finally completed.

There are now 1255 Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England, in addition to which there are 370 R. A. Chapters attached to lodges. Templars' Encampments number 108; Mark Lodges, 101; Rose Croix Chapters, 29; and Red Cross Conclaves, 14.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

Terry was presented with a splendid P.Z.'s Jewel, and also a collar and silver gilt Jewel attached, as marks of the high approbation entertained of his efficient services as Z. Capital speeches were delivered by Comps. Brett, Buss and Little, P.Z.'s. Ough, Mann, Hosgood, Walters, visitors, as well as by Comps. Tanner, Price, and Dodd, for the officers. The work in this Chapter is rendered in a most superior manner, and the utmost harmony prevails between the members.

PROVINCIAL.

SCARBOROUGH.—Old Globe Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, No. 200.—A meeting of this chapter was held at the Masonic Hall, on the 3rd of March, when the following companions were present: Comp. J. W. Woodale, Z.; Comp. J. Fisher, P.Z.; Comp. E. H. Newton, P.Z.; Comp. J. F. Spurr, P.Z.; Comp. W. F. Rooke, H.; Comp. W. T. Farthing, J.; Comp. H. A. Williamson, E.; Comp. H. C. Martin, N.; Comp. W. Peacock, P.S.; Comp. R. H. Peacock, 1st A.S.; Comp. H. W. Garnett, 2nd A.S.; and Comps. Jackson, Walsham, Parker, Green, Fletcher, and Surtees. The chapter was opened at 7 p.m.; the minutes were read and confirmed. Comp. E. H. Newton, P.Z., assisted by the other P.Z.'s named, then installed the following companions as principals of the chapter:—W. F. Rooke, Z.; W. T. Farthing, H.; and H. A. Williamson, J.; after which the following were invested as officers: Comp. R. H. Peacock, E.; Comp. H. C. Martin, N.; Comp. S. H. Armitage, P.S.; Comp. J. Chapman, Treasurer; Comp. J. Verity, Janitor; and Comp. Fisher, P.Z., was proposed as a Joining Member, and Bro. H. Grover, for Exaltation.

KNIGHT TEMPLARS.

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER.—Jerusalem Encampment.—This Encampment, the oldest in Lancashire, (having been constituted by the Grand Lodge of York, Oct. 10th 1786,) held its usual quarterly meeting on Monday, the 8th March, when Sir Kt. Wm. Birch was installed Commander by the Deputy Provincial Grand Commander of Lancashire, Sir Kt. Wm. Henry Wright.

IPSWICH.—Royal Plantagenet Encampment.—A Prior of Malta was held by the members of this Conclave on Monday March 8th, 1869, when two Sir Kts. were admitted members of the Order, and Sir Kt. Henry Thomas, Grand Herald was installed E. Prior. The whole of the ceremony was performed in his usual impressive manner by Sir Kt. Sanderson, Past first Grand Expert, and D.P.G. Commander for Suffolk.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

METROPOLITAN.

Premier Conclave of England.—A quarterly assembly of this renowned Conclave was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, on the 1st inst. Twenty-three Knights of the Order were present, including the Lord Kenlis, G.S.; Col. Fras. Burdett, G.H.C.; E. Bushier, G.S.C.; R. W. Little, G.R.; J. G. Marsh, G.A.; T. Cubitt, G.H.; G. Powell, G.S.B.; T. Wescombe, G.S.; J. Trickett, V.E.; G. Kenning, A. J. Lewis, &c., and the Conclave was honoured by the presence of several distinguished visitors, viz.: Dr. J. D. Moore, Insp. Gen. N. Lanc.; E. W. Hutchinson, (of Guernsey), P.S., No. 7; F. Walters, P.S., No. 3; I. R. Still, S.B., No. 2; J. Read, H.P., No. 6; and I. Stevens, V.E. elect, No. 14. Bros. M. C. Meaby, G. E. Baker, and T. Luty, were installed as Knights of the Order, and Sir Kt. H. Child, Stevens and Luby were admitted to the rank of V.E.; T. Wescombe, was elected as M.P.S.; J. Trickett, V.E.; and J. Gilbert, Sentinel, after which the Conclave was closed, when the Knights adjourned to the banquet, over which his Lordship the G.S. presided, supported by all the Knights present. The progress of the Order was strongly evidenced by the fact that the representatives of eight Conclaves were present, and the noble chairman intimated his intention of proposing for installation in the "Premier," the Most Noble Bro. the Marquis of Downshire, who is the brother-in-law of Lord Kenlis. The musical arrangements both during the ceremonies and the banquet reflected great credit on Sir Kt. Read, to whom they were entrusted. A most agreeable evening was spent, and the noble lord left the chair about ten o'clock.

Roman Eagle Conclave, No. 6.—The first anniversary assembly of this Conclave was held at Anderson's Hotel, Fleet-street, on the 27th ult., and was attended by 26 members and 2 visitors. The proceedings of the evening were briefly as follows:—Bros. J. Thomas, P.M., P.Z., G.D.C. of G. Chapter; G. Adams, P.M.; Geo. Tyler; and J. J. Caney, were admitted into the Order. The undernamed are the new officers:—Sir Kt. H. C. Levander, M.A., M.P.S.; Dr. Woodman, V.E.; Dr. Harrison, S.G.; Rev. W. B. Church, J.G.; T. Read, H.P.; A. A. Pendlebury, R.; W. F. N. Quilty, P.S. Treas.; H. Allman, P.; H. Geddes, S.B.; S. Foxall, H.; W. Hurlstone, and H. Thompson, Stewards, J. Weaver, Org. Past S. Quilty was awarded a Jewel for his efficient services during the past year. A letter from Mrs. Bate, widow of Sir Kt. Dr. Bate, acknowledging a vote of condolence, was ordered to be entered on the minutes. A first-rate banquet succeeded the work in Conclave, and the evening was much enlivened by the talented musical performances of Sir Kts. Weaver and Read. The new song of the Order, "Let's rally round the Standard," written by Sir Kt. Little, G.R., was sung with great effect, and elicited much enthusiasm. This Conclave is believed to be the strongest in the Order, (except the "Premier," which has many country members), as it numbers some forty adherents.

Macdonald Conclave No. 14.—About the time our first number appears, Friday the 12th inst., this new Conclave will be formally opened at the Head Quarters of the 1st Surrey Rifle Volunteers, Brunswick-road, Camberwell; a large muster being expected. Major Irvine, of the corps is to be the first M.P.S. Bro. J. Stevens, P.M., P.Z., &c., the V.E. and Captains Wire and Irvine, Dr Cronin, and about seven other members of the corps are also founders, and we learn that a grand inauguration will take place subsequently at which Lord Kenlis and other prominent members of the Order will be present. Esto perpetua.

Plantagenet Preceptory of Instruction.—This preceptory, which was formed on the 11th October, 1865, was re-constructed on the 25th ult., at the Savage Club Room, Lyceum Tavern, Strand. There was a large muster of Knights Companions, including representatives from the six conclaves in Middlesex and Surrey, amongst whom we noticed R. Wentworth Little, President; Col. F. Burdett, W. F. N. Quilty, A. J. Lewis, J. G. Marsh, J. Brett, J. Stevens, T. J. Murray, G. Kenning, D. R. Still, J. Mayo, A. Perrot, J. Read, F. Walters, T. Smale, J. Coutts, Dr. C. H. Rogers, Harrison, C. Haigh, S. G. Foxall, C. A. Cottelbrune, J. McKiernan, &c. The ceremony of installation was ably rehearsed, after which the President delivered an Address respecting the order (which we hope to give in extenso in our next issue. Col. Burdett was elected president for the ensuing year; Quilty and Walters, V.P.'s; Little, Treasurer; and Marsh, Recorder. The preceptory was then closed.

McLeod Moors Conclave, No. 13.—This new Conclave was opened at St. John, N. B., by Sir Kt. R. Marshall, Inspector General for New Brunswick, on the 9th February, when the following brethren—all eminent Masons and Knights Templar—were admitted into the Red Cross Brotherhood, viz.: T. A. D. Foster, Rev. W. Donald, D.D.; R. W. Crookshank, J. C. Hathaway, D. R. Munro, C. Besant, G. F. Ring, C. U. Hanford, H. Duffell, H. A. Whitney, R. Shires, S. F. Matthews, E. Willis, W. J. Logan, W. C. Perley, T. A. Peters, and G. H. Whiting. Under Sir Kt. Marshall's careful rule, we anticipate a brilliant future for the Red Cross Order, in British North America, associated as it is now with the names of a revered Mason Col. McLeod Moore.

ADDRESS

Delivered by Sir Knight ROBERT WENTWORTH LITTLE, President, at the Plantagenet Preceptory of Instruction, on the 25th February, 1869.

WORTHY KNIGHTS AND COMPANIONS,

In compliance with the wishes of several members of the Order, this meeting has been convened for the purpose of reviving the Plantagenet Preceptory of Instruction; and the objects contemplated being, as stated in the circular, not only to rehearse our ceremonial, but to cultivate friendly feelings between each and all of us, and to disseminate information respecting the Order in general, I am sure that you will bear with me for a few moments in this attempt to review our present and past history, and to explain, however imperfectly, the principles of the Red Cross system as a chivalric institution in connexion with the Masonic Order.

Indubitable evidence exists that, before the large infusion of the speculative element in the beginning of the 18th century, Craft Masonry was mainly based upon Christian ideas. The prayers used by ancient craftsmen, as well as numerous allusions in the ritual itself, were essentially of a Christian character, and traces of this religious influence are even yet perceptible in its ceremonies.

From being an operative society, dealing chiefly with matter, the craft almost suddenly expanded into a gigantic organization appealing to the intellect; and a consequent revision of its rules, its rites, and its doctrines became an absolute necessity. Our forefathers, recognising the importance of the Order as a bond of brotherhood, and rising nobly above all sectarian ideas, accordingly threw open the portals of Freemasonry to men of every creed and every clime, to all, in a word, who worshipped the Great Architect of the Universe. Thenceforth was witnessed the sublime spectacle of Jew and Christian, Mahometan and Parsee, uniting together, irrespective of religious differences, laboring together for good and holy purposes, and each rivalling the other only in deeds of charity and fraternal affection. It is impossible to overrate the results which followed this great change in the theory and practice of the Craft, and the applause of mankind in general is due to those courageous men who, at a period when strife and bitterness prevailed between warring sects, were so far in advance of the spirit of their age, as to discard the intolerance which then separated man from his fellow-man. There can be no doubt that the grand symbolism couched in the working tools of operative Masonry contributed to establish the principles of the Order in the hearts of its votaries. A society which teaches that all men are born equal, which enjoins its members to meet upon the level and part upon the square, and which at the same time deprives no man of the respect due to his position, his talent, or his worth; such an association may justly be regarded as the nursery and home of free and generous opinions. For these reasons, Freemasonry is viewed with suspicion and hatred by the upholders of despotism and oppression, especially by the teachers of superstition, who would gladly destroy an institution founded upon brotherly love, relief and truth, and which boldly proclaims that all upright men are brethren. It is also to be observed that the universal character thus imparted to Freemasonry is a logical sequence to its traditions, in which we find the Jewish monarch and the Syrian king intimately allied in the endearing bonds of fraternity. But in awarding the highest meed of praise to the promoters of universality in the Craft, we must not overlook the fact, so interesting to every Masonic student, that a Christian element formerly existed in its precepts and ceremonies. The brethren who welcomed the Hebrew, and the follower of the Koran into the comprehensive fold of Freemasonry were themselves devoted adherents of the Christian faith. Hence, for the preservation of some beautiful legends and allegories formerly cherished as part of the Masonic system, they devised certain orders and degrees in which Masons holding a common faith might confer together upon the truths therein revealed.

This, I humbly conceive, was, if not the origin of our present associations of Christian Masons, at least the main cause of their amplification under the auspices of chivalric organizations; and if we can prove that such meetings have no tendency to engender antagonism to the great principles of the Craft, or to give offence to our brethren of whatever creed, I apprehend it will be conceded that we are justified in regarding these orders as developments of Freemasonry in a Christian sense, and as bearing a Christian interpretation. They are, in fact, the natural results of that universal expansion of Freemasonry; especially as we may fairly come to the conclusion that it was Christian Masons in the first instance who held out the right hand of fellowship to men of all religions, and made them "free" of their "homes" or "lodges," reserving only a corner of the building as their own peculiar "sanctum." Or to adopt a loftier similitude, let us compare Freemasonry to a vast upathric temple, canopied by the heavens, into which all good and true men may enter and look up to the throne of their Creator and God. The Chivalric or Christian Orders are the side chambers of this glorious edifice—the shrines to which we retire for special communion with our fellow worshippers. It is, however, wholly erroneous to infer that our veneration for the great temple itself is thereby weakened, or our belief in the Catholicity of Freemasonry impaired. On the contrary, it will be found that the earnest religionist is often the most zealous assistant in the work of beautifying and adorning the temple. I will not attempt to deny that designing men may have abused the privileges of Freemasonry by inventing pseudo Masonic degrees, which reflected disgrace upon Christianity by preaching a spirit of intolerance, and fulminating anathemas on all who were outside the narrow boundaries of their belief. But that such an objection can be sustained against degrees originating in England amongst the founders of modern Freemasonry, and now practised by English Masons, I cannot for a moment believe. We know that it is untrue in respect to the Order of the Red Cross, and I am equally convinced of its falsehood as regards the Knights Templar. Indeed, although both these orders are technically unrecognized by the Grand Lodge of England, and cannot be acknowledged as part of ancient Freemasonry, they may properly be considered as developments of similar phases of thought, and as correlative to the Craft in their privileges, their organization, and their history.

It is worthy of note that the right of Masons or Lodges to hold meetings in the Orders of Chivalry was inserted in the Act of Union between our two English Grand Lodges in 1818; this permission is, of course, confined to the orders then existing, and may be considered not only as a graceful compliment paid by the high contracting parties, but as an assurance that in the ceremonies of those chivalric institutions the "United Grand Lodge" was unable to perceive any grounds for censure or denunciation.

I may now glance at another objection which I have heard urged against knightly orders in general, and that has reference to the high-sounding titles appropriated to the officers and members. This objection is at first sight a plausible one, but is, nevertheless, susceptible of explanation. In the Red Cross Order we have three grades, in which the designations of "Knight," "Priest," and "Prince" are respectively applied to the several members. It is well known that the ceremony of installing a knight in the mediæval era was of a most solemn religious character, full of mystic symbolism, and highly calculated to impress the candidate with sentiments of honor and virtue. His sword represented at once—fortitude, justice, and mercy, and indicated the spiritual warfare with sin in which he was expected to engage. His lance was an emblem of truth—because truth, like the lance, knows no obliquity. The coat of mail was the symbol of a fortress erected against vice; and the shield reminded him that a true knight was considered as a shield interposed between the prince and the people to preserve the rights of both, and secure the blessings of peace. In the Priestly Order we are taught that the most acceptable incense to place upon the altar of the Deity is that true piety and love which should actuate our conduct through life; and when we arrive at the summit of our system, and have become both "Kings and Priests," in a spiritual sense, humility—that sacred virtue—is forcibly impressed upon our minds. I cannot, of course, enter into details upon this subject, but it is evident that these titles have a great significance and were not idly assumed for display and ostentation. A similar objection might indeed be levelled against the Royal Arch degree as, in Ireland, the chief officer is styled "King," and in other countries he, at least, represents the monarchical position.

But, however, interesting it may be to pursue these investigations, time will not warrant me in doing so to-night. I must trust to your kindness to excuse the desultory nature of these remarks, but if I have succeeded in throwing even a faint glimmer upon the relations which we bear, as members of this order to the great Masonic family, if I have been successful in removing even one doubt as to the legality of our status, or the soundness of our principles, I shall esteem myself peculiarly fortunate. It is due to ourselves both as Masons, and Christians, to learn as much as possible of the views of those who preceded us in these chivalric degrees, in order that we may be able to defend our organization as a special body of Freemasons; and I am satisfied from what I know already, that we shall arise from the study, much instructed and edified. It will illumine many a dark page in the past history of Freemasonry itself, and will evince to the enquirer the real value of such a Christian Order, not only as a memorial of the early trials of our faith, or of its subsequent triumph and establishment, but as a constant stimulus to our drooping energies, to persevere in the practice of truth and virtue, and thus attain, in the mysterious Hereafter to the full perfection of wisdom in the mansions of everlasting light.

BRO. JAMES BRETT, P.M., P.Z., 177, 975, &c.
An influential committee of brethren has been formed for the purpose of presenting this esteemed and able craftsman with a testimonial in recognition of his services to Freemasonry generally. The Treasurer is Bro. H. G. Buss, P.M. and P.Z., 127, Offord Road, N.; and the Secretary, Bro. R. Wentworth Little, P.M. and P.Z., 7, Gilbert Road, Kennington, S.E., by whom subscriptions will be received. All sums received will be acknowledged in THE FREEMASON.

MURDEROUS ATTACK ON A COLONIAL UNDER-SECRETARY BY AN EX-POLICE MAGISTRATE.—At the Brisbane central police-court, on the 22nd of December, Mr. Frank Sidney Bowerman, an ex-police magistrate, was charged with having, on the 24th November, attempted to murder Mr. Arthur Wilcox Manning, Under-Colonial Secretary. It appears that the accused went into Mr. Manning's offices, and struck the unfortunate gentleman upon the head with a tomahawk. The medical testimony proved that prosecutor's life had been in very great danger. Prisoner, who reserved his defence, was committed to take his trial.—[Bro. Manning is the Deputy District Grand Master of Freemasonry in Queensland.—Ed. F.]

PREPARATION OF

GLYCERINE AND SOAP POWDER

IS a well-known standard article, always to be depended upon for extra strength and genuine sterling quality. It is really a compound of Soap Making Materials, from which good strong Washing Soap can be made, possessing all the emollient properties of "GLYCERINE," and is a distinct article from the ordinary Washing and Soap Powders (so called).

THE FAMILY WASH may, by judicious management, be greatly expedited, to the delight of the household by using this preparation of GLYCERINE AND SOAP POWDER, which supersedes soap and soda, washes with or without soap, lathers freely in hot or cold water, instantly eradicates dirt and grease, and is perfectly harmless to the finest fabric.

WHAT IS FREEMASONRY?

IT is said that a simple Athenian of old, desiring to sell his mansion, took out a brick from the wall and produced it at the public place of auction as a specimen of the structure. In a somewhat similar manner we find Freemasonry estimated and judged by its enemies, and even by some of its friends, because they look at a part instead of the great harmonious whole. For instance, let us ask our Brother “Jovial” the question at the head of this article, and the chances are his reply will be—“Freemasonry? oh, an excellent institution—full of social fellows—meetings very pleasant,” and so on. Another will tell us of its benevolent deeds, while others descant upon its antiquity, its universality, its mysteries, or its privileges.

Antiquarians carry us back from the many-sided Freemasonry of the present day to the mythological scenas of Egypt or Greece, and exultingly exclaim, “Eureka, we have found the dawning rays of Masonic light.” Philosophers call to our aid Platonic theories and Pythagorean symbols; moralists pour upon us the wealth of wisdom found in rarest tomes; and mystics overwhelm us with rhapsodies of the Unknown and the Impossible.

Amid all these diverse and perplexing speculations we halt amazed—forgetting for the moment that each interpreter, like the ancient Athenian, is looking only at a detached portion of the building. Freemasonry is unquestionably a system of natural theology and morality, but, viewed simply as such, its mission on earth would be necessarily superseded by the authoritative teachers of creeds. Its chief, and, we may say, its most comprehensive doctrine is religious tolerance; it proclaims the right of every creature to worship his Creator according to the dictates of his own conscience, at the same time, however, enjoining the practice of every virtue. Upon its universality depends, in a great measure, its power of effecting good, and this leads us naturally to its benevolent aspect, and the utility of its mystic signs and tokens. One of the most sublime utterances of learned men predicts the establishment of an universal language, when the confusion of Babel shall be forgotten in the triumph of a common tongue. At present Freemasonry is the only medium by which men of different nations, unacquainted with each other's speech, can communicate their mutual wants or exchange fraternal greetings. The shipwrecked mariner, the wounded warrior, nay, even the captive at an Indian stake, have alike experienced clemency and compassion through the influence of the mystic bond; and this alone should endear the Masonic Society to every rational thinker.

We may also refer to the symbolism of the Craft as a singularly beautiful study for intellectual men. The highest and noblest precepts are inculcated by most appropriate emblems, some of which have passed out of the peculiar traditions of Freemasonry into current literature. For instance, “To act upon the square” is universally recognized as a synonym to walking uprightly and dealing with our fellow men upon the broad principles of honor and justice. But in thus briefly adverting to the more scientific and useful aspects in which Freemasonry presents itself to a thoughtful mind, we must not ignore the fact that our Brother “Jovial” also has some truth on his side. It may be safely alleged that there is no society in the world where order and regularity so much prevail at festive meetings, as at the assemblies of the Craft. This is due to the excellent laws and discipline handed down from our forefathers; and as long as those regulations are observed, we can see no objection to cementing the pleasing bonds of friendship by social intercourse and enjoyment.

ZETLAND COMMEMORATION FUND.

The following is the text of the circular issued by the sub-committee of the Zetland Commemoration Fund, the substance of which was given in our last issue:—

Freemasons' Hall, London, W.C.,
16th March, 1869.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,

Many enquiries having been made as to the destination of this Fund, we have the pleasure to inform you that the M.W. the Grand Master (having consulted the General Committee) has been pleased to state that he is willing to accept the Fund for the following purpose, viz.:

“To invest it in the name of Trustees, and devote the interest to the relief of distinguished brethren who may become distressed, their widows, or relations depending on them. The disposal of it to rest with Lord Zetland for his life; and, after him, with the Grand Master for the time being. The Grand Master will fix hereafter such regulations as he may think proper for the administration of the Fund.”

We have good reason to hope that this will meet with general approbation. We request that you will communicate it to the members of your Lodge or Chapter; and if their subscriptions have not been already sent in, we shall be glad if you will remit them without delay.

We remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

W. J. SIMPSON

THE INAUGURATION FESTIVAL AT FREEMASONS' HALL.

The first meeting of the Board of Stewards was held at Freemasons' Hall, on the 12th, and was very numerously attended, about 70 brethren being present. The V.W., Brother Æneas J. McIntyre, Grand Registrar, occupied the chair, and was elected President of the Board. Bro. T. Fenn, A.G.D.C., was chosen as Treasurer; Bro. J. Hervey, G. Secretary, Hon. Secretary; and Bro. H. G. Buss, Hon. Assistant Secretary.

A sub-committee, composed of 23 brethren, was then nominated to carry out the details in connection with the Festival, and we learn that the price of the banquet tickets is to be a guinea.

There will doubtless be a very large muster of the Craft at this Festival, and we heartily congratulate the Building Committee, and especially their distinguished chairman, Bro. Havers, upon the approaching termination of those arduous and protracted labors, which the highest and most disinterested zeal for Freemasonry could alone have induced them to undertake.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

DEPTFORD.—Lodge of Justice, No. 147.—This old lodge met on Wednesday, March 10th, at the White Swan Tavern, 217, High-street, Deptford. Bro. R. G. Batt, M.M., presided. He raised Bros. Speight and Courteney, and initiated Mr. Henry Bunning. All the work was well done. Bro. G. Bolton, P.M., as arranged, was appointed the Steward to represent the lodge at the Inauguration Festival. Present besides those named, Bros. J. Percival, S.W.; J. Whiffen, J.W.; J. Lightfoot, P.M.; Trea.; H. Sadler, S.D.; C. G. Dilley, D.C.; J. Patte, I.P.M.; G. Bolton, P.M.; J. Cavell, P.M.; G. Chapman, P.M.; J. L. Winn, P.M.; Tyler; N. Wingfield, P.M.; W. Ward, J. Ponder, W. Courteney, G. Gilbert, B. Belfour, S. R. Speight, G. T. Brown, G. Waterman, F. Golding, J. Roper, W. Scott, J. W. Taylor, S. Jupp, B. Coltar, J. Miles, H. Bunning, and others; visitors, Bros. J. W. T. Barrett, J.W., 871; R. E. Turner, 871; W. G. Hill, 1155, &c.

Domestic Lodge, No. 177.—A meeting of this numerous lodge was held at Anderton's Hotel on the 12th inst. The Brethren having assembled, the lodge was opened in due form by Bro. Tanner, the W.M., assisted by J. R. Foulger, S.W.; T. Walford, J.W., and the rest of his officers. The lodge was then opened to the 2nd degree, and Bro. Tompkins, Blount, and Warren having given proofs of their proficiency in this degree retired. These Brethren being admitted, were then raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The lodge was then resumed in the first degree, and the minutes of the last meeting were then read and confirmed. Bros. Wright, Lewis, and Upham answering the usual questions in this degree retired. The lodge was then opened in the second degree, and these Brethren passed to the degree of F.C. The lodge having been resumed in first degree, and two gentlemen having been already approved of, were then regularly initiated into Ancient Freemasonry. In accordance with a notice of motion by Bro. Brett, P.M., altering the installation meeting from December to January, the same having been put to the lodge, was carried in due form. Bro. Brett informed the Brethren the M.W.G.M., Earl Zetland, had honoured this lodge, by selecting Bro. J. Smith, P.M., P.G.P., as one of the stewards for the inauguration festival. This announcement gave the greatest satisfaction to all the Brethren. A vote was then carried, that the expenses of Bro. J. Smith attending such stewardship, should be defrayed out of the funds of the lodge. A motion was then brought before the lodge that a summer banquet be held on the third Thursday in the month of July now next ensuing at the Crystal Palace, which motion was also carried. A Brother then moved that ladies should be permitted to attend such banquet, and the feelings of the lodge being strongly in favour of such a proposition, the same was agreed to unanimously. There being no other business, the lodge was then closed in due form with solemn prayer, and the Brethren adjourned to an excellent banquet, provided by Bros. F. and W. Clemo. The Brethren of this lodge have cause to be proud of the number of distinguished P.M.'s and members of the lodge who were present, and on the breasts of each, with one exception, was that mark of merit and esteem, the P.M.'s jewel, so highly prized amongst the members of the fraternity at large. Conspicuous by the absence of thereward of merit was the breast of the I.P.M. clearly, shewing that all preferment among Masons is grounded upon real worth and personal merit only. The members of this lodge may congratulate themselves upon being presided over by so able a representative of the K.S. chair, whose study is to promote the harmony of his lodge and support our noble charities. Some excellent harmony having been rendered by several of the Brethren, an evening well spent was brought to a happy and fraternal close.

St. Mark's Lodge, No. 857.—The meeting of the above lodge was held on Tuesday, 16th March, at the Horns, Kennington, there being present Bros. Howell, W.M., B.E.G.L.; Anderson, P.M., as S.W.; Geo. Thick, J.N.C.L.R.; Harrison, C.M., Treas.; Hambly, J.D.; Bragg, J.D.; Doggoes, I.G.; H. F. Frances, Secy.; Gilbert, Morley, and other brethren. Visitors, Bro. Oven, P.P.G.D.; Sands and Lawson, of No. 4; and several others. The principal business of the evening was the installation of Bro. Frances as W.M. This ceremony was ably performed by the outgoing Master, Bro. Howell. Bro. Frances then appointed Bro. Thick, S.W.; Hambly, J.W.; Goss, S.D.; Bragg, J.D.; Sands, I.G. The W.M. then presented in the name of the lodge a P.M. jewel to the eminent P.M. remarking that it had been well deserved, and he was sure Bro. Howell, had the good wishes of every member of the lodge. The jewel, one of excellent character and elegant design, was made by Bro. Kenning and greatly admired by the brethren. The lodge was then closed.

Whittington Lodge No. 862.—The last meeting of this lodge for the season was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on the 15th inst. The W.M. Bro. D. J. Davis opened the lodge, assisted by Bros. Weaver, S.W.; S. S. Davis, J.W.; Thompson, P.M., Treas.; Little, P.M., Sec.; Brett, Hurlstone and Quilty, P.M.'s, Salisbury, S.D., Jones, I. G., Bergmann, Payne, Walker, Kern, Stone, Stevens, Dix, Taylor, Voigt, Schnegelsberg, Haley, Tunks, W. F. Smith, &c., and several visitors. Bro. Voigt, was passed to the second degree, and Bro. Kern raised to that of M.M., a donation of Ten guineas was voted from the General Lodge Fund to the Lodge Benevolent Fund, after which the proceedings were brought to a close, and the brethren adjourned to a superb banquet personally supervised by Bro. G. Smith the active and urbane manager, and the "Whittingtonians" as usual, enjoyed a very pleasant evening in the interchange of fraternal sentiments and true sociality.

PROVINCIAL.

CARDIFF.—Glenmorgan Lodge, No. 36.—An ordinary monthly meeting of this lodge was held in the lodge room on Monday evening last week, under the presidency of Bro. W. M. Samuel Nash. A deputation attended from the Provincial Grand Lodge to urge the claims of the Boys' School, a special effort being made this year to clear off the outstanding liability of £10,000 upon the building. Upwards of £23 was realized, which consisted of a small donation from the funds of the lodge, supplemented by private subscriptions of the members. The deputation was invited by the lodge to a supper, but was unable to attend from want of time, and a glass of wine in a room adjoining the lodge was obliged to be substituted.

DURHAM.—Tees Lodge No. 509.—A lodge of emergency was held at Mason's Court, Stockton-on-Tees, on Monday, the 15th inst., present, Bros. Ralph Graham, W.M.; Smith, P.M.; Geo. Watson, I.P.M.; Emra Holms, I.P.M., 531; M. Cadle, P.M., Acty., I.G.; Hart, Secy.; G. Janson, S.W.; Watson, J.W.; Wrightson, J.D.; E. Alexander, Secy., 531, &c. The lodge having been opened with solemn prayer, and raised to the second degree. Bro. Arthur Head was examined and entrusted, and having retired for preparation the lodge was opened in the third degree, and on his re-admission Bro. Head was raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason, Bro. Smith performing the ceremony admirably. The lodge was then closed down to the first degree, when Bros. Joshua Byers and Wood, underwent the usual catechetical examination, which proving satisfactory, they were entrusted and retired for preparation, and on their return into the lodge which had been opened in the second degree they were passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. There being no more business before the lodge, it was closed in autient form and with solemn prayer. We were much pleased with the working of the lodge, which is composed of members with whom it is at once a pleasure and a privilege to meet, we wish as much could be said of every lodge in the province.

ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH.—Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 779.—An emergency meeting of this lodge was held at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 8th inst., for the initiation of the Right Hon. Sewall's Edward Shirley, tenth Earl Ferrers, and other business. The event possessed additional interest from the fact that the noble candidate's father, the late Earl, took an active part ten years ago in establishing the lodge (named, in part, after him), and was nominated in the warrant as the first W.M., but he unfortunately died before the lodge was consecrated. The present youthful Earl (who only attained his majority last year), having decided, like his predecessors for several generations, to join the Craft, selected this lodge, from its associations with his father, in which to see the light of Masonry. The Dep. Pro. G. Master (who had been associated with the late Earl and other brethren in establishing the lodge), paid an official visit on the occasion, accompanied by several P.G. officers, and was received with the usual honours. The lodge having been opened by the W.M. (the Rev. S. Pyemont, D.D., P.G.S.W.), and some preliminary business transacted, Lord Ferrers, who had been balloted for at the last regular lodge, was introduced, and the ceremony of initiation was conducted by the W.M. up to investment of the candidate with the Masonic badge. The chair was then taken by the D.P.G.M., who delivered the charge to the novitiate, the explanation of the working tools, and, subsequently, the lecture on the tracing-board. He then requested the W.M. to resume his position, who completed the ceremony by delivering the final charge. The lodge having been closed, the brethren adjourned to the Queen's Head Hotel, where an elegant banquet was served in Bro. Love's well-known excellent style. The W.M. was supported on the right by the Dep. Pro. G. Master, and on the left by the Earl Ferrers. After the cloth was drawn, the usual loyal and masonic toasts were duly honoured, including that of the youthful Earl, who, in reply, expressed the pleasure he felt in being initiated into Masonry in the lodge which his father had assisted in founding, and he hoped that he might prove himself a worthy Brother of the Order. Among the brethren present on the occasion were, Bros. W. Kelly, D.P.G.M.; Rev. S. Pyemont, D.D., W.M. and P.G.S.W.; Rev. Jno. Denton, M.A., P.M., Secy., and P.P.G.S.W.; H. E. Smith, J.P., P.M., and P.P.J.G.W. (as J.D.); S. Love, P.M. and Treas., and P.P.G.D.; G. F. Brown, P.M. and P.P.J.G.W.; E. F. Mammatt, S.W., and P.G., Reg.; E. Ison, J.W.; J. H. Garner, S.D.; H. Blood, J.G.; W. Canner, Taylor; and other members of the lodge. Visitors Bros. F. Goodyer, P.M., No. 523, and P.P.G., Secy., and P.P.G.S.W.; W. Weare, P.M., No. 279, and P.P.G.D.; A. M. Duff, W.M., No. 523, and P.G.J.D.; W. S. Bethrey, No. 523, and P.P.G., Org.; Rev. Francis Stewart, Apollo University Lodge, Oxford; Albert O. Worthington, J.W., Royal Sussex Lodge, No. 353; the W.M., (Bro. Major); W. J. Gothard, P.M., Bellamy, S.W.; and John Upton, of the Abbey Lodge, No. 624, Burton-on-Trent; F. J. Baldock, No. 731, Arboretum Lodge, Derby; and others. From the apparently amiable disposition, and the modest, pleasing manners of Lord Ferrers, he will probably ere long become very popular in the province.

WHITEHAVEN.—Lewis Lodge, No. 872.—The usual monthly meeting of this lodge was held in the lodge rooms, College-street, Whitehaven, on Monday the 15th inst., present the W.M., Bro. Spittal, in the chair. Bros. Barr, P.M.; Mortan, P.P.M.; J. McKelvie, W.M., of lodge 119; Secty. Bro. Hughes; Bro. Fearson, S.W.; Bro. Foster, J.W.; Bro. Ellis, S.D.; Bro. Gill, I.G. The lodge being opened the minutes of the proceeding meeting were confirmed. Bros. Mills, Gooding, J. Standwin were raised to the degree of Master Masons. The lodge was then adjourned to the following Monday, March 22nd, to complete the work laid out, which was too great to be completed within a reasonable hour on the 15th. The lodge was closed according to ancient usage. The Brethren, who were numerous, retired to the refreshment room and concluded the evening in a truly masonic style. The entertainment was enlivened by numerous songs, which were well sung, and great credit is due to the performers.

ABINGDON.—Abbey Lodge, No. 945.—On Thursday, March 11th, the above lodge held its monthly meeting. Present: Bros. John T. Morland, W.M.; Edward Morland, J.W.; W. Hedges, S.W.; H. D'Almaine, P.M., Sec., and other brethren. Bro. Walter Ballard was passed to the second degree, and Bro. J. H. Clarke raised to sublime degree. The election for a W.M. for the ensuing year was declared for Bro. John Blandy Jenkins, P.P.G.J.W., Berks and Bucks; for Treasurer, Bro. Richard Badcock. The annual meeting was fixed to take place on April 30th. The W.M. informed the brethren that he had been present at the Festival of the Boys' School, and had great pleasure in stating that the amount on his subscription list was £46.

SANDWICH.—Cinque Ports Lodge, No. 1206.—The installation of the W.M. of this lodge took place at the King's Arms Hotel, Sandwich, on Tuesday week, at half-past four o'clock. The Brethren having assembled, the lodge was formally opened, and the ceremony of installation performed by Bro. Hayward, of Margate, P.P.G.D., with his usual ability. The W.M., Bro. Mate, then appointed for the ensuing year, as his officers, Bros. J. N. Mourilyan, S.W.; W. Gardner, J.W.—Osbaldiston, S.D.; W. Woodruff, J.D.; Captain Gillow, Secy.; C. Leberman, Treas.; S. Prentice; J. G. Grey, J. and R. Harrison, and W. Denne, Stewards. At the conclusion of the proceedings the lodge closed, and the Brethren adjourned to the Bell Inn, where a banquet was prepared by Mr. Sparks, in his usual superb style. There were present, besides those named above, Bros. H. Boys, P.P.D.G.M.; W. French, P.P.S.D.; and several other past and present P.G. officers, also Bros. T. E. Mason, W.M., 738; H. Boys, W.M., Margate; T. U. Usher, W.M., 1096; Past Masters Cavell, Harding, and Bird, 784. In the course of the evening, the Worshipful Master presented Bro. T. F. Hulke, P.S.G.W., Kent, with a handsome P.M. jewel, in the name of the brethren of the Cinque Ports Lodge, in recognition of his valuable services as Master during the past year. Three professional brethren from London enlivened the evening by their presence and singing some excellent songs, duets, and glees.

PATRICKROFT.—Bridgewater Lodge, No. 1213.—The annual meeting of this flourishing lodge was held on Thursday, March 11th, at the Bridgewater Hotel, at five o'clock. The W.M. Bro. James Parr, junr., was supported on the occasion by Bros. Stephen Bellott, W. Bowden, C. H. Preston, N. H.

Hacking, John Parr, junr., F. W. N. Johnson, W. Dibbs, Jno. Taylor, J. B. Cavanah, Jno. J. Walwell, C. Molley, P. G. Marnick, &c., visitors:—Bros. John Bowes, P.M., P.Z., P. Prov., G. Reg., C and W.: D. W. Finney, W.M., 148, Cooper, W.M., 484, Collard, W.M., 1134, Nathan, P.M., 204, Thompson, S.W. 1134, Beswick, Barratt, and Duneville. The lodge was opened in due form when the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. The chair of K.S. was now assumed, at the invitation of the W.M., by Bro. John Bowes, P.M., &c., as Installing Master, when the lodge was opened in the second degree and Bro. James Parr, who had been re-elected W.M. was presented by Bro. D. W. Finney for the benefit of installation. The first part of the ceremony being completed, the lodge was opened in the third degree and subsequently a board of Installed Masters was formed and Bro. Parr placed in the chair of K.S., according to ancient custom. The M.M.'s F.A.'s and E.A.P.'s having been admitted, the usual proclamations made, and a salutation offered, the W.M. proceeded to appoint and invest his officers for the ensuing year viz:—Bros S. Bellott, S.W.; W. Bowden, J.W.; Rev. T. S. Beddoes, Chaplain; Preston, Treas.; Hacking, Sec.; John Parr and Johnson, Deacons; W. Dibbs, J.G.; John Taylor and J. B. Cavanah, Stewards, the whole of the addresses to the officers were delivered by the W.M. The lodge was duly closed and the brethren adjourned to the banqueting room. After the cloth was withdrawn the following toasts were duly proposed and responded to:—The Queen, by the W.M.; the Prince and Princess of Wales and the rest of the Royal Family, by the W.M.; the M.W., the G.M., the R.W., the D.G.M., and the Grand Lodge of England, by the W.M.; the R.W., the Prov. G.M.; and the G.L. of the Province, responded to by Bro. Finney; the Prov. G. Lodges of the neighbouring Provinces, responded to by Bro. Collard; the Installing Master, responded to by Bro. Bowes; the W.M., proposed by Bro. Cooper and duly responded to by the W.M.; the Warders and Officers of No. 1213, responded to by Bro. Bowden, junr.; the Visitors, responded to by Bro. Cooper; the Musical Brethren; the Ladies proposed by the W.M., responded to by Bro. Hacking; The Tyler's Toast. We must not close the report of this agreeable meeting without recording the obligations of the lodge to the musical brethren, who were under the direction of Bro. Beswick, organist of St. Ann's, Manchester.

SCARBOROUGH.—Denison Lodge, No. 1248.—This new and select lodge met at the lodge rooms, Grand Hotel, Scarborough, on the 11th March, when there were present:—Bros. J. O. Surtees, W.M.; H. A. Williamson, P.M., W.O., S.W.; J. Groves, J.W.; J. Donner, Secy.; J. E. Green, S.D.; H. W. Garnett, J.D.; H. C. Martin, P.M., I.G.; J. Verity, Tyler; Bros. Kitchen, Knight, Jarvis, Fricour, Delamere, Symonds, 200; R. H. Peacock, S.W., 200; B. B. Jackson, 643; Evans, 139, and Walshaw. The lodge was opened, at 7 p.m., and the minutes read and confirmed. Bro. the Hon. P. Stanhope was ballotted for and elected a joining member; Mr. Thorpe was ballotted for and elected, and, with Mr. Mason (elected last meeting), proposed, admitted, and initiated in a very able manner by the W.M. Bros. Knight, Jarvis, and Fricour passed an examination in the first degree, and retired. The lodge was opened in the second degree, when the above-named three brethren were re-admitted, and passed to the second degree by the W.M. The working of the lodge was all that could be desired, and no doubt it will in a very short time be one of the best in the province. The lodge was closed to the first degree, when one gentleman was proposed for initiation, two brethren for joining members; some other business in reference to by-laws, &c., was discussed, and the lodge was closed in harmony at 9 p.m.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN.—Lodge No. 666.—The members of this lodge dined together on Thursday evening last week, in the Antient Concert-room, Great Brunswick-street, on the occasion of the installation of officers. Covers were laid for sixty. There were a large number of visiting brethren present. The room was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and when brilliantly lit up presented a very animated appearance. The W.M. presided, and was ably supported by his officers. The dinner was of a most substantial character, and included every delicacy of the season, reflecting much credit on the caterer, Mr. Meighan, of Cecilia-street. The wines, which were of the choicest vintages, were supplied by Messrs. Fawcett and Co., of Henry-street. When the cloth had been removed, the W.M. proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts in most happy and felicitous language, which were responded to with enthusiasm. A brother gave several recitations, which called forth the plaudits of all present. Brother O'Donohoe sang during the evening, and accompanied many of the brethren in admirable style. Although this lodge is of comparatively recent formation, the rapid strides it has made is highly creditable to its members and honorary secretary, and its numbers are fast increasing. Its working is such as would do honor to older and more pretentious lodges. The evening was spent in a most agreeable manner, and the brethren separated in "peace, love, and harmony."

THE ROYAL ARCH.

PROVINCIAL.

WARRINGTON.—The Chapter of Elias Ashmole, No. 148.—The annual convocation of this chapter was held at the Chapter Rooms, Sankey Street, on Monday March 9th, at three o'clock. The chapter was duly opened by Comps. John Bowes, M.E.Z.; Kerne, A. H.; Robt. Stevenson, J. When the rest of the Comps., about twenty, were admitted and the minutes read and confirmed. At the request of the M.E.Z., Comp. Kerne as Installing Principal, the following Comps. were duly installed and invested, viz:—Comps. John Bowes, as M.E.Z.; Robt. Stevenson, H.; D. W. Finney, J.; W. Mossop, E.; H. Syred, N.; W. Richardson, P.S.; Jas Johnstone, Janitor. There being no further business the chapter was closed with the usual solemnities and the Comps. adjourned to the Lion Hotel for tea.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

KNIGHT TEMPLARS.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—Jacques de Molay Encampment.—A Conclave was held on the 12th inst., when Sir Knight Captain Thomas Berry, was installed Eminent Commander, by the Very Eminent Deputy Provincial Grand Commander of Lancashire, Sir Knt. William Henry Wright.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

METROPOLITAN.

Macdonald Conclave, No. 14.—In pursuance of a circular issued by the principal officers and members of the Macdonald Lodge, No. 1216, expressing their intention to found, under the authority of the Grand Council of the Order of Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, a new Conclave of Knights Companions of that Order, an assembly was held at the lodgerooms, at the Head Quarters of the 1st Surrey Rifle Volunteers, Camberwell, on Friday, the 12th inst. Amongst those present were Sir Knts. Colonel Francis Burdett, G.H.C., P.S.G.W. of England, Representative from the Grand Lodge of Ireland; R. W. Little, G. Recorder; H. C. Levander, M.A., M.P.S., No. 6, G.A. Treas.; W. F. N. Quilty, P.S., No. 6; G. Kenning, P.S., No. 1; A. J. Lewis, P.S., No. 1; F. Walters, P.S., No. 3; J. Mayo, V.E., No. 2; H. Child, jun., V.E., No. 1; James Stevens, V.E., M.P.S., designate No. 14; J. J. Caney, No. 6; &c. Of others invited, letters of regret for non-attendance were received from Sir Knights E. P. Roper-Curzon, John Thomas, No. 6, J. S. Charlton, James Brett, John Read, H.P., No. 6, George Powell, G.S.B., &c. Sir Knight R. Wentworth Little, Grand Recorder, having taken the regal chair—Sir Knight H. C. Levander officiating as V.E.—the Conclave was duly opened, and Sir Knight James Stevens, V.E., the Senior Warden of the Macdonald Lodge, No. 1216, was installed by the Grand Recorder as M.P.S. of the new Conclave, and saluted according to ancient and solemn form. The following brethren of the Macdonald Lodge were then admitted into the Order, viz., Bros. Alexander Lodwick Irvine, Major of the 1st Surrey Rifle Volunteer Corps, P.M., and P.Z., W.M., No. 1216; Polydore De Keyser, J.W., No. 1216; Capt. Travers B. Wire, W.M., No. 171, Org. 1216; Capt. T. G. Irvine, No. 1216; Dr. Eugene Cronin, Treas. No. 1216; J. H. Hastie, Henry Hammond, M. S. Larham, and Arthur Kethro, all of No. 1216; and W. Grant as Sentinel. The Conclave was then called off for refreshment, during which period the thanks of the new Conclave were tendered to the Sir Knights who had rendered service by their attendance; the M.P.S., Sir Knight Stevens taking occasion to comment upon the extreme readiness with which the Inspector-General for Surrey, Col. Francis Burdett, G.H.C., and Grand Recorder R. W. Little, had replied to the calls made upon them for assistance. The toasts to these illustrious Companions having been duly honoured, were responded to in terms which were most gratifying to the members of the new Conclave, who could not fail to appreciate the compliments and recommendations enunciated. Major Irvine, in a brief but effective speech, expressed his sense of the obligation conferred by the presence of so many distinguished visitors, and on behalf of the new Conclave extended a pressing invite to a future lodge meeting at about the period of which they would be enabled to judge how far the Macdonald Conclave would have justifified their exertions by the progress then made. An assurance was given by the M.P.S. that the new Conclave would avail itself of that knowledge of military drill and discipline, which would be so essential in securing perfect and effective working, and that care would be taken in the selection of Generals to provide for such efficiency. The toast of "Success to the Macdonald Conclave, No. 14," having been most enthusiastically responded to, the Sir Knights adjourned to the lodge-room for further labours. A College of Viceroy's having been duly formed, Sir Knight Major Irvine, was admitted to the rank of V.E., this most impressive ceremony being ably performed by the Grand Recorder, who subsequently raised the new Sir Knight to the rank of Sovereign of the Order. The Conclave was then resumed to the lesser degree, and the newly-made Sir Knights were re-admitted, Sir Knight Stevens occupying the chair of M.P.S., Sir Knight Major Irvine, that of V.E. It was then ordered that an early meeting of the Members of the Conclave should be held, at which the several officers should be appointed, and the further necessary measures for complete establishment to be decided upon. The Conclave was then closed in due form, and the Companions separated with gratification in the work of the evening, and great hope and desire that No. 14 in this chivalric institution would in time become an ornament to the Order of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine.

[Pressure of matter compels us, at the last moment, to postpone several reports of lodge meetings, and also to greatly curtail our resumé of the Grand Festival below.]

THE ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

The 71st Annual Festival of this excellent Institution was held at the New Hall, Great Queen-street, on Wednesday, the 10th inst., under the presidency of our highly popular Deputy Grand Master, the Earl de Grey and Ripon, P.G.M. for West Yorkshire, and proved not merely a success, but a triumph. We may briefly state that the Institution was founded in 1798 by the "Ancient," or "Athol" Masons, at which period six children were admitted to its benefits—successive developments have resulted in its expansion as a great educational establishment worthy of the noble Craft, and providing not only clothing and maintenance for 105 boys, but those treasures of science and knowledge which will enable them in after-life to become fit members of a free and civilized community. To achieve this great object, heavy expenses have been necessarily incurred in the erection of suitable buildings to accommodate so large a number of children—and, we trust, eventually a still larger number—but English Masons have magnificently responded to the appeals made to their sympathy and support, as would be seen by our report of the proceedings last week. The noble Lord in the chair was supported by about 350 brethren, amongst whom were:—Bros. Augustus Smith, Pro. G.M. for Cornwall; Stephen Blair, Pro. G.M. for East Lancashire; Lord Eliot, P.G.W. and D. Pro. G.M. for Cornwall; Llewellyn Evans, President of the Board of General Purposes; John Hervey, G. Sec.; William Farnfield, P. Assist. G. Secy; E. H. Patten, P.G.S.B.; Udell, P.G.D.; Spiers, P.G.S.B., and D.P.G.M. for Oxfordshire; Head, P.G.D.; Browse, G.D.; Major Creaton, P.G.D.; H. Bridges, P.G.S.B.; Hyde Pullen, P.G.S.B., and D. Pro. G.M., Isle of Wight; W. Young, P.G.S.B.; Rev. C. Woodward, Chap. to the Institution; Col. L. Cole, P.G.W.; L. B. P. Metham, D.P.G.M. for Devonshire; Dr. Jabez Hogg, P.G.D.; Murray, D.G.M. for China; Dr. Senior, P.G. Chap.; Bentley Shaw, G.S.D. D.P.G.M. for West Yorkshire; J. M. White, P.J.W. for West Yorkshire; Peter Matthews, Sec. No. 11, and Treas. 507; Capt. Cope, P.G.S.B., and Prov. G.W. for Cheshire; W. R. Callender, D.P.G.M. for East Lancashire; E. Farthing, P.P.G. Supt. of Works for Herts; H. Thompson, P.M. 177 and 1,158; E. Farmer, W.M., 28; A. Avery, P.M. and Treas. 619; H. Massey, W. M., 619; Major A. Irvine, W.M., 1,216; and J. L. Hine, P.P.G.T., P.P.G.W. for East Lancashire; &c.

After the usual loyal and masonic toasts had been duly honoured, the Chairman gave the toast of the evening—"Success to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys," in an eloquent speech, which was received with great applause.

Bro. Binckes then read the list of subscriptions and amongst them were:—The noble Chairman, P.G.M. for West Yorkshire 500 guineas; the Provincial Grand Lodge, 500 guineas; 58 Stewards for West Yorkshire, 2,411 guineas, making the subscriptions for West Yorkshire £3,015; &c. The following were the contributions by London lodges:—Fidelity, £87 4s; Somerset House, £17 17s; Westminster and Corner Stone, £49 7s; York Lodge of Perseverance, £29 7s; Albion, £45 3s; Royal Alfred, £101; Neptune, £53 11s; Strong Man, £51 14s; Mount Lebanon, £133 7s; London, £105; Macdonald, £37 16s; Beedon, £56 4s, &c., &c. The total amount of the London lodges was £2,629, and the provinces, exclusive of the above-named, £2,409.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

IT is well known that the ceremony of the Royal Arch degree, as adopted by the Grand Chapter of England in 1834, differs very materially from that practised in Scotland, Ireland, or America. Here, it is recognized as the completion of the third degree, and Master Masons of 12 months' standing are eligible for exaltation. Other degrees are interposed, in the countries we have named, between the M.M. and the R.A. degrees; such as the Mark Master, the Past Master, and the Most Excellent Master. In some of the States of America they supplement the R.A. by two degrees called Royal and Select Masters, and the result is, practically, that a brother receives nine degrees in America, the essential secrets of most of which he can obtain in England by four steps.

This is certainly a strange anomaly, and we consider that some notice ought to be taken of the fact by the Grand Chapter of England. The Mark degree in this country is a separate jurisdiction, but the so-called P.M.'s and M.E. Masters' degrees have no footing amongst us. Cannot we arrive at some uniformity in this respect with our English-speaking brethren of other lands? We are strongly of opinion that the English ceremony is complete in itself, and—when rendered by companions who thoroughly appreciate its merits—its language is both impressive and sublime.

There is at present a disposition in many quarters to weed the Masonic Ritual of those literary solecisms and anachronisms, which have crept in from time to time through the carelessness of uneducated instructors; and, no doubt, so desirable a reform will eventually be carried out.

We especially invite the attention of Royal Arch Masons to this important subject, and shall be glad to hear the opinions of our brethren generally, both at home and abroad.

A MASONIC ODE.

God the Almighty Founder spake,
And worlds on worlds from chaos rolled;
The sun, o'er mountain, vale and lake,
In splendour spread like molten gold.
The moon, and countless stars were given,
Night's chasms of darkness to illumine;
Revealing o'er the face of Heaven
Their radiance 'midst the wondrous gloom.
Since the first sunbeam kissed the flowers
Of Eden with divinest light,
The sun with still unwearied powers
Clasps Earth in his embraces bright.
The moon's mysterious circlet still Floats calmly thro' the elysian air.—
Obeys her glorious Maker's will,
Whose eye beholds as everywhere.
Thus constant we, from olden time
Unchanged, pursue our mystic lore,
And gather knowledge, truth sublime,
From spheres of Light for evermore.
And may we ever firmly stand,
Brothers united heart and hand,
Till all the world shall wondering see,
Heaven's type in our Freemasonry.

R. WENTWORTH LITTLE.

A MASONIC TOAST.

If we have but little, how many there are who have less; so ne'er let the heart, nor the hand, nor the door be closed to the claims of a friend in distress.

MASONIC EXHORTATION.—FROM THE GERMAN.

O thou! whom we have initiated in the doctrines of wisdom, Son of Virtue and Friendship! listen to us, and open thy heart to the serious precepts of Truth. We will show thee the path to happiness of life, the way in which thou mayst please thy Creator; how thy mayst employ with bening success, for the benefit of mankind, all the means which Providence has entrusted thee with, and thus procure thyself the sacred pleasure of benevolence.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

It is generally known that in Ireland the chivalric and other degrees are recognized by the Craft authorities, but "no jewel, medal or device belonging to any Order or degree beyond that of Master Mason, in which however the Jewel of a Past Master is considered to be included" can be worn in the Grand Lodge. This is perfectly correct, as every degree in Masonry ought to be kept separate and distinct, and the strict observance of this law maintains the universal principles of Craft Masonry.

The first or third degree can only be conferred upon one brother at a time and one degree only at each meeting according to the Irish Book of Constitutions. In Scotland extraordinary laxity exists in these particulars, and even in England we have seen four or five brethren "hurried" through a degree at the same time. There ought to be a cosmopolitan law upon this subject.

The following curious article exists amongst the laws of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, and, to say the least, is unusual:—"107. If a lodge shall initiate any person who shall be a sheriff's, coroner's or marshal's bailiff, or a livery servant, the officers and members of the lodge present on such occasion shall be suspended during the pleasure of the Grand Lodge. Any brother exercising any of these occupations after he has been admitted a member of the Order, shall forfeit all his rights as a Freemason, so long as he shall continue to exercise such occupation; and any lodge which shall receive or admit among them any brother exercising any of the aforesaid occupations shall be punished as the Grand Lodge shall direct."

DEAR SIR,—Under the heading of "Masonic Jurisprudence," you say Regularly Installed Masters under any jurisdiction are permitted to assist at an English Board of J.M.'s. "Scotch P.M.'s are inadmissible, as they know nothing of the secrets restricted to the chair." Would you kindly in your next, explain the reason why "Scotch Past Masters," are debarred from taking part at a Board of English J.M.'s.—Yours fraternally, P. M., Hartlepool, March 17th.

[In Scotland, a Brother elected to the chair of a lodge is inducted into office in the presence of the Master Masons, and does not receive the secrets of an Installed Master, a degree which is not recognised by the Grand Lodge of Scotland—he cannot therefore be admitted to a Board of J.M.'s.—Ed. F.]

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

Ancient and Accepted Rite.—The statement to which "Rose Croix" alludes as to a warrant of 1721, granted by The Pretender to certain London Knights, first appeared in the Freemason's Magazine on the authority of Bro. Matthew Cooke, who has the reputation of being well acquainted with ancient documents. So many unfounded attacks are made on the Chivalric Orders, that it requires some little consideration to enable us to see that there is nothing at all improbable in the existence of such a document, which is said to be unquestionably genuine. There are scores of certificates knocking about Lancashire, which date and connect the revised Templar ceremony with a degree, having several points in common the 17th A. and A. R. year of revival 1686. Were this date too early, how came Philip of Orleans in the year 1705 to anathematise the Stuart, or "Scottish Templars with their Brethren of St. John of Jerusalem," who had established High Grade Masonry at Arras. The Charter, which must have been forged between 1681 and 1705, admits they altered the secrets to distinguish them from the Scotch Order. See a copy in Brother Richard Woolf's work on the Order of St. John and the Temple—JOHN YARKER, Manchester.

Catenarian Arch.—If a rope be suspended loosely by its two ends, the curve into which it falls is called a catenarian curve, and thus inverted, forms the catenarian arch, which is said to be the strongest of all Arches.—ANTIQUARIUS.

The Eagle.—An eagle in heraldry, is the symbol of royalty as being the king of birds, and for that reason was dedicated by the ancients to Jupiter. The eagle has been borne as an ensign or standard by several nations, particularly by the Persians and Romans, and the double-headed eagle with the latter people, denoted the union of the Eastern and Western empires. An eagle on medals imports empire, divinity, or providence; with the word consecratio annexed, it expresses the apotheosis of an Emperor. R. W. L.

The Palm-tree.—The Phenicians gave the name of Phoenix to the palm-tree, because when burnt down to the very root, it naturally rises again, fairer than ever.—R. W. L.

The Dog.—The figure of a dog was introduced into the ceremonies of the Mopses a pseudo-Masonic Order in Germany, as an emblem of fidelity.—VIATOR.

Rosaic Rite.—An able paper on this system by Bro. G. Lambert, was read at the last meeting of the Masonic Archæological Institute. I was not present, but Bro. Lambert has since informed me that the "Red Cross of Constantine" formed part of Bro. Rosa's series of degrees. If the proofs are susceptible of publication, our well-read Brother would confer a boon upon the Anglican Order of Constantine, by stating all he knows respecting it. Hitherto my impression has been that the "Red Cross" was not a portion of Rosa's Rite, but was introduced into Germany, in 1754, by Baron Hünde, the founder of the Rite of Strict Observance, a modification of which system embraced a degree called "Master of the Red Cross," since adopted as the summit of the Swedish Rite.—G. RECORDER.

The late Bro. Oliver, in his remarks concerning the Three Druidical Pillars which still remain in Penrith Churchyard, Cumberland, observes that our best Antiquaries have been puzzled to account for their being inscribed with a cross. But this doubtless, he states, arose from the anxiety of the first Christian Missionaries to transfer the devotional attachment of the natives from a lifeless image to the Eternal God, by assuming the great emblem of Christianity, which had indeed been previously used by the Druids, but with a different signification. Now with all due submission to such learned authorities, I should rather suppose that the figure which he imagined was made by the Missionaries was the sacred and mysterious character Tau, which the Druids were uniformly accustomed to inscribe on all their monuments, although in most cases the character from the lapse of ages, and the effect of time is now no longer legible. It is remarkable that there should be three, corresponding in number with the Thoths or symbolical divinities of the ancient Egyptians, and also to the three Masonic columns, Wisdom, Strength, and Beauty. R. W. LITTLE.

Where can I find a fair and candid statement of the charges which the Roman Catholic clergy bring against Freemasonry, and the grounds on which they base their denunciation of the Craft? Where can I find a good reply to those charges?—ASHLAR.

His Royal Highness Prince Arthur will, it is expected, be present at the Grand Masonic Ball which is to held at the Exhibition Palace, Dublin, on Friday evening, 9th proximo.

TEMPLAR UNIFORMITY OF RITUAL.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Now that our Ancient and Noble Order of the Templars of St. John are about to amalgamate throughout Britain—the desirability of which I was the first to impress upon our brothers—There is an excellent opportunity such as will never again occur, of accomplishing uniformity of ritual by getting rid of the false and spurious grand office from the list, together with the still more absurd ritual of 1851.

I am persuaded that none but a grand master in his dotage would ever have allowed such an abortion to be brought before Grand Conclave, nor would such a ceremony and such a list of offices have been proposed, if the compiler had been possessed of the slightest knowledge of ancient chivalry and its ceremonies. Though I would by no means recommend the Scotch and Irish rituals on their entirety, yet the former have a very excellent ritual which they have accomplished by adhering to the ancient side of the English ritual of 1686 and 1791, and our own Grand Conclave, would do well to follow the example set them north. If they wish the educated portion of our Order to stand by them, uniformity must now come and for us to make the slightest attempt to cram our own folly down the throat of the Scotch and Irish would be suicidal. The mistakes we have made arise through our constant habit of pushing men into the highest offices, who beyond parrot-like repetition of masonic ceremonies—which is the very worst qualification in a chivalric order—are utterly incapable from want of knowledge, to fill the lowest offices in the order.

There are one or two able men amongst the present ritualistic commissioners, and it is to be hoped that they will not allow any ignorant clamour to stand in the way of their reforming it altogether.

Fraternally yours,
TRIANGLE.

THE CHIVALRIC ORDERS.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As a Hebrew brother, permit me to express the gratification with which I read Bro. Little's exposition of the Christian or Chivalric Orders. In common with many other brethren, and especially my co-religionists I had always considered those orders to be grossly sectarian if not intolerant, and contrary to the spirit of Freemasonry.

The mazes of multitudinous degrees rejoicing in extraordinary names such as "Knights of the Brazen Serpent," "Commanders of the Stars" cum multis aliis were supposed to have so bewildered the ideas of masons as to have obliterated the traces of craft teachings. These, however, it appears, are the follies of foreign brethren, and I am truly glad to find that the representatives of Christian degrees in England are such true and genuine masons.

The claims set up on behalf of the Red Cross Order seem to be rational and I can assure its members that Jewish brethren have no wish to breathe a word against the honest convictions of any man whether mason or otherwise.

All we desire is to meet, our Christian brethren on terms of full equality in the ample halls of Freemasonry; and we shall be pleased to learn that amongst our masonic associates there are none who have entered into vows of intolerance or bigotry.

Can Bro. Little inform us whether the Rose Croix and other high degrees are free from this objection; as I know some Hebrew brethren on the Continent who allege they are not. Wishing your new paper every success.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
A LEVITE.

TESTIMONIAL TO BRO. BRETT.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR BROTHER,—I am delighted to hear that justice is about to be done to the worth of Bro. Brett, the esteemed Preceptor of the "Metropolitan Chapter of Instruction," and shall be happy to contribute my mite (with many others) in appreciation of his valuable services to the Craft Universal.

It is impossible for me to express my opinion of his merits as a Masonic Instructor, and besides which, he is so generally known, that any such attempt would be superfluous. He has no superior in the Royal Arch Ritual as an instructor, and as it is more particularly in that department that his energies and patience have been directed, I trust Companions especially will support the movement with fervency and zeal. Let it be a numerous and hearty subscription-list, for Bro. Brett deserves our warmest thanks for so long a devoted life for the Craft.

SPECIMENS FROM A MASONIC QUARRY.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 131 TRURO,

Author of "History of Freemasonry in Cornwall," "Sparks from a Mason's Anvil," &c.; Masonic Correspondent of "The Voice of Freemasonry," for England; Corresponding Member of "German Masonic Union," &c.

SPECIMEN No. 1.—OPERATIVE MASONIC LODGES.

The St. John's Operative Lodge, Seatown, Banff, stands as No. 92 on the Roll of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, and was warranted A.D. 1764. The appended bye-laws of the lodge, dated A.D. 1765, are exceedingly curious, and afford an insight into the lax arrangements and discipline then prevalent among country lodges. As the Grand Chapter of Scotland was not formed until the second decade of the present century, Royal Arch Masonry may be said to have run wild in the north for some seventy years or more. Generally, however, the working of both this degree and the Knights' Templars contributed to improve the finances of the lodge; and it will be seen, as the records are still farther examined, that the Benefit Societies usually attached to the Operative Lodges of the eighteenth century offered additional advantages to the promoters of the higher degrees so called. It is impossible now to decide whether Scotland obtained the Royal Arch degree from England, or the latter from the former. One of the two must have occurred, as it was evidently a foreign production originally, and seems to have flourished about as early in England as in Scotland, and then subsequently in Ireland. The following references to the degree, though not the earliest known, are at least the oldest bye-laws ever published, or that have seen the light of late years. According to Dr. Dassigny, the degree was unknown in Ireland A.D. 1744; and before A.D. 1740 we can find no reference to Royal Arch Masonry anywhere. Stirling Chapter is said to possess the earliest minutes, dated 1743, but these have never been made public, and, on enquiry of some of the brethren there who would be likely to know, they actually seem as ignorant of their nature as we ourselves. In the absence then of other documents, these bye-laws may fairly be assumed to be the earliest extant. England cannot produce any records of the Royal Arch being worked in this country anterior to 1750, so we must be content to read the excerpts of minutes from elsewhere. The original form of the laws has been preserved, and the copy has been most carefully made and examined, to prevent the slightest inaccuracy, from the minute book itself. In the list of chapters under the Supreme G.R.A. Scotland, it is placed as No. 4, 1765. As No. 8 is only acknowledged to have been instituted 1818, and No. 1 no earlier than at 1779; while No. 2, though said to have been worked as far back as A.D. 1743, is after all but of uncertain date. We think the Operative Chapter of Banff should be honored with the first position on the roll.

THE EAR OF CORN.

An Ode sung at a Masonic Sociable. being composed for the occasion by Bro. ROB MORRIS, LL.D., Kentucky.

Air—"Rally round the Flag."

Of the waterfall 't is born,
In the nodding fields of corn,
Blest type of Masons' love and plenty;
And the hymn of our delight
Shall be this symbol bright,
Singing the type of love and plenty.

The emblem of plenty,
The rich golden ear,
Gift of a Father of Grace, ever dear
Oh, the hymn of our delight,
Shall be this emblem bright,
Singing the type of love and plenty.

Of the bliss of earth it tells,
Every blessing in it dwells,
Sunshine is on its treasure golden,
And the cooling drops of morn
Have bedewed the nodding corn—
Ripe in the field of treasure golden.

The emblem of plenty, &c.

In the nodding ear of corn,
Finds the spirit, weary-worn,
Hopes—hopes of better days in heaven,
When the harvest toil is done,
And the feasting is begun—
Joy, joy the Sabbath-day of Heaven!

The emblem of plenty, &c.

Let the golden symbol be Where the toiling Crafts may see—
Toiling, yet never quite despairing.
Of the waterfall 't is born,
In the nodding fields of corn,
Ripe for the soul in its despairing.
The emblem of plenty, &c.

Obituary.

DEATH OF BRO. GEORGE RAYMOND, ESQ., PROPRIETOR AND EDITOR OF THE KERRY EVENING POST.

With sincere sorrow we have to announce the death of George Raymond, Esq., proprietor and editor of the Kerry Evening Post, which melancholy event occurred at Charlemont-st., Dublin, on Thursday, March 11th. Mr. Raymond had been for the last six months suffering severely from aneurism of the femoral artery, and he went to Dublin some two months ago to have the benefit of the most eminent medical and surgical advice. A clever operation was successfully performed, and the most sanguine hopes were entertained of his complete recovery, when his friends were startled by the receipt of a telegram announcing his death, which resulted from extreme exhaustion. Mr. Raymond had reached the fiftieth year of his age. For the last 30 years he has been prominently known to the public as the conductor of the Conservative organ of Kerry. Throughout his career, he adhered firmly and faithfully to the principles of his party. In him they always found an earnest, zealous, consistent, and fearless advocate. But though thus prominently distinguished as a party politician, he enjoyed in a remarkable manner the esteem and regard of all classes, without distinction of creed or party, for his private life was marked to a high degree by the most amiable personal and social virtues. For our own part, now that he is no more, we can scarcely trust ourselves to discharge the painful duty that devolves on us. For the last three years it was our fate to have been opposed to Mr. Raymond in various public discussions. We found him ever a formidable opponent, but throughout all the encounters which passed between this journal and the Kerry Evening Post in our time, Mr. Raymond never allowed the heat of discussion or the calls of party to degenerate, as too often happens, into personal ill feeling or to interfere with personal friendship. From first to last, indeed, he always proved himself sterling as a friend; affectionate, as a relative; tolerant to those who differed from him, while unswervingly devoted to the principles which he professed himself. Eminently beloved in the family circle, and universally respected as a citizen, the intelligence of his unexpected death has been received in all quarters with deep pain. In the grand jury room, it was the subject of generally expressed sympathy; and throughout the town and county the same feeling has been manifested by those tokens of sorrowing esteem that always speak for the good man gone.—Tralee Chronicle.

THE LATE BRO. CAPT. SPEIRS, M.P.

PROVINCIAL GRAND FUNERAL LODGE, SCOTLAND.

A Provincial Grand Funeral Lodge in memory of the late Captain Archibald A. Speirs of Elderslie, M.P., Provincial Grand Master Master Mason of Glasgow, was held in the City Hall, on the evening of March 10th. The attendance, which numbered from 1,400 to 1,500, including a deputation from the Grand Lodge of Scotland, consisting of Bro. Henry Inglis of Torsonce, S.G.M., and the following brethren—Wm. Mann, Alex. Hay, C. S. Law, J. Coghill, J. Lawrie, W. M. Bryce, Rev. Gavin Mason, Wm. Officer, and the following Grand Stewards:—J. Y. D. Copland, J. Wallace, W. Smith, W. Grant, Alex. Mitchell, D. T. Alexander, W. Robertson, P. T. Hendry, F. L. Law, F. A. Barrow, H. S. Harvey, D. Kinnear, J. W. McCulloch, W. A. Reilly, J. D. Porteous, and W. C. Lads. The Grand Lodge of England was represented by Bro. Edward Busher, Past Grand Sword-bearer. The Provincial Grand Lodge of Glasgow was represented by Bros. F. A. Barrow, Thomas Baker, James Wallace, James Steel, John Baird (Acting J.G.W.), Rev. G. S. Burns, William Smith, James Leith, R. Robb, R. Craig, W. Alexander, R. Donaldson, James Gillies, James Balfour, and James Pollock. Bro. W. M. Gilmour, with eleven others, represented the Middle Ward of Lanarkshire Provincial Grand Lodge; Bro. Colonel Campbell of Blythswood, with eighteen others, the Provincial Grand Lodge of Renfrewshire East; and Bro. J. A. Ferguson, with thirteen others, the Lodge Mother Kilwinning. The following lodges were represented:—St. John's, Glasgow (65 of a deputation); Kilwinning, Glasgow (24); Kilwinning, Hamilton (12); Kilwinning, Torphichen (5); St. John's, Falkirk (13); Kilwinning, Dumbarton (23); St. Mungo, Glasgow (21); St. Mary's, Coltness, Wishaw (10); St. Luke, Edinburgh (3); Thistle, Glasgow (76); St. Mark, Glasgow (14); Union and Crown, Glasgow (26); Cambuslang Royal Arch (16); St. Mary, Partick (40); Thistle St. John, Stewarton (8); Royal Arch, Rutherglen (17); St. John, Shettleston (24); St. Mirren's Paisley (45); Royal Arch, Pollokshaws (12); St. John Leith (6); St. John, Greenock (16); St. John, Leven (6); Scotia, Glasgow (21); St. John, Carlisle (4); St. Andrew, Cumbernauld (4); St. Andrew, Strathaven (3); Star, Glasgow (52); St. Johnstone, Houston (12); Shamrock and Thistle, Glasgow (40); St. John, Rothesay (4); St. John, Woodall (3); Union and Crown, Barrhead (24); St. James, Old Monkland (16); St. Andrew's, Alexandria (12); Union, Glasgow (25); St. George, Glasgow (21); St. John's Operative, Rutherglen (10); Caledonian Railway, Glasgow (54); Commercial, Glasgow (12); St. Clare, Glasgow (35); Kilwinning, Renfrew (14); Clyde, Glasgow (34); Athole, Glasgow (24); Neptune, Glasgow (15); Prince of Wales, Renfrew (25); Govandale, Govan (27); Glasgow, Glasgow (26); St. John, Busby (15); and St. Andrew, Glasgow (17).

As usual on such occasion the brethren were in full masonic costume, with crape jewels, and the vacant throne was covered with a pall, on which were laid the late Provincial Grand Master's insignia and rod of office, the latter being broken in two. Shortly after half-past six o'clock the Provincial Grand Lodge was constituted in due form, under the presidency of Bro. F. A. Barrow, S.P.G.M., acting P.G. Master, assisted by Bro. Thos. Baker as acting D.P.G. Master, Bro. Jas. Steel as P.G. Senior Warden, and Bro. John Baird as P.G. Junior Warden. The Lodge having having been raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, the service was opened by the organ performing "The Dead March in Saul," during the playing of which the deputation from Grand Lodge entered the hall and took up position on the platform. Bro. Barrow then formally resigned the chair to Bro. Inglis, as the representative of Grand Lodge, and two hymns having been sung by the whole company, and prayer offered up by the Provincial Grand Chaplain (Bro. the Rev. G. S. Burns).

Bro. INGLIS pronounced the funeral oration, as follows:—Within the space of two short years, Death, the great reaper, has been busy amongst us. That distinguished Bro. Sir Archd. Alison—an honour to the Craft and an honour to his country—has passed away; and now, alas! we are gathered once more in this solemn funeral hall to sing a funeral dirge, and to speak a lamentation over Bro. Speirs, his successor. To the first there were vouchsafed by a mysterious Providence a ripened age and a European fame; to the second, a brief career and an untimely grave.

"Leaves have their time to fall.

And flowers to wither at the north's wind's breath,

And stars to set—but all,

Thou hast all seasons for thine own—O Death!"

To, me, brethren, it is unspeakably sad to stand in this place and to deliver this address; for it is little more than a twelvemonth since I attended here and installed our departed brother in the high masonic office to which he was promoted by the craft. It is little more than a twelvemonth since he himself, full of health and happiness and masonic enthusiasm, thanked you with heartfelt thanks beneath this roof, and eloquently described to you his conviction of the arduous duties which he had undertaken, and which he told you that he was honestly determined to perform. His words and his bearing established between us a mutual bond of belief. We believed in the promise of his youth for long life; we believed in the stern and sterling rectitude of his purpose; and we fondly hope that a new masonic star had risen in the horizon of the west, which might come in God's good time to rival the splendour of that which had set in glory. I have looked back upon the report of the proceedings at the installation of Bro. Speirs, and was struck by the mournful ring of certain words of my own—mournful not indeed then, but now. The words were these:—"His coat of arms is a ship in full sail, and I wish him a favourable wind, a gallant crew, and a prosperous voyage." Vain and delusive wish!

"He, the young and strong, who cherished

Noble longings for the strife,

By the roadside fell and perished,

Weary with the march of life."

Brethren, when a brother is called away mature in years and of accomplished fame, our regrets are softened by the considerations that he has run the appointed course of man—that he has played his allotted part for the benefit of his fellow-creatures—and that his portrait is hung, as it were, in the gallery of time. "After life's fitful fever he sleeps well." But, Brethren, we have no such earthly consolation here. Here we had the bright morning which gave us promise of the glorious day. Here we had the youthful enthusiasm which betokened a wise maturity—we had the kindly heart which bespoke the lasting friend—we had the open hand which is born of charity—we had the clear and beaming eye which was lighted by the inward torch of honour. Others, no doubt, there are who are gifted with gifts as noble, but whose energies are too often chilled, and whose impulses are too often deadened in the desperate conflict of life—who have had no time to regard, even for a moment, the struggles of their fellow-men, lest in that very moment of regard some one of the thousand billows of the ocean of life may take them at unawares, and sweep them down into the depths of ruin. It was not so with departed friend. High its position, richly endowed with worldly gear, he had the power and the will to devote his time and talents to the service of his country. But it was not to be so; and we can only bow in humble submission to the Heavenly Hand that was stretched forth to remove him in all his early promise to the Grand Lodge on high. We bow in humble submission before the Omniscient God, who has seen fit, for a purpose unknown to us but known to Him, to remove our well-beloved brother and to leave us here for a little while to mourn. We are human, and mourn we must; but we are Christians, and we are Masons too, and the cloud of our mourning is fringed by the rays of the sun of our promise—

"Earth to earth, and dust to dust,"

The solemn priest has said;

So we lay the turf above the now,

And we seal thy narrow bed.

But thy spirit, brother, soars away

Among the faithful blest—

Where the wicked cease from troubling,

And the weary are at rest."

The oration was followed by a requiem, by the reading and chanting of passages from the Church of England Funeral Service, by the singing of the noble "Dies Irae," and several chorales, and by prayer—the whole being interspersed at intervals with the grand honours of masonry. When the solemn and impressive service terminated, Bro. Inglis resigned his chair, and the Grand Lodge deputation retired; and thereafter the lodge was closed with the customary formalities.

The musical part of the programme was effectively conducted by Bro. Donaldson, assisted by a choir of eleven voices, and Bro. Lambert as organist. The general arrangements, under the entire management of Bro. Robb, P.G. Marshal, were highly satisfactory.—Glasgow Herald.

THE INAUGURATION OF FREEMASONS' HALL LONDON.

THE approaching inaugural ceremonial at the Freemasons' Hall is one which is contemplated with great interest by many brethren, and we believe that every arrangement for the celebration of so auspicious a solemnity will be found worthy of our great fraternity. It may not, however, be amiss to remind our readers that the original Masonic Hall, which was dedicated in 1776, was not included in the work of demolition and reconstruction in which the authorities of Grand Lodge have been recently engaged; but it has been so splendidly re-gilded and re-decorated that few would recognise the old hall in its new and gorgeous garb. It is now a fitting temple of the Craft, and will be kept religiously sacred to the rites of Freemasonry.

The emblems portrayed on the centre of the roof of Freemasons' Hall illustrate the zodiacal signs as shown in the planisphere of Dendera, and according to learned writers these hieroglyphics not only bore an astronomical interpretation, but were figurative of important religious truths.

The revolution of the heavens taught the immutable truth that the life of man is altered by scenes of sunshine and gloom; and in the dawn of the world's history all learning was expressed in equally simple yet majestic symbols. Every sign of the zodiac had its appropriate name in the Coptic tongue, derived in many instances from a Hebrew root, the signification of which names we find was interwoven with the science and philosophy of Egypt, as well as with the typical ceremonies of the Jewish nation. In fact, the more we investigate this subject the more apparent it will be that in the days of old, as well as now, the “heavens declared the glory of God” to all earnest enquirers after truth and knowledge, and we shall then perceive that the display of these heavenly emblems in the chosen temple of Freemasonry is beautifully appropriate.

Around the walls of Freemasons' Hall are also placed the portraits of seven Grand Masters,—namely, Lord Petre, who laid the foundation-stone, the Duke of Atholl, Henry Edward Duke of Cumberland, George Prince of Wales, the Dukes of Kent and Sussex, and the Earl of Zetland. The armorial bearings of these Royal and illustrious chiefs have likewise been recently painted above their portraits, by order of the Building Committee. The magnificent chairs used formerly on great occasions, having been elaborately re-gilded, will also contribute to the splendour of the spectacle at the forthcoming ceremony, and we may safely rest assured that the 14th of April, when the “Inauguration” of Freemasons' Hall will take place, will long be remembered as a red-letter day in the chronicles of the Masonic Order.

PRESENTATION TO BRO. SCHMITT, OF JERSEY.

A complimentary dinner was recently given at the “Pomme d'Or” hotel, St. Heliers, Jersey, in honour of our esteemed brother, Albert Schmitt, P.M. and P.Z., at which Bros. De Carteret, P.G.M.; Major J. Gallienne, P.D.P.G.M., Guernsey; Colonel Miller, Dr. Le Cronier, P.D.P.G.M., Jersey; E. D. Le Cou-teur, Major Young, J. T. du Jardin, Capt. Woodall, Dr. Smith, H. L. Manuel, P. W. Benham, W. Adams, and about sixty other eminent Masons were present.

A perfect ovation was accorded to Brother Schmitt, who was presented by Dr. Le Cronier (the chairman) with a jewel, voted to our excellent brother by the Provincial Grand Lodge, in which Bro. Schmitt for several years fulfilled the onerous duties of Grand Secretary.

A special ode, written in French and eulogistic of the worthy guest, was recited during the evening.

NEW METROPOLITAN LODGE.

The M.W. Grand Master has granted a warrant to Brothers C. A. Cottebrune as W.M., C. Mognie as S.W., G. Gee as J.W., and other brethren, to hold a lodge at the Victoria Railway Station, Pimlico. The name of the new lodge, we understand, is the “Grosvenor,” No. 1257.

MASONIC PREFERMENTS.

The M.W. Grand Master has appointed Brother Edward C. Malet de Carteret, Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st or North-West Regiment of Jersey Militia, Seigneur of St. Ouen's Manor, and P.M. of the St. Aubin's Lodge, No. 958, as Provincial Grand Master for the Channel Islands. His lordship, in making this appointment, has acceded to the general desire of the Craft in Jersey, with whom Colonel de Carteret is deservedly popular.

We are informed that Lord Kenlis has conferred the Grand Cross of the Order of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine upon Major-General Munbee, of Weston-super-Mare, and has also appointed Captain Francis George Irwin, Inspector General for Bristol.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE BRO. GEORGE RAYMOND, COMP. R.A.

Lodge No. 379, Tralee, Ireland.

The brethren of this lodge have experienced a severe loss in the death of their J.W., Bro. George Raymond, Comp. R.A., which melancholy event took place, as stated in our last, on the 11th inst. at Dublin, whither he had gone for medical advice.

His remains were brought to Killarney for interment, and on Sunday a special train left Tralee for the former place conveying a large number of the members of the lodge, and other friends of the deceased, anxious to pay a last tribute to departed worth. On arrival at Killarney they were met by many others, and immediately formed into procession on the platform of the railway station, the coffin being borne by the brethren, the officers of the lodge supporting the pall, and all wearing hat bands, with rosettes marking the colours of their degrees.

When at the churchyard, the brethren arrayed themselves in their insignia, wearing crape rosettes on their aprons—the apron, sash, and collar of the deceased having been placed on the coffin—the melancholy cortege moved on, preceded by the Rev. Thos. Moriarty, Rector of Wales who (in the unavoidable absence of the chaplain to the lodge, Rev. Raymond Orpen, officiated. On reaching the grave the brethren formed round, and as the words of the burial service, “Ashes to ashes, dust to dust,” fell with deep meaning on their ears, cast their rosettes into the dark abyss which yawned beneath.

The ceremony over, all returned to their homes regretting the sad occasion which had called them together, yet glad of the opportunity of bearing this public testimony to the many endearing qualities of one who will always be remembered for his sterling integrity and steady attachment to the Order of which he was an esteemed member.

Knowledge is a word of unlimited meaning. It is a circle of boundless diameter and includes all creation. The wisdom of God is the centre that diverges like a glowing sun in every direction. Systems are lesser circles within the greater; and so of the theories of a man for man's use and benefit, when true and complete according to the laws of nature.—Ellis.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Israel, No. 205.—Under the very able and efficient Master, the W. Bro. Chamberlain, this remarkably prosperous lodge met on Tuesday last, at Radley's (Bro. Hart's), when the W.M. initiated three gentlemen; passed to the second degree Brothers Waylett, Ayden, Kitching, and Asher Isaacs; and in a most efficient manner conferred the honour of the third degree upon Bro. Roileau. The brethren of this lodge have to be very thankful in having such an efficient Master to preside over them, and his officers will, we trust, follow his bright example. After various lucid statements regarding the affairs of the lodge by the W. Bro. the Secretary, the brethren separated in perfect harmony.

PROVINCIAL.

MARGATE.—The Union Lodge, No. 127.—This ancient lodge again met on Friday, the 19th instant, the W.M., Athelston Harvey Boys, in the chair. Among the brethren present were John Harvey Boys, P.M., and P. Dep. Prov. G. Master of the Province of Kent, and Thos. H. Grove Snowden, P.M. and P. Prov. J. G. Warden, Kent. The lodge having been duly opened, and the minutes of the last regular lodge read and confirmed, Bros. E.A.'s Saunders and Bird were examined and entrusted, and, having retired, the lodge was opened in the second degree. Bro. Wm. P. Saunders was passed to the degree of F.C. by Bro. P. M. Charles D. Dixon; and Bro. Wm. Bird, was passed to the same degree by Bro. the W.M. The charge in this degree was delivered by immediate P. M. Townsend, and was followed by an able discourse upon the tracing-board by Bro. P. M. Hayward, the Treasurer and Preceptor of the lodge.—The W.M. closed down to the first degree, and then, after an eloquent address, presented a P.M.'s jewel to the immediate P.M., Bro. Townsend. In the course of his address W. M. Boys, observed that the jewel had been unanimously voted by the brethren of the lodge in consideration of the services of the immediate P.M. in the chair during the past year, and that, as the acting secretary of the lodge for many years past, he had by his attention and courtesy, and the correct manner in which he had performed his sometimes arduous duties, earned the esteem and good will of all the brethren.—The W.M. expressed a hope that the immediate P.M. might live many years to wear that jewel, with the gratifying assurance from the W.M. that in so wearing it, he would verify the old maxim of "Palmarum qui meruit ferat."—The immediate P.M., on receiving the jewel, observed that for the gift he truly and sincerely thanked all the brethren. To the W.M., and to P.M.'s Brasier and Hayward (the proposer and seconder of the testimonial) he felt deeply grateful for the kind manner in which they had been pleased to allude to his humble services. He wished them to believe that the honor they had thus conferred upon him, and the handsome manner in which they had shown it, were infinitely more prized by him than was the jewel for its intrinsic worth. It was a pleasing reflection to him that during his year of Mastership there never was the slightest dissension in the lodge, for the brethren all displayed that unanimity and good feeling so essential to the welfare, prosperity, and happiness of every community. Might that unanimity and good feeling long continue among them, and might the beautiful precepts of Masonry be extended until there should be "peace upon earth and goodwill among men."—The lodge having been closed, the brethren adjourned to refreshment, which was enlivened by some excellent playing on the lodge harmonium (in the absence of Bro. Louis Wright, Organist), by Bro. Saunders, and several appropriate songs were sung.

SCARBOROUGH.—Old Globe Lodge, No. 200.—This lodge met in the lodge room, on Wednesday, the 17th March, the following officers and members being present:—Bros. W. Peacock, W.M.; W. F. Rooke, P.P.G.J.W., P.M.; H. A. Williamson, P.M.; H. C. Martin, P.P.G.D. Cers., P.M.; Hon. Sec.; R. R. Peacock, S.W.; D. Fletcher, J.W.; G. H. Walshaw, S.D.; J. Parker, J.D.; G. Ruddock, I.G.; Ash, Tyler; Verity, Hardgrave, Breray, Garnett, Drake, Walker, Milner, Fairbank, Mervin, Groves, Chapman, J. Thompson; Horsfall (130) and Evans (139), visitors. The lodge was opened at 7:30 p.m., and the minutes read and confirmed. Bro. Walker passed an examination in the first degree, retired, and was readmitted and passed in the second degree. The working tools and tracings were explained, and the charge given by Bro. D. Fletcher, J.W., in a very effective and able manner. Bro. Evans (139) was proposed as a joining member, after which the lodge was closed in due form. The brethren retired to refreshment, when the usual loyal toasts were given, and some excellent songs sung by Bros. Walshaw, Grover, Drake, and others.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge No. 279.—An emergency meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Leicester, on Monday, the 15th instant, and was well attended, between thirty and forty brethren being present. The business for which the lodge was summoned was to ballot for, and to initiate, three candidates, and to receive propositions. The chair was taken by the W.M., Bro. Kelly, D.P.G.M., at seven o'clock, and the lodge having been opened, a ballot was taken for George Pearce, Esq., M.D., and Messrs. Henry Thomas Porter and Tarratt, who were unanimously elected, and, being in attendance, were severally initiated into Freemasonry. During the ceremony the musical chants of the degree, as arranged by Bros. Charles Johnson (now of Leicester) and Dr. Hopkins, were performed under the direction of Bro. Crow, Sec. and Organist, and added greatly to its impressiveness. The candidates having returned to the lodge at the completion of the ceremony, the W.M. delivered the lecture on the tracing-board, and the charge on initiation. A gentleman having been proposed as a candidate for initiation at the next meeting, the W.M. proposed as an honorary member Bro. J. F. Kleim, P.M. of No. 21, and a Past Grand Steward, an octogenarian brother who for upwards of thirty years had been a frequent and welcome visitor to the lodge. Bro. Pettifor, P.M. and P.P.G.S.W., seconded the proposition. Bro. Kleim expressed his appreciation of the compliment paid him, stating that as he generally spent the winter in Leicester, he attended the lodge there more frequently than he was able to attend his own lodge in London. The lodge having been closed, the brethren adjourned to refreshment, and spent an hour or two very pleasantly in social intercourse and harmony, Bro. Crow especially delighting the brethren by his admirable performance on the piano of "The Last Rose of Summer," with variations.

LEICESTER.—John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 523.—A monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Leicester, on Tuesday, the 18th inst., under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. A. M. Duff, P.M., 166, and Prov. G.J.D. There were also present P.M.'s Kelly, D.P.G.M.; Brewin, P.P.S.G.W., and P.G. Treas.; and Charles Johnson, P.P.S.G.W., Jersey, and P.G. Org.; Bros. Toller, S.W.; Buzzard, J.W.; Sculthorpe, Secy.; Sergeant, S.D.; Bethrey, P.P.G. Org., as J.D.; G. B. Atkins, Stew.; Warille, I.G.; Bearbridge, Tyler; Morley, Hodges Lewin, and W. Harrison Lewin. The visitors present were Bros. Wm. Ratcliff Bryan, of the Herve and Charnwood Lodge, Loughborough (who attended to obtain the second degree in this lodge), and Hart and Palence, of St. John's Lodge, 279. The lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. Bro. W. R. Bryan, having passed a satisfactory examination, was entrusted, and, having retired, the lodge was opened in the second degree, and he was duly passed as Fellow Craft, after which the W.M. delivered the lecture on the tracing-board. A candidate was due for the third degree, but he not being in attendance the lodge was closed to the first degree, and, after the transaction of some financial business and arrangements being made for the work to be done at the April meeting of the lodge of instruction connected with this lodge and St. John's Lodge 279, the lodge was closed in harmony, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

HARTLEPOOL.—St. Helen's Lodge, No. 531.—A Lodge of Emergency and Master's Lodge was held at the Masonic Hall, Hartlepool, on Thursday, the 18th inst., when there were present Bros. T. Forbes, W.M.; Emra Holmes, I.P.M.; J. Groves, J.P., P.P.S.G.D., P.M.; S. Armstrong, P.M.; W. J. Sive-wright, P.M.; J. J. Armstrong, S.W.; R. Ropner, J.W.; E. Alexander, Secretary; &c., &c. The lodge having been opened in the usual form, Bros. King, Pearson, and Attley, candidates for the degree of F.C., were severally examined, entrusted, and passed to that degree, the lodge being previously opened in the second degree. In accordance with the lodge notice, the W.M. proposed that the sum of £5 5s. should be given towards the Zetland Testimonial; but, on the amendment of Bro. S. Armstrong, it was decided that £3 3s. only should be given from the funds of the lodge, as it was understood that private subscriptions would also be collected from the members. After an animated discussion upon the subject, Bro. J. Groves, P.M., proposed, and Bro. Emra Holmes, P.M., seconded a motion that £10 10s. be given from the funds of St. Hilda's church, Hartlepool; which sum was generously voted for that worthy and truly masonic object. No other business being before the meeting the lodge was closed in ancient form and with solemn prayer, and the brethren retired for refreshment.—Our archaeological brethren are probably aware that the parish church of St. Hilda, at Hartlepool, is one of the oldest in the county of Durham, having been built by one of the De Brus, who were Lords of Hartness from the time of the Conqueror till 1314, when their descendant, Robert de Brus, fought the battle of Bannockburn and won the crown of Scotland. St. Hilda's church is supposed to have been erected about A.D. 1120. The foundation charter of the monastery of Gisburn, in the year 1129, recites that Robert de Brus, moved by the advice of Pope Calixtus II. and Thurstone, Archbishop of York, founded a monastery of regular canons, and gave to the church of the same the whole of Gisburn and the churches of Hart and Stranton. In the year 1195, Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, granted to the church of the Blessed Mary, at Gisburn, the church of Hart and chapel of Hartlepool. In the year 1308 Anthony Bek, Bishop of Durham, and Patriarch of Jerusalem, as a mark of his special favour, granted to the Prior and Convent of Gisburn the indulgence that in the church of Hart and chapel of Hartlepool, where the cure of souls had previously been exercised by a secular vicar, divine service should after that time be perpetually performed by a canon of Gisburn. A brief was granted by George I. on the 5th February, 1719, to collect the sum of £1732 and upwards, for repairing and rebuilding the church. By the minutes of a meeting of Sir John Eden with some of the commissioners for the brief September 22nd, 1721, it was agreed that "in respect to ye glory of ye antiquity of sd. church what repairs ye windows may want they shall be wrought after ye same model as they now are; and as for ye chancel, yt. is referred until ye Earle of Scarborough's consent is got in writing; and yt. ye steeple both in and outside be repaired." In 1724, the chancel, which was 70 feet long, was shortened to about 15 feet. About two years since, the nave and aisles were restored by public subscription at a cost of £2400, and a movement is now on foot to restore and enlarge the chancel to something like its original size and grandeur, at a cost of £1500, of which nearly £900 has been promised. So good an object cannot fail to recommend itself to the charitably disposed Freemasons, whose ancestors no doubt built this and many other of our grandest structures, and we cordially recommend our brethren to imitate the Masons of Hartlepool and subscribe a mite towards the restoration of the old Collegiate Church. [We are indebted to the late Bro. Sir Cuthbert Sharpe (sometime Herald of the Royal Kent Encampment of Knights Templar, at Newcastle) for the notes on St. Hilda's church, which are taken from his interesting "History of Hartlepool."]

WHITEHAVEN.—Lewis Lodge, No. 872.—The adjourned monthly meeting of 872 Lodge was held in the Lodge Rooms, College-street, Whitehaven, on Monday, the 22nd, at 7:30 p.m. Present the W.M., Bro. Spittal in the chair; Bros. C. Morton, P.P.S.G.W.; J. Barr, P.M., Sec.; Hughes; W. Whittle, S.W.; R. Foster, J.W.; H. Ellis, S.D.; W. Gill, I.G. The lodge being opened, the minutes of the preceding meeting were confirmed. Notice was given of the intended visit of Lord Kenlis, on the 7th April next, and all were earnestly requested to attend. Brothers Rodgers, Dabyel, and Gregory were passed to the second degree. Bro. C. Morton, P.P.S.G.W., gave in a most impressive style the lecture on the first tracing-board in a manner which commanded the attention of all. A large number of Brethren were present belonging to lodges 119 and 872. The lodge was closed, and the brethren retired to the refreshment-room and enjoyed themselves in a pleasant and agreeable manner. Some harmony having been rendered by several brethren, the musical part being effectively conducted by Bro. Cooper, a well spent evening was brought to a happy and fraternal close.

IVYBRIDGE.—Lodge Erme, No. 1091.—The annual festival of this flourishing young lodge was celebrated at the King's Arms Hotel, Ivybridge, on Wednesday last week, under the presidency of Brother John Harris, who was on that day installed W.M. for the ensuing year. After the ceremony of installation, which was ably and impressively performed by Brother Chapple, P.M., assisted by Brothers Littleton, P.M.; Bird, P.M.; and Hawton, P.M.; the W.M. appointed and invested his officers as follows:—Brothers W. Littleton, I.P.M.; Percival J. N. Jarratt, S.W.; W. H. Ley, J.W.; J. Hawton, Treasurer; Patterson, S.D.; W. Sawyer, J.D.; J. Hamley, I.G.; A. White, D.C.; J. E. Morgan, Steward. The banquet, at which about 30 sat down, did great credit to Brother Toms. After the usual and loyal toasts, Brother Littleton proposed the health of the W.M., Brother Harris, who suitably replied. Brother Percival J. N. Jarratt then presented the I.P.M., Brother W. Littleton, with a beautiful P.M. jewel and a life subscribership to the Masonic Boys' School, in recognition of the able manner in which he performed the duties of the office just vacated by him. Brother Littleton, in a very neat speech, returned thanks.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

LANCASTER.—Consecration of the Rowley Chapter, No. 1051.—The Rowley Lodge, although it has been established but a very few years, has already earned itself a well-merited reputation, and holds a high position amongst the lodges of the province of West Lancashire. We have now to record the formation and consecration of a Royal Arch Chapter, to be called the Rowley Chapter, in connection with the lodge. This ceremony of consecration took place on Monday, the 15th March, at the Masonic Rooms, Athenæum, Lancaster, and was conducted, by appointment of the M.E. Superintendent, by Companion A. C. Mott, of Liverpool, P.M., P.Z. 241, Prov. G.S.B., who occupied the chair of Z; assisted by Companion E. Busher, of Kendal, P.M., P.Z., 129, as H., and Companion Kearne, of Liverpool, P.M., P.Z., 241, as J. There were also present, Companion R. Wilson, J., 241, Companions J. W. Baker, 241; J. C. Baker, 241; Welch, 241; Whimpray; John Bell, 129; and the Companions of the New Chapter, viz:—Companion, J. Daniel Moore, P.M., 1051; William H. Bagnall, P.M., 281; Thomas Mason, W.M., 1051; Hall, S.W., 1051; Mercer, J.W., 1051; and Barker, Treas., 1051. The Chapter having been opened, Companion Mott, as Z., called upon Companion Dr. Moore, the acting S.E., to state the wishes of the Companions and the proceedings they had taken with respect to the Chapter, and also to read the Petition and Warrant. The Companions, at the instance of the M.E.Z., then signified their approval of the officers named in the Warrant to preside over the Chapter, and Companion Kearne, in an admirable manner delivered the oration. The ceremony of consecration was then proceeded with, the principals designate carrying the corn, wine, and oil. Companion Welch presided at the organ. Immediately after the ceremony of consecration, Companion Mott proceeded to install the principals, as follows:—Companions Dr. Moore as M.E.Z., Bagnall as H., and Mason as J.; and the following officers were also appointed; Companions Hall, Scribe, E.; Whittle, Scribe, N.; Dr. Mercer, P.S.; Barker, Treas. The M.E.Z. then proposed a vote of thanks to Excellent Companion Mott for his services as consecrator, and to Companions Busher, Kearne, Wilson, and others who had assisted in the ceremony. The M.E.Z. then proposed as honorary members of the Chapter, Companions Mott, P.Z., 241; Busher, P.Z., 129; W. B. Smith, P.Z., 74, and Bowas, P.Z. 129; and as joining members, Companions John Bell, of Lancaster, 129, and John L. Whimpray, late of 350, Lancaster. He also proposed as candidates for exaltation, Bro. J. M. Moore, 1051; Fred. Dean, P.M., 281; W. Storey, P.M., 281; J. Fenton, P.M., 281; E. Storey, W.M., 281; and, by dispensation from the M.E. Pro. G. Supt., Bro. R. Taylor, 281; as serving Companions. There being no other business before the Chapter, it was closed in due form. The furniture of the new Chapter was of an excellent description, and was chiefly supplied by Companion G. Kenning, of London. We augur great success to the Rowley Chapter, from the names with which it is connected, several of whom are well known to the Craft, and venture to predict that the officers will, by the amount of work that will devolve upon them, find that the appointments they have received will be no sinecure.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

METROPOLITAN.

Plantagenet Preceptory of Instruction.—At an assembly of this preceptory held on the 18th inst. at the Lyceum Tavern, Strand, it was resolved by the members present to form a "Masonic Charities' Association" in connection with the Order, upon the plan of the "South Eastern Association," which has effected so much good for the Masonic Institutions. Bro. Little was elected Treasurer, and Bro. Walters Secretary of the new association.

PROVINCIAL.

GUERNSEY.—The Doyle Conclave.—The regular assembly of the Doyle Conclave No. 7, took place on Friday, the 19th inst. Present, Illustrious Sir Knt. Gallienne, Inspector-General of the Guernsey Division, M.P.S., in the chair; Illus. Sir Knt. Millington, P.S., as Eusebius; Illus. Sir Knt. Hutchinson, K.G.C., P.S., Treasurer; Illus. Sir Knt. Clarke, P.S., Recorder; Sir Knts. Guilbert, J.G.; Stickland, H.P.; Willcocks, as Herald; Rowe, Organist; Lucas, Carey, and Muntz. The Conclave was opened in usual form, after which a consultation arose respecting the regalia. Patterns of aprons, sashes, swords, and jewels had been received from Sir Knt. Kenning, which were exhibited, but the feeling of the Conclave appeared to be that a tunic was the more becoming regalia for a Military Order, and they therefore desired to avail themselves of the option offered in the general statutes to obtain permission from the G. Sovereign to wear the tunic. The Recorder was consequently requested to put himself in communication with the Grand Recorder on the subject. After a few minor items of business were got through, the Conclave was closed in form, and the Knt. Companions repaired to the banquet-hall, where they spent a most agreeable evening.

JERSEY.—Concord Conclave, No. 8.—An assembly of this Conclave was held recently at the Masonic Temple, Stopford-road, St. Helier's, when the following brethren were installed as Knights of the Order:—Bros. Philip G. Gaudin (877), John R. S. Giles, W.M. (1003), H. Barrett (244), E. Conolly (478), and Wm. Marshall (244). The ceremony was ably rendered by the M.P.S., Sir Kt. Benham, the V.E. Michael Tracy, and the other officers.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

I.—MASONRY AND REFRESHMENT.

It is strange to see with what greediness this ayrie chameleon, being all lungs and wind, will swallow a recite of newes, as if it were physical! Yea, with what frontle-se insinuation he will screw himself into the acquaintance of some knowing intelligencer, who, trying the cask by his hollow sound, do familiarly fule him.—Whimzies.

The only way in which a rough ashlar can be properly understood is by regarding the object as capable of improvement. The only object for which a labourer can be supposed to work is reward. Perfection in his work renders him authorised to receive it. Hence, that rough ashlar, properly subordinated in the human heart, gives the workman a title to reward, which is the guerdon of his labours, and consists in the ease which refreshment brings. That all men ought to be happy is no reason that any should be exempt from labour. Hence, again, we find it necessary to state the conditions on which the ease resulting from refreshment depends. And this can only exist in perfect activity, such as T.G.A.O.T.U. alone has the property and privilege to exercise.

Were no wages to be paid, no man would be perfectly warranted in having refreshment; therefore the refreshment authorized by Masonic laws becomes the wages, justly due, of the Masonic labourer. When, according to Masonic tradition, the Temple was built, the bearers of burthen received subsistence at least; and it is not to be supposed that the F.C.'s and M.M.'s, now so charitable, would be less generous from the liberal resources assigned them by K.S. towards their humbler and not freeborn associates. The very fact of there being a series of degrees ultimating in charity towards the human race, implies a liberality towards early Cowans. The Hebrew State having so great an object could not justly be ungenerous. If, then, in these papers by an earnest critic of Masonry there be, as there must be, many errors, it is anticipated that the dog will be allowed an unmolested bark, caution being given that, so far as his opinion will allow, his aim will be, not "to bay the moon," but to afford from the generous resources at his disposal some semi-shadows refracted from the Great Light.

There is a large field of Masonic literature open to the general student of associative enterprise; and from these the present writer will cull a few morsels for the banquet, in a manner at once digestible by Brother and Stranger.

The very fact that refreshment notoriously forms a portion of Masonic labour has been construed, for a century and a half, to the disadvantage of those associating themselves with the Masonic body. It would seem as if there existed a famine in the land eaten up by one body of men only; the fact of their paying being an item out of the balance-sheet. Nobody thinks of blaming aldermen, vestrymen, and philanthropists who meet to guzzle and make charitable collections under the ægis of a popular man. That being non-masonic is popular, and men rush to buy tickets for independent dinners—or take them gratis, when they can get them—or in guilds assume them as right of livery. The first description of banquet is upheld as an English mode of begging, the last as a proper way of encouraging dyspepsia; and in the last the guilds of non-masons forget that their indentures recite for their apprentices "arts and mysteries," as the Masons did in a time of Operative Masonry. If the guild of Barbers dine they do not give a thought to soapbuds, while they regard the Masonic rule of refreshment as bubbling everybody. The Masonic body institutes some temperate refreshment, as the Church commemorates a certain supper, and in the ancient Christian "love-feasts" it is nowhere thought to be insisted that there should necessarily be any degree of intemperance.

This having been charged by the uninformed, becomes desirable of disproof, and though there may have been excess, the Masonic rules of all ages reprove anything of the kind.

In what is the Mason more justified in expending the wages he receives than in re-edifying the corporeal frame, by the instrumentality of which he is enabled to perfect his incorporeal essence for admission into the Grand Lodge not made with hands and where the sound of no working tool is heard? The German writer, Novalis, says, "You touch Heaven when you lay hands on a human body;" and the apostle Paul says (Romans xiv. 7), "He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not." And while he says (Romans xiv. 20), "For meat destroy not the work of God," he adds, "All things, indeed, are pure, but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence," thus enjoining temperance at meat. Again he says (1 Cor. iii. 16) "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you?" Man thus being the temple of God, and the Masons especially being labourers towards its re-edification, the mortal frame requires of us the same sustenance that spiritually is received by the manna coming from above, of which each received his due measure, whether he gathered little or much.

In the ancient published Constitutions, patent to all the world, the Free and Accepted Mason was not only enjoined temperance, but punctuality in the payment for what he consumed, such ensuring an adequate provision in the future, by inspiring confidence and husbanding the resources at command. Hence we find all lodges of Masons conclude the celebration of their work with refection, in a joyful manner according to the circumstances of the individuals forming the lodge, the law of hospitality being extended to the visitor who brings the proper tessera. The banquet at a lodge, therefore, may be regarded as doubly symbolical, and the change in our national manners has enabled Masons to apply it more fully and purify its essential meaning.

It appears hard to the writer, therefore, why on the part of the general public this charge of profuseness of living should be constantly reiterated. "Ah! but," some will exclaim, "it is well known that Masons are profuse in their banquets!" as if they—Cowans—had been present, which is impossible. It also naturally follows that Freemasons must be charged with similar intemperance in their own homes and elsewhere when not masonically engaged, and that the whole Craft must consequently be a hypocritical affair—in which men known as the greatest benefactors to their race, noble in intellect, patriotic in effort, devout in bearing, and generally charitable to their fellow-men, universally coincide for the mere purpose of guzzling and swilling together some few times a year! a manifest absurdity, carrying its own refutation.

The writer has selected this point as the first to be brought forward because it is an universal imputation, even in the mouths of good and sincere non-masons, and one which, if persisted in, must always remain an objection in the minds of thoughtless opponents.

One of the cardinal principles of Masonry consists in its non-proselytizing character. No man can be directly asked to join the Masonic guild; a protective rule in itself of some importance, both as a shield and an incentive. As a shield, because it admits to its feast of charity only those who feel sincere inclination to join, thus being a double test of steadfastness; as an incentive, because equality and humility are the Caudine Forks under which the aspirant passes to obtain a real victory over self, and by which an actual spirit of charity is generated.

Freemasons properly say that there are a vast number of men who are true Masons though uninitiated, and this they echo in their songs. Some of these songs are the spontaneous tribute of minds ordinary, perhaps, in themselves, but instinct with the appreciation of good for the sake of good. While general literature remains a portion of their general inheritance they invoke their own muse in the interest of the gentlest of the Graces, and if many songs sung in Masonic lodges evince no great degree of talent, they evoke a spirit of kindly emulation not lightly to be passed over.

In all organizations some join from interested motives, but these cases are not numerous. In Masonry an allotted time is given for due inquiry into the lives and motives of candidates, and a man who can pass the ordeal has much to congratulate himself upon. Admission into a Masonic lodge is, in most cases, a certificate of character; and a fearless bearing in initiation confers a nobility on the initiate nowhere else, in so large a degree, to be obtained. To be a Mason, properly speaking, the individual must bear a stainless character, and to be an earnest one is alike a privilege and an advantage. This the public does not weigh in its verdict. May it do so!

At Masonic banquets, creed, political opinion, and personal ambition must be laid aside, and the stability of any State may be judged by the number of admitted Masons. I do not wish to say that views of diverse kinds may not be held, but they are out of place on this platform of broad humanity and catholic kindness. The Masonic policy, as that of every Christian should be, is universal Love and Aid.

I speak thus freely because the magnanimity and openness with which illustrious Masons have spoken in their philosophical and historical works has rendered it possible for a large class of students to master a general idea of the objects of Masonry. Of that class of students the present writer is one, and his wish in the short course of papers he offers to the readers of THE FREEMASON is to acquit himself of some of the obligations he owes to those many writers who have treated of Freemasonry reasonably and without animosity to detractors.

Masons and non-Masons, whether Lewises (as is the writer) or Cowans (as he still is), let us seek for the Light in Him in whom is no darkness at all!

LODGE OF HOPE, NEWBURY, No. 574—A Council Chamber of the above lodge will be held on Friday, the 2nd April, at 8 o'clock.

We are informed that Bro. Dundas, the nephew and heir pre-umptive to the Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M., was passed to the second degree in the Prince of Wales' Lodge, No. 259, at Willis's Rooms St. James's, on the 23rd inst.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

[Announcements of Births, Marriages, and Deaths relating to the Craft, or their families, will be inserted, free of charge, if properly authenticated.]

BIRTH.

THWAITES.—On March 13th, at the "Old Hall," Cocker-mouth, the wife of Bro. S. Thwaites, of a daughter.

DEATH.

GLADWIN.—On the 19th March, at his residence Rugby House, Warwick-street, Regent-street, William Gladwin, aged 62 years, much respected and regretted by all who knew him.—[Bro. Gladwin was initiated in the Robert Burns Lodge, No. 25 on the 2nd October, 1854, served the office of Master in 1859-60, and continued a member up to the time of his death.—Ed. F.]

Answers to Correspondents.

SPHINX.—Thanks for your good opinion; your suggestions shall have due attention. The brother to whom you allude has no connection with THE FREEMASON, and as we cheerfully recognise all lawfully-constituted authority, both in and out of the Craft, we are not likely to engage such a moral Ishmael.

ASHLAH. We doubt much if you will ever find a "fair and candid" statement of the charges brought by the Roman Catholic priesthood against Freemasonry. The bulls of various Pontiffs will give you an idea of their hatred of the Craft, and the works of the Abbé Barruel and of Professor Robertson, of Dr. Cullen's Dublin Catholic University, will prove how "fairly" they estimate the Order. Cardinal Cullen invariably classes Freemasonry with Fe-nianism and Ribbonism to the disgust of all unprejudiced Roman Catholics. The works of Oliver, Ragon, Mackey, and Findel being expositions of the principles of the Craft, contain sufficient answers to the malignant falsehoods of the priesthood, but the best answer is to point to the works of mercy and charity in daily practice amongst the members of the Order.

ALLEGORICAL TEACHINGS.

THERE are few subjects less understood, even by Freemasons, than the allegorical science of Freemasonry. We must travel back through the mist of ages—through the accumulated dust of centuries—before we arrive at the first triumphs of that divine architecture, which had its impress from the hand of God. We must trace, as it were, step by step, the advance of that noble art which has substituted the marble palace for the mud-built habitation. We must follow it through its successive developments—under the ban of slavery, in the glimmering dawn of freedom and the radiant sun-rise of civilization—and we shall then realize its spiritual as well as its material aspects. Even at the present day, we can contrast the hut of the Zulu, or the clay-built domicile of the Bosjesman, with the palatial and luxurious houses of the great; we can compare the barn with the cathedral; and it is in this spirit that we must contemplate the moral victories of Freemasonry.

What grander allegory of the life of man can be imagined than the wonders achieved in the domain of architecture. From those rude and savage caves we have emerged into the lofty domes of pillared temples—a symbol of our growth in knowledge, a type of our progress in wisdom. And as the mansions which we rear upon this sublunary sphere—however beautiful, however perfect—will bear no comparison to the everlasting abodes which Jehovah has prepared for the least of his servants, let it be our constant aim, so to purify the moral edifice of our souls as to be able to realize that pure and incomparable Freemasonry which exists in the mysterious depths of those unknown regions where the light shines for ever and "darkness is not."

LODGE OF BENEVOLENCE.

The Lodge of Benevolence held its monthly meeting on Wednesday evening, the 24th inst., when 29 cases were investigated, of which 27 were relieved to the extent of £397; one was dismissed and one deferred.

The chairman of the evening was Bro. H. Browse, J.G.D., supported by Bros. J. Mason, P.G.S.B. as S.W.; and W. Ongle, A.G.P. as J.W.; and a large number of Grand Officers, Masters, and Past Masters of various Lodges in the Metropolis, were also present.

A RED CROSS SONG.

By R. WENTWORTH LITTLE.

Let's rally round the standard
Which blazed on high of yore,
A symbol of our dearest hopes—
A sign for evermore.
Beneath that starry banner
Our fathers fought and bled,
And we will bear it still aloft
As did the glorious dead.
Then rally round the standard, &c.
That Red Cross flag has ever waved
Above the brave and true,
Whose swords were drawn in honour's cause—
For Faith and Freedom, too.
Their mighty deeds are now enshrined
In Fame's resplendent dome,
And ages yet unborn shall bless
Those noble Knights of Rome!
Then rally round the standard, &c.

And now beloved brethren
Let this be understood,
Them who seek to join our band
Must be both wise and good—
All who are Masons in their hearts
And filled with zeal divine,
Most gladly will be welcomed by The Knights of Constantine!

Then rally round the standard
Which blazed on high of yore,
That symbol of our faith and love
We'll prize for evermore.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

[Under this head, in future, we purpose answering correspondents on Masonic law.]

Mackey defines the laws of Masonry as being of two kinds—local and universal. The local laws are those enacted by Grand and subordinate lodges for the government of their members. These, of course, may be altered or annulled at the pleasure of the bodies who originally framed them. The universal laws are those handed down by universal consent from times immemorial, and which govern the fraternity throughout the world. These are irrevocable, for they constitute a part of the ancient landmarks.

The Officers of all lodges in Dublin must be "passed" by a Committee of Inspection, and the names of all candidates for initiation must also be submitted for the approval or rejection of the same Committee. These are also very salutary regulations and must tend to promote the true interests of the Order in the Sister Kingdom.

DELTA.—Upon the non-confirmation of the minutes relating to the election of a Master, a fresh election cannot take place on the same evening, nor can the election be held at a Lodge of Emergency. The Book of Constitutions is perfectly clear upon these points.

P.M.—You have been misinformed; the G.M., in the exercise of his prerogative, has a right to nominate any Master Mason as the first W.M. of a new lodge, notwithstanding the fact that the brother may never have held office in a lodge. In like manner, any companion, provided he be an I.M., may be the first Z. of a new chapter.

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

Cagliostro, the charlatan, lodged at the house of one Reilly, an innkeeper, in Great Queen-street. This house, I have reason to believe, is the tavern now called the "Hercules Pillars," nearly opposite Freemasons' Hall.—VIATOR.

The Dove.—This is the emblem of the Deacon's office in English Freemasonry; the dove, or "Noah's Messenger," aptly representing diaconal duties. The Columba Nouchi is also one of the constellations.—VIATOR.

The Serpent.—The serpent has ever been considered an emblem of wisdom, and, with its tail in its mouth, it symbolizes eternity. Mosheim informs us (Eccles. History, vol. I. page 189) that a sect of Christians arose in the second century called Ophites, or Serpentinians, who maintained that the serpent by which Eve was tempted was either Christ himself, or Sophia (the eternal wisdom), concealed under the reptile's form; and consequently they nourished a number of serpents, which they regarded as sacred and to which they paid a secondary degree of divine honours.—R. W. L.

Rosic Rite.—Care must be taken not to confound the Red Cross Degree with the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine; my impression is that the latter was unknown in this country last century, but the Red Cross banner of the Templar was fathered upon the Order of St. Constantine, and the motto appeared upon the Templars' seal of 1791, and its pass word was one of the Templar secrets in the Dunckerley ritual.—JOHN YARKER, Manchester.

LODGE REPORTS.—Hint to Reporters.—What interest can provincial brethren possibly take in long lists of attendants at lodges, or in knowing who drank Brother Blank's health or how he replied? This bore has always stood in the way of success to the Masonic Press, and the small space at your disposal might be much better occupied than in self glorification. Why should lodges trouble us to read what has no interest?—DELTA.

The Age of Christ.—The number "33" is adopted in many Orders connected with Freemasonry as the correct number of the years of Christ's sojourn on earth. The exactness of this period having been disputed, the following astronomical calculation may be interesting. The great founder of Christianity was crucified on the day before the Jewish Sabbath, and the crucifixion must have taken place on Friday, the 3rd April, in the 33rd year of his age, as that was the only Friday on which a passover full moon fell from the twentieth to the fortieth year of our Lord, reckoning from the vulgar era of his birth.—ANTIQUARIUS.

Ancient and Accepted Rite.—Many thanks for Brother Yarker's letter relative to the Rose Croix degree. Few better than that well-known Brother are capable of writing on the subject, but I beg still to disagree with him in some respects. Will he kindly favour me with a copy of any certificate mentioning the Templar degree which connects the 17th or any other chivalric degree with Masonry before A.D. 1770? Bro. Yarker cannot produce any evidence of "high grade" Masonry being mentioned A.D. 1705 by Philip of Orleans. At that date even modern Freemasonry was unknown, and even the term "Grand Master" was not used. It is to be wished that Bro. Yarker would continue his most interesting history of the Jerusalem Encampment, Manchester, in the columns of THE FREEMASON.—ROSE CROIX.

Mystic Numbers.—Living in a land which is full of mysteries, my desire is to obtain knowledge. Will some learned Frater explain the secret of the undermentioned mystic numbers in their present position?

SPECIMENS FROM A MASONIC QUARRY.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 131 TRURO,
Author of "History of Freemasonry in Cornwall," "Sparks from a Mason's Anvil," &c.; Masonic Correspondent of "The Voice of Freemasonry," for England; Corresponding Member of "German Masonic Union," &c.

SPECIMEN NO. 1.—OPERATIVE MASONIC LODGES. ST. JOHN'S, BANFF, SCOTLAND.

Some of the foregoing laws of A.D. 1765 are certainly singular, while others seem framed with due regard to order and sobriety. It will be seen that at that date, as well as subsequently, the lodge was still of an operative character, and was in reality a Benefit Society, only of a secret nature. It continues so even to this day, although of course now, the BENEFITS are separated from the lodge Masonically. But more of this hereafter. The method of admission by petition, mentioned in Law 6th prevails in Scotland, and cannot be highly commended.

The Petitioner has to sign the following declaration, addressed to the Master for the time being.

SIR,—Having a desire to be initiated into the Mysteries of Freemasonry, in connection with the Lodge over which you preside, if agreeable to that body, I shall feel obliged by your appointing a suitable time for that purpose, and I hereby bind myself to conform to their Rules and Regulations.

My age at last birthday was _____
I am yours, &c., _____

Name.....
Designation.....
Address.....

This petition has to be signed in addition by two members to the following effect:—"We, the undersigned, do recommend Mr. _____, as a candidate for admission into Membership, and hereby vouch for him accordingly."

But we will again introduce a few more records to our readers, believing them to be equally valuable with the last:—

"Resolved that hence forward a Meeting shall be called ten days or so Before the Annual General Meeting to Settle a Dinner, and that all the Members in a Publick way shall have it by Rotation, beginning at the First whose name stands in our Books.

"That no Geometrical mason shall be Entered, Passed, or Raised without Readie-money.

"That an Operative master's Apprentice shall have Credit untill St. John's day first after their entry upon good Security, But that all the Members in Banff and Down shall be called, so that if any Objections shall hapen the Petitioner shall be rejected.

"That John Stewart is to get Five Pounds Ster. for this year in mouthly proportions.

"That William Laurence shall Ten Shillings Ster. as was usewally given befor, but it is not to be Continued for the future. But if the Deput Master of Aberdeen Shall be put to extraordinary expenses in attending this meeting he has still access to apply.

"Every member who's name is not 'nroled in the Grand Lodge Books shall be Searched out and Inroled.

"That no master of the Lodge of Banff shall employ any Cowons, unless he make it appear it was a Case of Necessity. Otherwise he his liable to the Cognisance of the next General Meeting

"J. ROBERTSON, Master."

"Att a Meeting held in the Operative Lodge of Banff upon the 14th day of December, one Thousand seven Hundred and seventy-three years. It is Resolved to have two new Hearses, and the Master impoured to give derrections about them, as likewise to have three Sashes, and William Stephen was appointed to make a Cushon for the Bible

"As also agreeable to the Resolution of last St. John's day, Robert Laing is appointed to provide a Denner for the Brethren against St. John's day next, and the number agreed upon to be Sixty, and in case of a deficiency of that number Robert Laing to be indemnefied out of the fund.

"JA. ROBERTSON, Master."

"Att the Annuall Meeting of the Operative Lodge of Banff 7 January, 1774, Resolved that as George Faith had mis-managed the Deputation Bearing date at Banff, 5th October, 1773, Deputing him to Enter Alex Grant and Willm Farskin at Turriff. He is hereby deserned by the meeting to pay in Five Shillings to the fund by way of Fine.

"It is Resolved by the Lodge that after that date no Bills, to be taken for Entering, Passing, or Raising butt all readie-money.

"It is Resolved that no Brother that is not Raised to the degree of a Master Mason is not to undertake or Carrie on work.

"Resolved that there is to be a Procession at founding some of the Peirs of the Bridge of Banff, and that a Guinea shall be given to the Workmen out of the Fund, but that the Expence of the Meeting shall not affect the fund, but the persons present shall Defray the Charges thereof.

"Resolved that every person Entered to our Lodge, and Every Brother passed a Fellow Craft, or Raised to the Degree of Master shall at their Entry Passing, or Raising, treat the Brethren present to the rate of Three Shillings Ster."

"Resolutions of the Annual Evening meeting, 8th January 1776.

"Resolved That for the Future that there should be a Clearance of the Books of the Operative Lodge every year, the night before St. John's day.

THE RAISING OF THE BEAUSEANT.

By PROFESSOR ATTOUN,

And recited at a Festival of the Knights Templars of the Metropolitan Priory of Scotland.

Fling out the Temple banner as of old!

Age hath not stained the whiteness of its fold,
Nor marred the ruddy cross, Salvation's sign.

Once more we lift the sacred standard up—

Companions, fill the cup—

We pledge the Beauseant in this sparkling wine!

Oh! what a valiant host have fought and bled
Beneath that banner to the wind outspread,
Since first it moved against the infidel!
Who knows not how it waved on Salem's towers,
When Acre, Ramla, Nazareth were ours,
And at Tiberias fell?

Fell with the Knights who bore it to the field,
When foulest treason broke the Christian shield,
And bade the Turkish crescent-sign advance!—
Fell but to rise again with triple pride,

When, bounding o'er the tide,
The armies came of England and of France!

And who is he, the leader of that band,
Who first sets foot upon the Holy Land?
Move on, unrivall'd champion that thou art!
Shout, Brethren, shout! aloft your banners fling—
'Tis he, the Christian's hope, the island king—
Richard, the Lion-heart!

Then Acre fell—the Moslem foe went back,
And still our brethren followed on their track,
And ever in the van of battle flew
The sacred Beauseant, like a meteor star
Shedding its wrath afar
Upon the foul and unbelieving crew.

Unvanquished still—till fraud, not force, combined
With basest envy in a despot's mind,
Dragged from its staff that glorious emblem down
And poured, like water, forth the guiltless blood,
When Jacques Molay, the valiant and the good,
Received his martyr-crown

Then perished all—Yet no; on Scottish ground
Some remnant of the Templars still was found,
Whom even treason did not dare to quell.
Walter de Clifton! honoured be thy name!
Who, braving death and shame,
Didst vindicate thine Order's truth so well.

Years passed away, ere yet the warring world
Beheld again the Templar's flag unfurled;
But England saw the Rosy Cross return
Once more to light, and scattering dismay
Within their ranks upon that glorious day
When Bruce won Bannockburn!

Then raise it up, Companions, once again,
Though now it wave not in the battle plain;
True hearts are here to guard its spotless fold,
For ever honoured be the Templar's name,
For ever dear their fame—
Fling out the Beauseant banner as of old!

PAST MASTERS AS PRECEPTORS.

"Perhaps a defect of the Order may be some day found in the exuberant wealth of human material at its disposal. There are so many good and active spirits ready to give up time and money to the cause, that its principal honours are almost necessarily confined to those immediately known to the Grand Master and his advisers. The result is that the energetic Mason finds his circle of usefulness and distinction confined to the lodge or coterie in which he works; and that he, as a rule, becomes less actively zealous when the highest honours of his lodge have been earned. A Past Master who has filled the chair satisfactorily will, as a rule, fold his robe and fall with decency in other words, content himself with the passive performance of the almost nominal duties left him. As a permanent member of Grand Lodge—the Parliament of the Craft—he may, it is true, mingle in debate four times a year, but the chances of obtaining rank or position there are far more remote than they would be to an energetic member of St. Stephen's. This is, as it seems, unavoidable, but the effect is that the men who are the most energetic up to the time of their passing the chairs of their respective lodges become comparatively supine when that honour has been achieved. Their career terminates then and there, and as they have all subscribed to the charities, there is no Masonic opening to them, except to subscribe again. This, to do them justice, they generally do, but the man who hits upon a method of keeping alive in the great body of Masonic Past Masters the zeal which has given them their rank will deserve better of the Order than any dignitary since King Solomon."

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—The above remarks are to be found in an article which lately appeared in the Daily News, under the heading of "The Prince of Wales a Freemason." They are worthy of the earnest consideration of every lover of Freemasonry, and it is not unlikely that a full discussion of the means whereby the active energies of those Past Masters who have the welfare of the Craft at heart may be continued, will result beneficially. It may be presumptuous in me to think that any suggestions I might offer would avail to that end, as I can have but little, if any, influence. Nevertheless, I have a desire to ascertain whether my ideas on the subject are in accord with those of other brethren, and with that view ask from you the favour of a space in THE FREEMASON.

If I intrude a brief history of my Masonic career, it is not in any spirit of self-laudation. The objection to the personal pronoun first person singular is shared by me in common with many others. The editorial "we" is far preferable. But desiring to show that at least I write with some knowledge of the Masonic science, I think it right to state that in the course of eleven years I have been a subscribing member of three lodges, have served the various offices from I.G. to W.M., and a three years' subsequent secretaryship in one; have founded one metropolitan lodge of increasing repute; have founded, and passed the principal chairs in, a chapter; have taken degrees beyond those denominated Craft; and am still as enthusiastic in the cause of Freemasonry as at any period during those eleven years. Hence my present letter.

It has struck me that a very wide field for the exercise of the unused-up energies of well-informed Masons might be opened by the establishment of a lodge having for its members those only who are skilled in the working of Craft Masonry, who should be recognised throughout the Order as duly qualified authorities, and form in their collective capacity a Court or Lodge of Appeal, to whom all questions of working and ritual should be referred.

There is no doubt that at present a very great diversity in the mode of working the ceremonies exists, and that in many cases the ritual is very imperfectly observed. Although it may be admitted that the opinion of the then M.W. Grand Master at the Quarterly Communication in December, 1819, "That so long as the Master of any lodge observed exactly the landmarks of the Craft, he was at liberty to give the lectures in the language best suited to the character of the lodge over which he presided," cannot be objected to; still it will certainly be conceded that if perfect uniformity could be attained, it would not only enhance the impressiveness of the several ceremonies, but would greatly conduce to the more correct transmission of the ritual to those who have to follow us.

It is by no means unusual to find that a zealous brother, anxious to make himself acquainted with the beautifully figurative and expressive language of our lectures and sections, has at considerable expenditure of time and attention committed to his memory the teachings of an able instructor, and when desirous of transmitting such instruction to others learns, to his dismay, that he has been taught according to "So-and-so's" system, whereas his new associates practice the system of another equally celebrated past or present member of the Order. To unlearn is more difficult than to learn, and consequently doubts as to what is really correct, and what is probably otherwise, arise to disturb his mind, and instead of becoming himself a confident and able preceptor to others, timidity and hesitation confound him. To such an extent is this the fact, that the production of many witnesses to the dire confusion and consequent failure of many Masters to proceed with a ceremony—despite their thorough knowledge and able oratory, but solely resulting from intrusive correction, frequently of the most unimportant character—would be by no means difficult. This applies equally to the ordinary labours of the lodge as to the working of the sections in lodges and lodges of instruction.

Now, there should be but one ritual—one method of working the ceremonies—one uniform mode of conducting each lodge; and how can this be best secured? There are differences of opinion as to whether this or that system is the best and most perfect; there are individual likings and attachments to the respective teachings which have been received, and it would be both impolitic and useless to attempt to induce the adherents of one system to abandon it and to adopt the other, unless it can be done under such authority as no good Freemason would call into question. That authority is to be found only in the Grand Lodge.

The necessity acknowledged and the authority forthcoming, by what means can the principle of uniformity be carried out? Certainly by no better means than that of exercising the knowledge of those members of the Craft who having taken the highest honour in the power of a lodge to confer, yet retain their acquirements, and have not diminished their zeal, in the science. And how can this be brought about? By aggregating individual perfection, and giving the body so composed a status and reward which should be a crowning glory to all their former labours. It cannot be denied that much of what is very good in Freemasonry, is the result of personal ambition—honourable, and even estimable, ambition, doubtless, yet still ambition. The same desire which animates a man placed on the lowest steps of the social ladder to ascend step by step as far towards its summit as he can, is in the breast of every brother who takes an early liking to Freemasonry, and he eagerly longs for the advanced positions and their accompanying indications. His first aspirations are for the position of a W.M., and when having obtained it and received that emblem of past rank which he can henceforth proudly wear, he must of necessity, if a true Freemason, be still further ambitious. For such should a career be provided, which would at once keep his zeal undiminished, his energies employed, his memory retained, and his ambition exercised.

Cannot this be done by the formation, under the authority of Grand Lodge, of a Special Lodge to be called "The Lodge of Preceptors," not bearing any number, but to be perfectly distinctive. It should be composed only of such Past Masters as could prove to the satisfaction of a Board of Examiners their ability to work in a masterly manner the ceremonies, lectures, and sections throughout. It should be recognised as the sole authority in all matters affecting the landmarks of the Order, and the proper observance of ritual and Masonic working. Its members should be required to agree amongst themselves as to the withdrawal or retention of portions of the rituals, and to adopt such a uniform system as would best conform to a reasonable interpretation of the language of our predecessors. They should also be delegates to the several lodges throughout the country, and as such be enabled to enforce the due performance of the agreed ritual. As such delegates, they should be entitled to a position of honour and respect in the Lodges attended by them in that capacity. The collective body of members should be a Court of Appeal, to which all questions of ritual or ceremony should be referred, and their decisions should have the fullest effect. A seat amongst their body should not be too easily attainable, and certainly should not be open to rank, position, or purchase, but solely to merit and ability. And to incite the desire and ambition of those who would attain a place amongst its members, whatever of honour and dignity could be conferred by supreme authority should be awarded. In fact, it should be so constituted, entrusted, and rewarded, that to the energetic and enthusiastic Mason nothing short of membership therein should satisfy him with his Masonic labours.

I believe the formation of such a Lodge would have a marked effect upon the Order of Freemasonry, and certainly it would stir up to further exertion many of its Past Masters, who now sigh for "fresh fields and pastures new." If any of your readers would take up this subject, and through your pages make suggestions in furtherance of the proposal, or adduce reasons against it, I shall not regret that I have now addressed you, and shall not hesitate to trouble you again.

Yours fraternally,
P.M., P.Z., &c.

Worldly good, to deserving persons requiring aid, does not come by any seeming supernatural power. It comes by means that are perfectly natural. Favourable circumstances occur. It comes from a friendly disposition, a desire to serve, an inclining of the heart—when an angel whispers no word is spoken, but a thought comes most heavenly.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWO GRAND LODGES OF ENGLAND IN RATIFICATION OF THE UNION, 1813.

We have the pleasure of presenting our readers with a reprint of the above proceedings, which we feel confident will be perused with interest.

At an Especial Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, according to the Old Institutions, held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand, on Wednesday, the 1st December, 1813.

PRESENT.

The M.W., H.R.H. the DUKE OF KENT, G.M., on the throne;

The R.W. Thomas Harper, D.G.M.; R.W. James Perry, P.D.G.M.; R.W. James Agar, P.D.G.M.; R.W. Archibald Herron, S.G.W.; R.W. Jeremiah Cranfield, J.G.W.; R.W. Robert Gill, P.S.G.W.; R.W. Thomas Scott, P.S.G.W.; R.W. Malcolm Gillies, P.S.G.W.; R.W. Thomas Mahon, P.S.G.W.; R.W. William Oaks, P.S.G.W.; R.W. Robert Leslie, G.S.; R.W. William C. Clarkson, G.T.; R.W. Rev. Edw. Barry, D.D., G.C.; W. Edwards Harper, D.G.S.; W. Rev. Henry Knapp, D.G.C.; W. Robert McCann, G.S.B.; the Masters, Wardens, and Past Masters of the 58 Lodges in and adjacent to London.

The Grand Lodge was opened with solemn prayer, and in ample form.

The minutes of the Especial Grand Lodge of 8th November, and of the Stewards' Lodge, 17th November, were read and confirmed.

The following Right Worshipful and Worshipful Brothers were severally elected Grand Officers, for the year ensuing or until they should be relieved from the duties thereof; viz.:—R.W. Jeremiah Cranfield, S.G.W.; R.W. Robert McCann, J.G.W.; R.W. Robert Leslie, G.S.; R.W. W. C. Clarkson, G.T.; R.W. Rev. Edward Barry, D.D., G.C.; W. Jonathan Parker, G.S.B.

The Most Worshipful the Grand Master then announced that in consequence of the appointment which he had received from the Grand Lodge upon the 1st of September, in conjunction with the Right Worshipful Brother Harper, Deputy Grand Master, and the R.W. Bros. Perry and Agar, Past Deputy Grand Masters, they had held several conferences with H. R. Highness the Duke of Sussex, Grand Master of the other Fraternity, who was also assisted by three of his Grand Officers—The R.W. Brother Waller Rodwell Wright, Provincial Grand Master of the Ionian Isles, the R.W. Brothers A. Tegar and J. Deans, Past Grand Wardens; the happy result of which, was that articles of Union between the two Grand Lodges of Masons of England were signed and sealed in duplicate at Kensington Palace, on the 25th November last, and His Royal Highness laid the same before the Grand Lodge. The announcement of this great event was received with masonic acclamation, and the said articles were read.

After which the R.W. Brother Perry moved the following resolutions, which were carried in the affirmative unanimously:—

1. That the articles of union now read be Ratified and Confirmed.
2. That the Most Worshipful His Royal Highness the Grand Master be requested and empowered to affix the great seal thereto, and to exchange the same with His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, Grand Master of the other Fraternity.
3. That brotherly application be made to the Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland, enclosing them a copy of the above articles so ratified, and entreating them to delegate two or more enlightened members of their respective bodies to be present at the Assembly of Union, on Monday, the 27th December inst., pursuant to Article IV.
4. That the Grand Master do nominate nine worthy and expert Master Masons, or Past Masters, to discharge the duties set forth in Articles V. and XV.
5. That a special dispensation, under the great seal, be issued to those nine Brothers, and their Secretary, to hold a Lodge of Reconciliation, in conjunction with an equal number to be appointed and empowered by His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, to fulfil the duties set forth and enjoined in the said Articles of Union.
6. That the Masters, Wardens, and past Masters, of the warranted Lodges, do attend the said Lodge of Reconciliation, according to notices to be addressed to them, for the purpose of being obligated, certified, and registered, to entitle them to be present at the Assembly of Masons for the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England, on Monday, the 27th December instant.
7. That the Secretary of the said Lodge of Reconciliation shall keep a book, in which shall be entered the names of all regular Members of Lodges belonging to both Fraternities, so obligated and certified, that they may be registered, without fee or reward, in the books of the two Grand Lodges, and be thereby entitled to tickets of admission to the said Assembly of Union; and that a correct return of the whole be made to the Grand Secretary on or before the 23rd December instant.

That the Masters, Wardens, and Past Masters, of the warranted Lodges, to attend the said Lodge of Reconciliation, according to notices to be addressed to them, for the purpose of being obligated, certified, and registered, to entitle them to be present at the Assembly of Masons for the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England, on Monday, the 27th December instant.

At an Especial Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons, under the Constitution of England, holden at Freemasons' Hall, London, on Wednesday, the 1st December, 1813.

PRESENT.

The M.W., H.R.H. the DUKE OF SUSSEX, G.M., on the throne;

The R.W. and Hon. W. Shirley, P.S.G.W., as D.G.M.; R.W. Simon McGillivray, J.G.W., as S.G.W.; R.W. Arthur Tegar, P.J.G.W., as J.G.W.; R.W. John Dent, P.S.G.W.; R.W. Sherborne Stewart, P.S.G.W.; R.W. Robert Brettingham, P.J.G.W.; R.W. Forssteen, P.J.G.W.; R.W. Alexander S. Gordon, P.J.G.W.; R.W. John Elliot, P.S.G.W.; R.W. James Earnshaw, P.J.G.W.; R.W. James Deans, P.J.G.W.; R.W. Rev. John Austin, P.S.G.W.; R.W. The Earl of Pomfret, Prov. G.M. for Northamptonshire; R.W. William Wix, Prov. G.M. for Essex; R.W. William Henry White, Prov. G.M. for Wiltshire; R.W. Andrew D. O'Kelly, Prov. G.M. for Bedfordshire; R.W. H. J. Da Costa, Prov. G.M. for Rutlandshire; R.W. His Exc. the Count La Gardie, G.M. of the First Lodge of the North; R.W. William Henry White, G.S.; R.W. Rev. Lucius Coghlan, D.D., G.C.; R.W. William Shadbolt Master of Grand Stewards' Lodge, as G.S.B.; W. Samuel Wesley, G. Organist; W. C. Bonner; W. the Wardens and Assistants of the Grand Stewards' Lodge; and the Masters and Wardens of 58 other Lodges.

The Grand Lodge was opened in ample form, and the Laws relating to the conduct of Masons in Grand Lodge were read.

The minutes of the Quarterly Communication, holden on Wednesday, the 24th November last, were read and confirmed.

The Most Worshipful the Grand Master then announced that by virtue of power delegated to him by the Grand Lodge on the 23rd June last, he had selected the R.W. Brother Waller Rodwell Wright, Provincial Grand Master for the Ionian Isles, and the R.W. Brothers Arthur Tegar and James Deans, Past Grand Wardens to assist him in the negotiation for an Union with the other Fraternity of Masons in England; that they had had several conferences with His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, assisted by three Grand Officers—the R.W. Brother Thomas Harper, Deputy Grand Master, and the R.W. Brothers James Perry, and James Agar, Past Deputy Grand Masters, the happy result of which was that Articles of Union between the two Grand Lodges of Masons of England, had been signed and sealed in duplicate at Kensington Palace on the 25th ult.—His Royal Highness the Grand Master then laid the same before Grand Lodge. The announcement of this great event was received with masonic acclamations, and the said Articles were read by the Grand Secretary.

After which, upon motions severally made and seconded, the following resolutions were passed in the affirmative unanimously:—

1. That the articles now read be Ratified and Confirmed.

A grand Masonic gathering (see advertisement in next column) will be held in Chippenham on the 31st of March, when a handsome testimonial, purchased by subscription amongst the different lodges in the province of Wiltshire, will be presented to Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart., M.P., on his vacating the office of Deputy Grand Master of that province, in consequence of his having been appointed Provincial Grand Master of Berks and Bucks. The meeting is expected to be one of the largest ever held in Wiltshire, and will demonstrate the well-deserved popularity of the worthy baronet.

SPURIOUS FREEMASONRY; OR, THE RITE OF MEMPHIS.

AS astrology is a corruption of astronomy, and idolatry a perversion of religion, so is the abyss of vanity and falsehood, known as the “Rite of Memphis,” an equally deplorable distortion of Freemasonry.

We are induced to use very strong language in allusion to this pretended rite, from the fact that its adherents have dared to erect their “ateliers” or workshops in the heart of London, and because they now claim to be connected, on terms of amity and alliance, with some Masonic bodies on the continent, notably with one or two lodges in the south of France, and even with the Supreme Council of the 33rd degree at Turin.

It will probably be within the recollection of many of our readers, that a deputation from this spurious body had the temerity to present themselves before Garibaldi, on his arrival in this country, as the representatives of Freemasonry in England!

It will also be remembered that the authorities of Grand Lodge issued a strong circular on October 24th, 1859, warning all lodges and brethren against holding communication with the pseudo lodge of “Philadelphes,” a branch of the order of Memphis. We grieve to learn, however, that doubtless in ignorance of this caution, some members of English lodges have given countenance to the “Philadelphes,” by attending their soirees and balls, where, tricked out in fantastic finery, as “Hierophants of the Star of Sirius,” “Sovereign Pontiffs of Eleusis,” and “Grand Masters of the redoubtable Sadah,” these impostors libel the sacred simplicity and purity of our noble Craft. This monstrous so-called “Rite” consists of 92 degrees, the 92nd grade having been added recently, as, when introduced by its founders, Marconis and Mouttet in 1839, the system comprised only 91. We are further informed that several Englishmen have joined this illegal association, which, being unauthorized and unmasonic, cannot claim the privileges extended to Freemasonry as a secret institution by the laws of the land. The gravest rumours are also in circulation as to the designs of these intriguing “Philadelphes;” the most revolutionary ideas, it is said, have been broached in their mystic assemblies, and Orsini-like conspirators have been seen emerging from their dark and dangerous dens. It is time, therefore, to remove the veil which covers their obscure but hideous history—it is time to assure the world that English Freemasons have no sympathy, no fellowship, no communion with those men, who are the worst foes of genuine and ancient Freemasonry—it is time to speak out plainly, before other Masonic bodies in Europe, misled by our apathy and supineness, may imagine that the “Rite of Memphis” has obtained a legal footing in England.

And if it be true, as alleged by the impostors in their own organ, that any regular body of continental Freemasons has given countenance to their insolent pretensions—for, let it be noted, they profess to make Freemasons—if it be true that any foreign Masonic Jurisdiction is prepared to support them in their attempt to violate the laws of England by holding meetings as an illegally constituted secret society, then, we say it deliberately, such a governing Masonic body ought to be at once placed under the ban of the Craft Universal, and solemnly excluded from the great Masonic Family.

Masonic Miscellanea.

We observe that Bro. Captain Dadson, late of the Royal Marines Light Infantry, has been gazetted to a captaincy in the West Kent Militia.

Bro. His Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, Hon. P.S.G. Warden of England, was duly qualified as J.P. for the Western Division of Suffolk, on the 23rd, March.

Bro. George Plucknett, P.G.D., has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Middlesex, by His Grace the Duke of Wellington, Lord Lieutenant.

The R.W., Bro. Sir Edward R. Borough, Bart., Deputy Grand Master of Ireland, has arrived in town, and will attend the Inauguration Festival at Freemasons’ Hall, on the 14th April.

We are informed that, by authority of the M.W. Grand Master, the Earl of Zetland, Master Masons, properly vouched for, will be admitted to view the proceedings at the Inauguration of Freemasons’ Hall, on the 14th April.

FREEMASONRY IN TURKEY.—At the last Quarterly Convocation of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, held on the 1st February, a charter was granted for a lodge to be held at “Haskein,” Constantinople, under the title of “Caledonian,” No. 489 on roll of Grand Lodge. This is the first lodge established in Turkey under the banner of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. We understand that Bro. Thomas M. Campbell, P.M. (408), has been appointed to represent the “Caledonian” as Proxy Master in Grand Lodge.

MASONIC PRESENTATION.—On the evening of Friday week a large number of members of the Athole Lodge, (384), Kirkintilloch, met in their hall in the Washington Hotel, to present Brother James Kirkpatrick—formerly head master of the Oswald School here, but who lately left for a more important situation in Carfin School—with a handsome time-piece in token of his valuable service whilst R.W.M. Brother George Andrews, R.W.M., presided on the occasion, assisted by Brother James Graham, acting as S.W., and Brother John Alexander, acting as J.W. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts had been disposed of, Brother Andrews in presenting the testimonial in name of the subscribers, said that he hoped that Bro. Kirkpatrick would not measure the feelings of the donors by the intrinsic value of the testimonial, but would regard it as an expression of kindly feelings amongst the brethren, and that he was sure Brother Kirkpatrick would have a feeling of satisfaction to know that he possessed the esteem and regard of the brethren of 384. Bro. Kirkpatrick, in replying, thanked the brethren kindly for the valuable gift with which they had been pleased to present him, and said it was with mingled feelings of pleasure and regret that he stood amongst them that evening. He had held the honourable position of R.W.M. for upwards of four years, and during that time he made the acquaintance of many true and worthy brethren, and this mark of their esteem and goodwill would not soon be forgotten by him. The remainder of the evening was enlivened by the singing of several of the brethren, and the meeting broke up at a seasonable hour. The time-piece was supplied by Mr. Alexander, masonic jeweller, Buchanan-street, Glasgow.—Lennox Herald.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Harmony, No. 255.—This lodge held its Meeting at the Greyhound Hotel, Richmond, Surrey, on Tuesday, the 30th March, and after the business was over, the members adjourned to Bro. Noyce's new and spacious banqueting hall, which was used for the first time on this occasion.

Urban Lodge, No. 1196.—This lodge enjoys a special distinction as being composed of Brethren devoted to literature, science and the arts. Its meeting at St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell, on Tuesday last week, was fully attended. The following officers were present:—Bros. Henry Marston, W.M.; William Sawyer, S.W.; Charles Braid, J.W.; J. R. Ware, S.D.; A. McQueen, J.D.; Callingham, J.G. The office of Secretary was temporarily filled by Bro. Dr. G. E. Carpenter. Bro. Küster, organist, officiated. The business of the lodge was confined to almost exclusively to the raising of Bro. Deerburch, and the impressive manner in which the W.M. gave the ceremonies, bringing all the resources of his elocutionary acquirements to bear on its splendid diction, excited the warmest admiration. The visitors present were: Bros. Oliver Summers, Creswick, and W. Boys. Members: Bros. E. L. Blanchard, Ward, Wickens, &c. The banquet proceedings was of the agreeable nature usual in this lodge, the toasts were given and responded to with much eloquence, and music both vocal and instrumental added to the charm of the evening.

SCOTLAND.

PARTICK.—St. Mary's Lodge, No. 117.—The centenary festival of this lodge was celebrated on Friday evening, March 26th in their hall, 151, Dumbarton Road, Partick. The brethren assembled at eight o'clock, when the lodge was opened in the apprentice degree. Thereafter they left the hall, and, forming in procession, marched through the streets of the burgh, headed by the Partick Brass Band. As many of those who took part in the parade bore torches, and the brethren were arrayed in Masonic costume, and carried their wands of office, the spectacle was one of the most picturesque, and was witnessed by thousands. The members of the craft then returned to their hall, where the lodge was closed, and a substantial supper partaken of. Bro. Thomas Granger, R.W.M. of St. Mary's, 117, presided, and was supported by Brothers Barrow, S.P.G.M.; Alexander, P.G.J.; Baird, R.W.M., 3½; S. McCulloch, 3½; G. Alsing, 354; M. Walker, 102; Campbell, P.M., 117; J. Hewet, 102; Brunton, Treasurer, 117; Simpson, S.M., 117; and McDonald, acting secretary, 117. There were present deputations from 3½, 27, 87, 102, 219, 354, 408, 413, 426, and 441. The cloth having been removed, and the lodge opened in the apprentice degree, the toasts of "The Queen and the Craft," "The Prince and the Princess of Wales and the other Members of the Royal Family," "The Army, Navy, and Volunteers," "The Three Grand Lodges of England, Ireland, and Scotland," were proposed and cordially responded to. Br. Barrow, in proposing "The Lodge St. Mary, 117, and its future prosperity," observed that he had been fourteen years a member of the Provincial Grand Lodge, and that since he had formed that relation he had found that there was nothing connected with the working of St. Mary's Lodge which had caused the least jealousy or disturbance, or which had affected its high status in the Province. (Applause.) Bro. Granger, R.W.M., with whose name the toast was coupled, returned thanks in his own name and that of the lodge, and expressed the pleasure he felt at seeing so large a turn-out of brethren from other lodges. Br. McDonald then gave an interesting history of the lodge. He remarked that the records were not kept 100 years ago so regularly as they were now kept. However, he had ascertained that in 1763 there was a lodge in Partick bearing the name of Partick Kilwinning, No 77. But on the election day a dispute took place with respect to who should hold office. On the 10th February, 1769, a petition was drawn up by those who had to do with the lodge just named, praying that the Grand Lodge would grant a charter for a new lodge. On Friday the 29th March, 1769, a charter for St. Mary's was granted. The lodge therefore held its anniversary on the last Friday of March, so that, as the present Friday was the last of this month, they very properly now celebrated their centenary. On the 21st July, 1769, the Master received the charter, and immediately thereafter the lodge proceeded to purchase books, clothing, &c. It might be interesting to know that the dues then paid to the Grand Lodge for seven members amounted in all to the modest sum of 17s. 6d. The first notice that appeared about the marching out of the lodge was in 1787, when the occasion was celebrated in an imposing manner. In 1817 the original number of the lodge was changed from 150 to 115. After mentioning different public buildings at the laying of whose foundation stones the lodge had assisted. Bro. McDonald observed that 1835 was the darkest period in the history of the lodge. Happily, St. Mary's recovered from that crisis, and in 1847 its number was again changed from 115 to 117—the number it had borne since. In 1863 it reached a very high state of prosperity, and had from that time been making steady progress. (Applause.) The other toasts were, "The Provincial Grand Lodge," "The sister lodges and visiting brethren," "The present and past office-bearers," "The Magistrates and Commissioners of Partick," "The trade and commerce of Partick," and "The Ladies." In the course of the evening, Bro. Alsing played with taste and skill several airs upon the mouth harmonium. The proceedings throughout were of a most agreeable description.

STONEHAVEN.—A meeting of the Brethren was held in Bro. Findley's Hotel, on Monday, present R.W.M.; S.W.; L.W.; S.D.; Bro. Crockatt, Ross, Hunter, Stephen, Tauze, &c. The R.W.M. explained that he had pleasure in informing the meeting that the office-bearers had taken a five years lease of the old Masonic Hall, and that until they got entry at Whitsuntide, he could not ask the Brethren to meet him to carry on the purposes of Masonry, as there was no suitable place. The Brethren unanimously agreed to delay meetings until then, and a hope was expressed that the Brethren would go more heartily to work after their enforced idleness. The meeting soon after separated.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

KNIGHTS' TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL.

PLYMOUTH.—Royal Veteran Encampment.—The quarterly meeting of this Encampment was held on Monday, at the Hayshe Temple, when a large number of Knights were present, including Dr. Dowse, P.G.H., P.E.C.; Col. Elliott, R.M.L.I.; Mr. Chapple, Captain Shanks, Royal Marines, G.S.B., E.C.; J. Watts, P.E.C., &c. The first business was to confer the degree upon Companion Hambly, of St. John's Chapter, No. 70, which was done by the E.C.; the beautiful ceremony being rendered all the more imposing by the very impressive and solemn manner in which it was conducted. Sir Knight Shanks' year of office as E.C. having expired, he now proceeded to install his successor Sir Knight Bird, who subsequently appointed the officers for the ensuing 12 months as follows:—Sir Knights Shanks, I.P.E.C.; Lose, 1st Capt.; Austin, 2nd Capt.; Heath, Prelate; Nicholls, Registrar; Hifley, Expert; Dubose, Capt. of Lines; Warren, Treasurer; Montgomery, 1st Standard Bearer; Port, 2nd Standard Bearer; Longshaw, 1st Herald; Hambly, 2nd Herald. At the conclusion of the business a cordial and unanimous vote of thanks was given by the Encampment to Past Eminent Commander Shanks, for the admirable manner in which he had conducted the work during the past year, and for the trouble he had taken to put the Encampment on a proper footing. The Encampment was then duly closed and the Fraters adjourned to the Globe Hotel, where a sumptuous and elegant dinner was provided, to which 22 sat down. After dinner the usual loyal toasts were given and responded to, with that warmth and genuine feeling which Freemasons only can fully realize. The E.C. then in short but very appropriate speeches, proposed the health of the M.E. and Supreme Grand Master, and the V.H. and Eminent Provincial Grand Commander. Dr. Dowse as a Past Grand Officer, then returned thanks on behalf of these Chiefs of the Illustrious Order, giving a brief outline of the history of the Order and of the Grand Master. The health of the E.C. having been drunk with the usual honours, Sir Knight Bird responded, and then in an able and eloquent speech proposed the health of the Past E.C., which was most warmly received. Sir Knight Shanks in replying, said: I had hoped that the toasts to which I have the honour of responding would (if given at all) have been coupled with that of Past Commanders generally, so that I might have escaped the difficulty I now experience, but as you have separated me from my compeers, and received the toast in such a flattering way, I must endeavour to say how deeply sensible I am of your kindness. There is something very peculiar in my position, for I was installed Eminent Commander when I had only been two and a quarter years a member of the Order, and this is a solitary instance of such a rapid rise. I therefore appreciated all the more the great confidence you placed in me, by electing me to the chair of E.C. I hesitated to accept the office, for I doubted whether I should be able to fulfil my obligation, to uphold and preserve the honour and dignity of the Order; but I knew this Encampment consisted of good and trusty Soldiers of the Cross, who, with a leader determined to set to work in the right way and to a right end, might be relied on to accomplish anything, so I accepted the responsible post, and I think I may point to the present state of the Encampment, and without egotism say, "I did not altogether fail therein." Sir Knight Bird has spoken far too favourably of my conduct during the twelve months I have presided over you, I can only say that had I done less my obligation would not, (in my opinion), have been acted up to. I found the Encampment, it is true, in a somewhat sickly condition, upwards of £15 in debt, several Grand Conclave certificates that were due not obtained, our returns had not been made for years, but all these matters were put into proper order, and our status at head-quarters restored before I had been two months in the chair, and we are now I am glad to say quite out of debt. Our Encampment—the oldest in the Province—is now once more fairly started on what will I hope prove to be a prosperous course; and as that earliest Easter tide brought with it joy and new hope, when first the faithful Eleven beheld their risen Lord, so may this Easter bring to this convocation those peaceable fruits of righteousness, which are, wherever they flourish, to the honour of the Deity and the best interests of man. Several other toasts followed, and after a most pleasant and agreeable evening, the Fraters separated about 10 p.m.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Royal Kent Encampment of Knights Templars and Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem.—The annual meeting of this old Encampment, was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Bell's-court, Newgate-street, on Good Friday, 25th inst., for the installation of the Eminent Commander Elect, Sir Knight William Foulsham, who was unanimously elected at the regular meeting on the 12th March. The Sir Knights assembled at 3 o'clock p.m., when the Encampment was duly opened by Sir Knight P.E.C., Jens Jensen, in the absence of the E.C. Sir Knight Robert J. Banning, M.D. The muster-roll being called, the following Sir Knights appeared under arms:—Sir Knights Jens Jensen, P.E.C., Acting E.C.; Wm. Punshon, P.E.C., Prior; Henry Hotham, P.E.C., Sub-Prior and Treas.; G. Ludwig, P.E.C.; Wm. Foulsham, 1st Capt.; Wm. Brignall, Acting 2nd Capt., Standard-bearer; Anthony Clapham, Expert, Act Registrar; John F. Frolich, Capt. of Lines; William Garbutt, Acting Herald; Robt. F. Cook, Alfred Clay, and Tully. After the minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed, letters were read from several Sir Knights apologising for their non-attendance. The Treasurer reported on the state of the finances of the Encampment, which were in a very satisfactory condition, whereupon Sir Knight Foulsham proposed, and Sir Frolich seconded, that a vote of thanks be recorded to the Treasurer, P.E.C. Sir Knight Henry Hotham, for his indefatigable labour and the efficient manner in which his laborious duties as Treasurer for the Encampment are performed. Sir Knight Wm. Foulsham, E.C. Elect, was then regularly installed as Eminent Commander for the ensuing year, by P.E.C. Sir Knight Jens Jensen, who performed the ceremony in a very impressive and efficient manner, which did great credit to himself and gave entire satisfaction to all the Sir Knights present. After the E.C. had been proclaimed by the Heralds, the Sir Knights pledged him in the usual manner. The Eminent Commander then appointed his officers for the ensuing year as follows:—Sir Knight R. J. Banning, M.D., I.P.E.C.; Wm. Punshon, Prior; Henry Hotham, Sub-Prior; Rev. S. Atkinson, Prelate; C. J. Banister, Chancellor; Henry Hotham, Treasurer; Anthony Clapham, 1st Capt.; Geo. W. Laws, 2nd Capt.; John F. Frolich, Registrar; Wm. Brignall, Expert; R. F. Cook, M.D., Capt. of Lines; Wm. Garbutt, Standard-bearer; J. S. Challoner, 1st Herald; W. H. Marwood, 2nd Herald; J. S. Trotter, Equerry. After some other business had been gone through the Encampment was duly closed at 4.30 p.m. The Sir Knights then dined together in the Hall, the dinner having been prepared in an excellent style by Mrs. Trotter, the Equerry's wife. The Sir Knights passed a very agreeable evening and separated at 10 o'clock. As it was Good Friday, no singing was introduced.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

PROVINCIAL.

RICHMOND.—Rose and Lily Conclave, No. 3.—The second anniversary assembly of this Conclave was held on Saturday the 27th March, at the Greyhound Hotel, Richmond, Surrey, when Sir Knight Little, G.R. enthroned Sir Knight Ord as M.P.S. The other officers appointed for the year were as follows: Sir Knights Cottebrune, V.E.; Gurney, S.G.; Giles, J.G.; Thompson, H.P.; Ord, Treas.; Terry, Rec.; Daly, Prefect, Challenger, S.B., and Smith, Herald. The annual subscription and installation fee were increased, and after the closing of the Conclave, the Knights Companions adjourned to the refectory where a repast served in Sir Knight Noyce's recherche style awaited them, and a most agreeable evening ensued.

ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF LODGE "CALE-DONIAN RAILWAY," 354, GLASGOW.

The annual festival of this lodge took place on Friday evening, 19th inst., in the Prince of Wales' Hall, 240, Buchanan-street. The large hall, which was beautifully decorated with flags, emblematic banners, and evergreens, was well filled, without being crowded, there being in all 360 present.

Bro. W. J. Hamilton, R.W.M., presided, and on the platform were Bros. Jas. E. Wilson, P.M.; W. R. Thomson, D.M.; Dr. R. F. Paterson, S.M.; D. K. Spiers, S.W.; J. Crichton, J.W.; A. Carmichael, Treas.; P. Sanderson, Sec.; Wm. Smith, P.G., Sec.; Robt. Livingstone, R.W.M., Star 219; Jas. Kerr, S.M., Lodge of Harmony, Belfast; Robt. Allan; J. Goodfellow; D. Campbell, and A. Randolph. No. 3 bis. The platform was also graced with the presence of a large number of ladies.

After tea the CHAIRMAN rose and said: It has been laid down that the power of speech was given to man to enable him to conceal his thoughts, if this paradoxical dogma, or dogmatical paradox, were to be accepted literally, there would be no necessity for me to attempt to address this assembly, inasmuch as it is with unqualified pleasure that I find myself called upon to preside at a meeting where intelligence and beauty are so abundantly represented. The addition we have got to our numbers to-night in the persons of our lady friends, not only lends enchantment to the view, but I can see that it also awakens feelings of more than friendship in some, and profound respect and admiration in all. Ladies, it is a custom we have among Masons to "hail" a brother when he comes to visit us. I cannot salute you in masonic form. I can, however, address you and bid you welcome, and in the name of this lodge I now do so, and I am sure the brethren will favor the wish I now express when I assure you I wish you could be with us always. While congratulating ourselves on the presence amongst us of so many of our fair friends, we must not forget another cause of rejoicing. I refer to the prosperity of our lodge; it is, as far as I know, without precedent in numbers, almost half-a-thousand men, who for intelligence and solid genuine worth in all the relatives of life, and for enthusiasm in Masonry, will bear favourable comparison with any lodge in the kingdom. Brethren, while admitting the intellectual ability and moral worth of the members of this lodge, I must say the knowledge of Masonry evinced by them—is due altogether to the ability of the late officers, whose attentions to their duties were unremitting, and in anything tending to promote the efficiency of this lodge they knew no weariness. Courteous in their intercourse with the members, and ever ready to communicate instruction to them, they exhibited an example worthy of all praise, and proved themselves workmen that need not to be ashamed. Temperance, fortitude, prudence, and justice have distinguished them, and the propriety and dignity of their deportment has made them an honor to the fraternity. When I remember their worth, I feel how unfitted I am to follow men so distinguished; and were it not that efficient brethren in the various offices act with me, and that I can in any difficulty have their valuable assistance, I dare hardly have assumed the responsibility of accepting the proud position you have honored me with. Conscious of your support, and knowing that you will not criticise me severely, but exercise charity—the greatest of masonic virtues—I take courage and determine to do all in my power to imitate those who have nobly gone before, trusting the lodge will continue to maintain the high position it now proudly holds. The days of set speech making are fast dying out, and even if endowed with powers of rhetoric equal to the task, it would be out of place on this occasion to trespass upon your time with an address framed on the orthodox plan from exordium to peroration, but rather would I try to emulate the brilliant display of fervid eloquence which many amongst us enjoyed the melancholy gratification of listening to when paying our last tribute of respect to the memory of one whose zeal in the cause of Masonry, whose noble virtues, and whose exalted position evoked such sentiments of sincere esteem as will remain a lasting record to keep his memory green in the present and future generations of our Craft. So much, and to the purpose, was uttered by the gifted orator in eulogising the rare merits of our lamented P.G.M., that words of mine would be but feeble echoes of another voice; therefore, from the regretful past to the more immediate purpose of the present moment, permit me to invite your attention to the programme provided for your approval; and I shall conclude by wishing you the enjoyment of a pleasant evening's entertainment. [Cheers.]

An excellent musical programme was then gone through, the artistes being Misses A. and J. Blair and Bros. Clarke, Houston, Dunshee, Marm, and Porter; Bro. A. A. Smith, Director of Music, presiding at the Piano.

During an interval in the Concert the Chairman, in an eloquent and highly-complimentary speech, presented Bro. Jas. E. Wilson, P.M., for the efficient manner in which he conducted the affairs of the lodge during the past two years, with a handsome silver tea and coffee service, beautifully engraved, and a P.M.'s jewel and medallion of the lodge seal in gold.

Bro. WILSON returned thanks, as follows: Mr. Chairman, Ladies, Gentlemen, and Brethren all, it has been my privilege, as it has been a source of great pleasure and gratification to me, to attend many meetings of this lodge—I have not been absent from five since I had the honour of being initiated a member of it—but I have never before felt so thoroughly overcome by conflicting feelings as I now do; feelings of gratification at the warm and kindly reception accorded to me by this large and brilliant assemblage, feelings of gratitude for the elegant and costly gifts you have now presented to me, and feelings of diffidence that I do not deserve the honours you are now conferring on me. I feel so overcome that I cannot say what I would, nor what I ought. From my heart I thank you; yet I cannot help saying it is unfair that I should be the recipient of such substantial tokens of your esteem for only doing my duty where we all have been striving to do the same. Where would have been the success of our lodge, but for the efficient support and advice of you, sir, and Bros. Thomson, Paterson, and Allan—to tell all would be to name all our officers, more than half our members. That my labours amongst you have been appreciated, has been evinced to me by our large and harmonious meetings, at which all classes of our brethren have assisted at our ceremony. I am proud to-night to see present on my right Bro. Goodfellow, one of the first office-bearers and founders of this lodge. One cause of our prosperity may be the care I have always taken to ascertain the wishes and to know the opinions of all the members of our lodge, and while ready to give my advice I have never attempted to act in any matter but with the full concurrence of the great majority. Indeed I may say all of our members, for during my two years of office we have scarcely had a division. Hence our strength, hence, too, as your representative in our Provincial Grand Lodge and in Grand Lodge, I felt I could speak and act in the full confidence that I had a strong and united lodge to support me in every good work. I almost think these rich presents must also be to remind me that now that I am free of the active care of office I shall be expected to devote more time to the history, antiquities, and science of Masonry, and to fit myself better to assist you, sirs, in training our younger brethren. I can assure you it is my desire to do so. Circumstances over which we had no control placed me in the chair which you now hold—when we wished another brother to take it and before I thought myself qualified for it. Attention to the literature of Masonry while I have held it I have, from want of time, found impossible—This, however, may have little interest for our lady friends, who, I daresay, are looking forward with zest to the Masons' "Grips" to lead them through the mazy dance, after our concert is over—There is one request I would make to the ladies—that is, that they would see that their husbands or sweethearts, attend our working lodge meetings regularly; for we find that brothers who only attend once in three or six months always cause us late meetings, whether it is that they get so ignorant from non-attendance that we require more time to "post them up" as passable Masons, is not for me to say. Again, I say I cannot speak to-night; I feel too strangely, I hope the heart that beats in the breast on which you hung this jewel may always beat time to you and Masonry, and when it beats no more may your gifts be a memento to my sons and a stimulus to them to do their duty. From my inmost heart I thank you. [Cheers.]

Before the close of the proceedings Bro. Wm. Smith, P.G., Sec. proposed a vote of thanks to the festival committee for the excellent manner in which they had performed the duties assigned to them, to which Bro. W. R. Thomson, D.M., replied; and Bro. LIVINGSTONE, R.W.M., 219, proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman to which Bro. W. J. HAMILTON, R.W.M., replied, which closed the proceedings so far.

An assembly followed, which was fashionably attended, Bro. A. A. Smith, acting as Master of Ceremonies. The dancing was kept up with great heartiness until about half-past four in the morning, when all went home thoroughly well pleased with their night's entertainment.

The brethren of the Reading Lodges of Freemasons who attended the recent installation of Br. Bland as W.M. of "Lodge of Hope," Newbury, have, through Br. W. Biggs, made a handsome presentation to that lodge in the shape of a silver square and compasses, chastely engraved, in morocco case. The articles were supplied from Bro. Kenning's Masonic Depot, Little Britain.

PRESENTATION TO BRO. SCHMITT OF JERSEY.

In our last number we gave a brief summary of the proceedings attending the presentation of a P.G.L. jewel to Bro. Schmitt, of Jersey, and we now give the worthy Brother's speech in reply:—

"When I see so many distinguished and trusty Brethren gathered together for the sole purpose of presenting me a testimonial, voted by the late Provincial Grand Lodge, my emotion, believe me, must be deep, preventing me from adequately conveying to you my feelings for this mark of your fraternal sympathy, but I hope you will attribute it to my want of words for imparting the sentiments I feel vibrating in my heart, but am incapable to express.

"If there is one sunny spot in the existence of man, it is in the regard and esteem of his fellowmen and the support of sincere friends. But where, I ask you, should a man look for friendship and affection if not in a Masonic Lodge, for are we not a band of Brethren linked together in an endless chain of universal Brotherhood? You are all, my Brethren, at this very moment, the living image of my assertion.

"I came to you a perfect stranger, and on my admission into the Great Masonic Family, I soon found a home and many friends in my newly adopted country, and never, never shall I forget those happy moments I have spent both in our Lodges, Chapters, and other Masonic gatherings, as a member of the Order, that has withstood the storms of ages, and numbers now-a-day in its ranks many of the greatest men of the earth and benefactors of humanity.

"Ever since my name was enrolled in the catalogue of Craftsmen, I have adopted for my motto: 'To be free and to be useful.'—My conception of our glorious and ancient Institution is liberal, large and lofty,—not confounding the operative mason, the real builder of our Palaces and Cathedrals with the merely speculative or moral mason, whose buildings are edifices not reared with hands, whose materials are the subjugated passions of the soul and whose operations are the kindest virtues of humanity. The moral mason builds his Temple in the human breast and founds his structure on Truth, supporting it with the pillars of intelligence to find the Right, and of Fortitude to uphold it. The altar on which he worships is Goodwill to all men and cordial Fellowship to his Brethren. The lights that guide him are enlightened Reason and Justice, all his materials are cemented by Charity, and lastly he is duly bound to endeavour as far as it will be in his power, to dispel the clouds of bigotry, intolerance, superstition and ignorance, in diffusing Knowledge and Instruction, in spreading the principles of Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth, amongst his brethren for the benefit of mankind.

"Such a conviction of the bearing and civilizing tendency of Freemasonry could not but actuate and stimulate my exertions in that direction, and freely and cheerfully make me devote to the good cause a considerable share of my time, deeming it a work of duty and love.

"I cannot too warmly express the pleasure and gratification I derive from being one of the Order; which inculcates charity towards each other's faults and weaknesses, benevolence towards the distressed, the poor and the wretched, without asking or craving to know the cause of their sorrows and afflictions, or whether they are Hindoos or Catholics, Mahometans, Protestants, Jews or Parsees, but simply because they are all children of one common parent, T.G.A. of the U.

"In conclusion, may I reckon upon your permitting me to say, that this evening's fraternal Festival while stamping this occasion as one of the white days of my life, will ever be prized and regarded with ardent gratitude as one of the brightest souvenirs in my Masonic existence, never to be effaced from my breast. It will also be considered as a solace to my affliction and anxieties, as an affectionate and devoted son of my cruelly oppressed Fatherland. The memory, therefore, of this festivity will ever be dear to me, whether near or far away.

"With conscientious sincerity, I tender you once more, my dear Brethren, this poor expression of thanks, and I entreat you to believe that, to retain the favourable position I have the happiness and honour to hold in your goodwill will ever be the end of my endeavours, and the highest object of my ambition, assuring you in return, that you may reckon on anything I can do in co-operating with you, my Brethren, to promote the best Masonic interests of this our Province of Jersey, and finally I pray the omnipotent Ruler and Master to bless and smile upon your families, your wives, your children, and your homes."

The Fifteen Sections will be worked at the Fidelity Lodge of Instruction, "Yorkshire Grey," London-street, Fitzroy-square, on Thursday evening, April 8th, at seven o'clock. Bro. J. A. Adams, P.M., P.Z., P.G.P., in the chair when we hope to see a good muster of the brethren particularly of old members of the lodge.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

[Announcements of Births, Marriages, and Deaths relating to the Craft, or their families, will be inserted, free of charge, if properly authenticated.]

DEATHS.

CAPPER.—On the 21st March, somewhat suddenly, at Upton, Essex, C. Capper, Esq., M.P. for the borough of Sandwich, in the last Parliament, aged 46 years — [Bro. Capper was initiated in the St. Michael's Lodge, No. 211, on the 8th November, 1853, served the office of W.M. in 1857, and continued a member up to the time of his death. He was also a founder of the "Capper" Lodge, No. 1076, Victoria Docks, West Ham, which was named in honor of the lamented deceased.—Ed. F.]

HEDLEY.—On the 22nd March, Emma, the beloved wife of Bro. Tom Abercrombie Hedley, of the Britannic Lodge, No. 83, Civil Engineer, Moxley, Wednesbury, in her 40th year.

MARSHALL.—On the 24th March, at the Palmerston Tavern, Grosvenor Park, Camberwell, the residence of her son, (Bro. Charles Lambert Marshall), Mrs. Emma Caroline Marshall, aged 61, deeply regretted by all who knew her.

Answers to Correspondents.

[All communications for THE FREEMASON should be written legibly, on one side of the paper only, and, if intended for insertion in the current number must be received not later than 10 o'clock a.m. on Thursdays, unless in very special cases. The name and address of every writer must be sent to us in confidence.]

A WELL-WISHER.—Your letter, being anonymous, cannot be inserted.

A. J. W.—We would gladly publish the names of the 'Inauguration Stewards,' as well as of the lodges which they represent, but the list is not obtainable.

M.—We cannot print remarks which, dealing in generalities, are in effect grave charges against the members of a body many of whom hold high positions in the Craft. Give us proofs, and we will readily insert your letter.

EXCELSIOR.—We know nothing of the grievance to which you refer. Your Provincial Grand Master is the proper officer to investigate the matter, and not the Grand Secretary.

ENQUIRER.—Yes; the Prince of Wales is a "genuine" Craft Mason. We shall probably know more on His Royal Highness's return to England. You are by no means the only "enquirer" on the subject.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

With our number of the 17th April we intend issuing a SUPPLEMENT, containing a full account of the proceedings at the INAUGURATION FESTIVAL AT FREEMASONS' HALL.

"LABORARE EST ORARE."

THE earnest worker who toils with brain and hand in the varied scenes of life is a true worshipper of the Great Architect, by whom the manifold works of nature were created. This important truth is recognized to a great extent in the science of Freemasonry, and as a rule the skilful artist attains to honor and distinction in his lodge. But the able letter on "Past Masters as Preceptors," which appeared in the last number of THE FREEMASON, points to the existence of a defect which deserves the serious attention of every thoughtful Mason, and it suggests the adoption of a remedial measure which is equally worthy of consideration.

To a large number of intelligent brethren it has long been a source of mortification and pain to witness so many conflicting modes of conducting the ceremonial work of the Craft. Every professed teacher of Freemasonry has a system of his own, and the result is that a brother who has sat at the feet of one of these Gamaliels must, as stated by our correspondent, unlearn what he has acquired to suit the views of another.

Independent of minor deviations, there are actually two great Masonic schools in London, not only tolerated, but sanctioned by high authorities, and which differs widely in their working. We allude to the "Emulation" and "Stability" lodges of instruction. This fact we have always considered a strange anomaly, because it precludes the possibility of uniformity throughout the whole body of the Craft. Our correspondent indicates a remedy which we believe would prove effectual, while at the same time it would operate beneficially by inducing many leading Masons to persevere in the labours of Freemasonry. The establishment of a Lodge of Preceptors would remove the difficulties to which we have alluded, as, clothed with the authority of Grand Lodge, their decisions on all matters relating to the Masonic ceremonies would necessarily be final. The promulgation of an "orthodox" and unchangeable ritual is one of the most desirable reforms that can be accomplished in connection with the order; and we would, therefore, supplement the suggestions of a "P.M. and P.Z." by proposing that brethren entertaining similar views should unite in presenting a respectful memorial to the M.W. Grand Master, praying his lordship to take the subject into consideration. It would confer additional lustre upon the already brilliant reign of our Masonic Sovereign, the Earl of Zetland, if uniformity of working were established under his benign sway.

We repeat, "the faithful workman is the true worshipper."

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF WILTSHIRE.

TESTIMONIALS TO BRO. SIR DANIEL GOOCH, BART., M.P., AND BRO. S. WITTEY.

On Wednesday, the Provincial Grand Master of Freemasons (Wilts), Bro. Lord Methuen, held a Provincial Grand Lodge of emergency at the new hall, Chippenham, when there was a very numerous assemblage of Grand Officers and other Brethren belonging to the Provinces of Wilts, Somerset, and Berks and Bucks. The chief feature in the day's programme was the presentation to Bro. Sir Daniel Gooch, M.P., of a valuable testimonial, subscribed for with the utmost readiness and pleasure by the officers and brethren in Wilts, who were anxious to testify the high esteem in which they held one, who for a considerable period filled the office of Deputy Prov. Grand Master of that province, and greatly promoted the interests of Freemasonry in that county. The testimonial consisted of the handsome regalia of Grand Master of the province of Berks and Bucks, into which office Sir Daniel will be installed on Friday, the 21st May next, at Windsor. Bro. Biggs, of Reading, undertook the arrangements connected with the testimonial, and admirably carried them out.

Shortly after two o'clock, the Right Hon. Lord Methuen, G.M., accompanied by the Grand Officers, entered the lodge in procession, and the lodge was then opened in solemn form.

There were present the Right Hon. the Lord Methuen, the R.W. the P.G.M. of Wilts, the R.W. the P.G.M. of Berks and Bucks; Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart, M.P.; the W. the D.P.G.M. of Wilts. Bro. Samuel Wittey; the Rev. Sir John Hayes, Bart., D.P.G.M., Berks and Bucks; the D.P.G.M. of Somerset, Bro. Bridges, the D.P.G.M., of Oxford, Br. Spiers, P.S.B., Grand Lodge of England; the Rev. R. Simpson, (Slough), Grand Chaplain of England; the Rev. Ravenshaw, (Pewsey), Grand Chaplain of England; the Rev. C. R. Davey, P.G.C.; Bro. Tomba, P.G., Secretary, (Wilts); Bro. Captain R. Bradford, P.G.W., (Wilts); Bro. Wyndham, (Salisbury), P.P.G., Registrar; Bro. W. Biggs, (Reading), P.P.S.G.W., (Wilts); Bro. Lawson, P.P.J.G.W., (Wilts); Bro. Nott, W.M., (Devizes, Lodge of Fidelity); Bro. W. Bland, W.M., (Newbury Lodge of Hope); Bro. J. T. Morland, W.M., (Abingdon, Abbey Lodge); Bro. E. A. Moore, (Methuen Lodge), P.G.R.; Bro. Wilton, P.P.G.W., (Somerset); Bro. Muttelbury, P.P.G.R., (Somerset); Bro. Botly, J.G.W., (Berks and Bucks); Br. C.

Smith, P.P., Supt. of Works, (Berks and Bucks); Bro. Dix, P.G.J.D., (Wilts); Bro. Humphry, P.P.G., Reg. (Stafford); Bro. Benham, P.P.S.G.W., (Wilts); Bro. Ford, P.P.G.R., (Somerset); Bro. Gill, P.P.G.J.W. Bros. Hood, Weightman, J. Smith, Chancellor (Reading), Jones (Frome), Johnston, Jos. Wheeler, G. Cosburn, Secretary, (Lodge of Hope, Newbury), Blandy—Jenkins, Frendell, (Abbey Lodge, Abingdon); Bro. Hard, P.G.P., (Wilts); Bros. Toomer, Dark, Dr. Haynes, Robinson, Stokes (Lodge 686, Salisbury); Bro. T. Chandler (Devizes); Bro. Wentworth, P.P.G.S.B.; Bro. A. Braid, W.M., (355); Bro. Tolley, P.P.G.O., (Berks and Bucks); Bro. Marriott and Biggs, (Windsor), and other officers and brethren.

The first business was the installation of Bro. Samuel Wittey (Devizes), late Provincial Grand Treasurer, as Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and after the ceremony, Bro. Nott, the W.M. of the Devizes Lodge of Fidelity, stepped forward and presented Bro. Wittey with the D.P.G. Master's jewel, subscribed for by the brethren of the Lodge of Fidelity, which Bro. Wittey had faithfully served in the office of Secretary and otherwise for twelve years. Bro. Wittey acknowledged the presentation in a neat speech.

Bro. R. Bradford was elected Provincial Grand Treasurer.

Bro. LORD METHUEN then proceeded to present the testimonial to Sir Daniel Gooch, and addressing him spoke of the high character by which he was known among Masons, and the esteem and regard in which he was specially held by the Craft in Wiltshire, in whose name it was his (Lord Methuen's) pleasure to present the beautiful testimonial. His Lordship referred to Sir Daniel's constant labours in the cause of Freemasonry, and concluded a feeling speech by expressing his hope that the Province of Berks and Bucks would benefit as much by the assiduity of Sir Daniel as Wiltshire had.

Sir DANIEL GOOCH having been attired in the regalia, said he would not attempt to express all that he felt in his heart, for, under the circumstances, it would be quite impossible. He should value the testimonial far, far beyond its intrinsic worth, because it proved to him that what he had done had met with the approbation of the brethren with whom he had been associated for 15 or 16 years. There was no reward he prized greater than that. Sir Daniel made other remarks, mainly in reference to the progress of Freemasonry in the Wilts Province, and in conclusion, said he felt much pleased that Bro. Wittey, whom he initiated many years ago, should have been that day installed in the office which he (Sir Daniel) had himself held.

The lodge was closed shortly afterwards in due form.

At four o'clock the officers and brethren sat down to a banquet at the Angel Hotel, the chair being occupied by Lord Methuen. Grace having been said and the cloth cleared,

Lord METHUEN proposed "The Queen and Craft," and then gave the health of "The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Zetland, the M.W. the G.M."

His lordship next proposed the health of "the Rt. Hon. the Earl De Grey and Ripon, the M.W. the D.G.M., and other Grand Officers of the Grand Lodge," speaking of the liberality of the noble Earl in subscribing to the Masonic charities.

The Rev. R. SIMPSON, G.Ch. of England, responded, and alluding to Sir D. Gooch, said he felt that Sir Daniel would be handed up from the Province of Wilts to that of Berks and Bucks, not as a mere ornament, but as a good working, practical Mason, and one who would fully sympathise not only with the officers but with every single member, however humble, in the Province. He looked forward with great delight to the installation of Sir Daniel as G.M. of Berks and Bucks, when he trusted he should see at Windsor a large gathering of the brethren from Wiltshire.

Bro. WITTEY, D.P.G.M., proposed Lord Methuen's health, and his lordship having replied, gave the health of Sir Daniel Gooch.

Sir DANIEL, in responding, thanked the brethren for the handsome mark of respect which they had presented him with, which he looked upon as being more than a reward for any services he had rendered. The worthy Brother traced the advance of Masonry since he had been associated with the Craft in Wiltshire, and observed that out of the 60 masons whom he had had the pleasure of admitting, he could not pick one who had not done credit to the position he had taken. Although he had been called by duty to another part of the country he should not feel that his connection with the Wiltshire province had been severed, and hoped to have the pleasure of frequently visiting it. Sir Daniel dwelt upon the importance of being careful in admitting those candidates only who would do credit to the Craft, and make it respected and respectable; and resumed his seat amidst loud applause.

The proceedings were very enthusiastic, and several toasts followed the above. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Bro. Tolley, St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

The gathering was one of the most successful ever held in Wilts.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

[Under this head, in future, we purpose answering correspondents on Masonic law.]

ANGUS SMITH.—No. Dues to the Fund of Benevolence are not payable for honorary members.

MIRFIELD.—The resignation of the brother having been accepted and entered on the lodge minutes, cannot be revoked. He must be proposed and seconded in due form, and balloted for as a rejoining member.

S.D.—The use of the black-ball is commendable when no other means can be tried to insure the rejection of an unworthy candidate, but when adopted for purposes of annoyance or spite, blackballing is simply abominable. A lamentable case recently occurred in America, resulting in the sacrifice of two lives through the misuse of the black-ball from political motives. The ballot-box is a necessary safe-guard to the Order, and should be the honourable, though secret, mouthpiece of a Freemason's opinion.

Ragon, in his "Orthodoxie Maconique," page 200, enumerates among the chivalric orders in England tolerated though not recognised by the Grand Lodge, 1st, the Knights of the Red Cross; 2nd, the Knights Templar; 3rd, the Knights of Malta; 4th, the Knights of the Holy Sepulchre.—SEOSTRIA.

It is a curious and suggestive fact that one of the earliest R.A. chapters formed under the "Modern" Masons of England bore the title of "The Chapter of the Nine Arches of Enoch," an old R.A. ritual in my possession also refers to the very singular tradition associated with the above name.—ANTIQUARIUS.

Melchisedec.—The following extract from Dr. Adam Clarke's commentaries on "Genesis" will be interesting to members of the Priestly and Princely grades of the Red Cross of Constantine:—"Melchisedec had preserved in his family and among his subjects the worship of the true God, and the primitive patriarchal institutions; by these the father of every family was both king and priest. So Melchisedec, being a worshipper of the true God, was priest among the people, as well as king over them."—VERITAS.

Past Masters as Preceptors.—Few letters of more importance have caught my eye of late than the one in THE FREEMASON of last week under the above title. Unless something is done, and that quickly, I am persuaded that uniformity of ritual will be but a "dead letter," in some country lodges, and soon regularly-initiated brethren will scarcely know whether they are in a lodge or not in some places I need not mention. I could say, but forbear at present, hoping the evil will be remedied.—W. J. HUGHAN.

A convention between the Grand Lodge of England and the Grand Lodge of Germany was concluded in 1773, at which period there were 25 lodges under the jurisdiction of the latter body. Where can I learn the names of those lodges, and also ascertain whether they are still in existence?—ALPHA.

Royal Arch Degree.—I should esteem it a personal favour to be furnished with extracts from minutes of Royal Arch Chapters, anterior to 1760 (if any) held in London.—WILLIAM JAMES HUGHAN.

THE EASTERN EMPERORS.—The Roman Senate has lately inscribed in the Golden Book of the Patriarch the name of the sole descendant, in a direct line, of the Eastern Emperors and of the last of the Lascaris, known before 1789, that is to say, Antonio Lascaris Comneno, Grand Duke of Epirus, Larissa, Media, and Macedonia, Prince of the Peloponnesus, and perpetual Grand Master, by right of hereditary transmission, of the Supreme Constantinian Order of the Knights of St. George (or Red X). The descendant of this illustrious family was living unknown in Piedmont, when one day he conceived the idea of collecting his genealogical documents and claiming his rights. The Lascaris having belonged to the Roman nobility, he addressed himself to the senate, and that body, after having verified the authenticity of his titles according to the documents in the archives, has reinstated him in his honours and privileges. The Prince is about to leave Turin to fix his residence at Rome.—Weekly Dispatch, March 27, 1869.

OPERATIVE LODGES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am perusing Brother Hughan's papers with very great pleasure, and he is doing good service by bringing the old Operative Freemasons' Lodges of Scotland under our notice.

I would like the opportunity of remarking that there was possibly considerable difference in practice between the two countries, which if examined may lessen one's scepticism as to the existence of any craft degree but the first before the Revival of 1717. The Grand-Mastership of Scotland was hereditary, and if General Assemblies of the Craft were ever held there, they must in later times have fallen into abeyance. Not so in England, as they would seem to have been regularly held during the 17th century, whilst the Stuarts remained on the British throne; and the Order was so far speculative in 1663 that the Annual Assembly then declared that all the lodges should be ruled by one Grand Master, and made a compulsory law that there should for the future be two operatives in every lodge of five members, to render an initiation legal. Unfortunately there are no minutes of these meetings, but in their absence we are scarcely justified in asserting, contrary to all tradition, that no degrees were ever possessed by them. In the first place, we are expressly informed that all degrees beyond the Apprentice were in the gift of these Annual Assemblies; and, secondly, it has ever been a fundamental principle of the Order that the possessor of an inferior degree must not pry into the secrets of a higher, or the possessor of a high degree communicate any information to the holder of an inferior degree.

The Arch degree no doubt has seen many changes, and probably bears but little resemblance to the original compilation, but if the appended note,† from a printed attack upon a member in 1725, does not allude to the degree, I shall be glad if Bro. Hughan will inform me to what it does allude. The present degree seems to represent the continental Red Cross of Babylon or Knight of the Sword and of the East, and to have been styled the Red Cross, or Ark, by the Stirling Rock Chapter, regarding which Dr. Burnes, K.H., states:—"There are some records to indicate that so early as 1590 a few of the brethren (of St. John) became mingled with the architectural fraternities; and that a lodge at Stirling, patronised by King James, had a Chapter of Templars attached to it, who were termed 'Cross-legged Masons.'"‡

I can myself see little objection to the date of 1686 claimed by the degree of Holy Royal Arch, Knights Templar Priest, to which was added the Rose Croix, and was informed by a late Deputy Provincial Grand Commander that he had in his possession an ancient Bristol Ritual of 1735 of the K.T.P. This date, 1686, is also the only one which removes all difficulty regarding the Stuart Chapter of Arras, the excommunication of Philip of Orleans about 1705, Baron Hunde's Templar theory, and the English schism of 1739. With regard to the omission of the Templars from the system of the Arras Chapter, that must have arisen from the ground being occupied by the Ordre du Temple. The K.T.P. which appears in 1791 on Brother Dunkerley's seal, is the 17th degree of the A. and A. rite.

Fraternally yours,

JOHN YARKER.

THE TOLERANCE OF FREEMASONRY.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Of the phrases and expressions which are commonly used with regard to Masonry and religious toleration, it seems to me that many are erroneous, many inaccurate, and many ambiguous. In the hope of obtaining a clearer insight into the true principles of our Order, I venture to suggest a few reflections for the consideration of your readers. If any of my suggestions are not perfectly adjusted by the square, I shall be glad to receive correction and instruction.

Freemasonry, then, is not a religion. It may possibly require us to confess the existence, personality, and supreme power of God; but it does not bind us to any particular belief concerning His nature and attributes, or enjoin any particular method of external worship. Not being itself a religion, it is not opposed to any religion. It does not contradict the dogmatic teaching of any church, or school, or sect. It excludes none: it includes all. Whether Catholic or Protestant, orthodox or heretic, Mahometan or Jew, any just and upright man may be admitted into it without renouncing a single tenet of the creed which he conscientiously holds. When he is once admitted, whatever that creed may be, all true Masons will recognise him and treat him as a brother. Herein consists the true beauty of our Craft—that it establishes a bond of fraternity between those who are otherwise separated by race, by rank, or by religion.

But as Masons are not compelled to regard all races as equally civilised, or all ranks as equally noble, so neither are they compelled to regard all religions as equally true and acceptable in the sight of Heaven. If I am a sincere Jew, I must look upon Christian worship as idolatrous. If I am a sincere Christian, I must consider Mahometanism an imposture. Honest faith in any definite creed amounts, of necessity, to a denial of those other creeds which are opposed to it. entertaining such an honest faith I am not censured by the principles of our Order, much less am I excluded from a participation in its privileges. By the fact of my initiation I am in no way pledged to abjure the distinctness of my previous belief; I am only bound to exercise Masonic charity towards all my brethren, and to keep Masonic meetings free from religious discussion and jealousy. A bigot may be accepted and find standing room amongst us, provided that he allows not his bigotry to interfere with the fundamental rules of brotherly love, relief, and truth. He is not required to change his theological opinions and to regard the doctrinal variations which distinguish him from others as trifles of little or no importance. For Freemasonry is open to men of all theological opinions. Its object is not to make our faith indefinite, or our hope vague; but to widen our charity, and to give it scope to expand in the exercise of a universal, an ungrudging, and a large-hearted benevolence.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

Norwich, March 24, 1869.

CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Permit me to give the following explanation regarding Installation and the chair in Scotland, in so far as it has come under my own observation.

In the "Laws and Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of Scotland" the following occurs at page 47:—"The installation of the whole office-bearers of a lodge, including the Master, shall be held in a just and perfect lodge, opened in the Apprentice degree, where at the least three Masters, two Fellow Craft, and two Apprentices must be present; or, failing craftsmen and apprentices, the same number of Masters, who for the time being shall be held to be of the inferior degrees."

In Scotland, the new R.W.M. does not require to pass the chair, or to "receive the secrets of an installed Master," previous to his being duly acknowledged and unanimously received as R.W.M. However, in some lodges in Scotland (old ones) an individual (who may have no intention of ever being an office-bearer) who has received the three first degrees, afterwards gets for a small extra fee the Mark, and after that the Chair. That is to say—in Scotland a brother, in about a month after receiving his first degree, may also have passed the chair. Such chairing, however, gives him no extra privileges; he is now merely possessed of certain secrets—word, sign, grip, &c. In short, it is a sort of side degree, which some lodges practise, and which said lodges consider their R.W.M. ought to possess to be complete. When the chair is given, a dozen or so (more or less) receive it the same evening.

In Scotland, therefore, a brother must have been R.W.M. of a lodge before he is acknowledged as a P.M., and there are R.W.M.'s there who have been chaired (on the blue), while there are others who have not. See Lawrie's "History of Freemasonry," page 423.

The query, therefore, is—Are Scotch Past Masters who have received the secrets of the chair admissible to a board of "regularly-installed Masters" in England?

Yours fraternally,

LEO.

THE CITY OF LONDON WORKING CLASSES' INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—We have great pleasure in announcing that Bro. Reeves, the hon. treasurer of the above-named excellent undertaking, was presented by the members with a very handsome time-piece in recognition of his energetic services in the cause. The secretary, Bro. Ramsey, also received a silver claret jug. The presentations took place on Monday evening, at the "Griffins," New Meat Market, Smithfield.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

By A. LEWIS.

II.—MASONRY & PUBLIC ARCHITECTURE.

"And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it; but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you."—MATTHEW x. 13.

When King Solomon had dedicated the Temple, his first act of a secular character was to bless the people committed to his charge. After God, no ruler has any duty but this. The accumulation of his father which did not impoverish his treasury was the sacred trust committed to the Grand Master of his Order. As Christ sanctified His mission by a solemn commitment of the future interests of His Church to His "peculiar people," so King Solomon committed his wonderful work to their hands. While there can be no doubt that he continually ratified the contract he had made with the Deity by the sanction of His presence, so in future ages he bade architecture be instinct with the glory of His presence. Thus, in an orderly manner did he consecrate architecture to the Highest; an interpretation alike of his original design and a realisation to the end kept in view. Nor to the present day has the effect of that enormous typical building been void. Throughout the varied scenes of the middle ages to our present era, architecture has prevailed as an honourable and meritorious science. Those faithful M.M.'s have perpetuated themselves, and in forms a thousandfold have upheld the ancient rule of beauty and holiness.

Whether the divine principle could rest enshrined in bricks and mortar, cement and stone, has been a question ever since. No one can doubt of the excellence of the attempt, whatever may be alleged as to the success of the experiment. A human emulation has succeeded to a divine, absorbing, and prophetic desire. It was not alien, even to the disciples of other faiths, to build some structure faintly imitating the noble conception of a purification of the human heart and its dedication to the satisfaction of the God-inspiring influence technically expressed by the building of the first temple of the Holy City.

Shalom (peace) was an ancient centre of universal mental and emotional attraction. There, in the time of the King of the Just, Malek-i-Sedek, we find the oil and wine, the olive branch (probably the foreshadowing of the ever-blooming cassia), with the sacred rite of hospitality, offered to the stranger. In a right line from the mystical Adam—whether Adam, Kadmon, or no—the legitimate descendant experienced at the hand of the mystical king that advancement and recognition unknown, perhaps, to many of the present day. There, the cubical stone reposed in secrecy and silence until such time as the divine essence admitted it to scientific interpretation, and from that solemn meeting—that simple rite—issued a principle of Peace and Justice throughout the world.

Defile not the Sanctuary! Self-respect and manhood depend upon the right interpretation of these four words. And here the Masonic and primeval tradition of a "temple not made with hands" comes to our aid. Warped, perhaps changed or varied, to suit the spirit of centuries, architecture remains a noble profession.

Not even the most daring priest has ventured to lay hands upon the sacred process of re-edification and demand its suspension. Symbolically, it is ever in action; actually, it is not in desuetude. The early ages, with primeval manifestations of the Shekinah, which we may assign to Moses, to David, to Zacharias, and to Simeon, were types of the hope of that symbolic rebuilding of the purity of the human heart—types in each case of the phase of mind inspired by contemplation of the Infinite Purity and Excellence. Who, even of the most debased, can enter a cathedral structure—reared, as historically we know them to be, in times of unlettered presbyters, barbarous warriors, faint-hearted traders, and brutal populations—and not be struck with awe at the magnificence of thought and the marvellous accuracy of execution around? We are taught that the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life; and the visiting cards of the operative masons of the mis-called "dark ages" are evidence substantial and real of the thoughts which caused their hands to be so cunning, the strength which gave their works such endurance, and the beauty in which the intellectual excellence of their long-since glorified minds is manifested. That Spirit did indeed give Life! "We are sown in corruption, and raised in glory," and modern speculative Masonry is the outbirth—the necessary corollary and completion—of the operative guilds of Masonry whose time-honoured works adorn not alone Europe, but all lands.

Non-Masons had better meditate the solemn truth, and pause before uttering a rash condemnation. Let them recur to the motto of this paper, and ask themselves whether, if the house had not been worthy, such peace would have come enduringly to remain in it? And before I proceed to the question of the necessity of modern buildings, either of worship or charity, being properly committed, as with few exceptions they are, to the consecrating influence of Masonry, let me put one other question: If a Cowan—an outsider, unacquainted with the esoteric mysteries of the Royal Craft—can, as before T.G.A.O.T.U. he now solemnly does, say and believe such things, what must be the absolute power, activity, and happiness of the Free and Accepted Mason in the contemplation and adjustment of the stones of the sacred edifice he builds? I ask the question, and will leave every candid mind to reply.

If in the past they received such honour, why should it not be, as it must, their inheritance now? From the time of the first line drawn by St. John the Baptist, through its completion by the second St. John, in parallel, and enclosing the equidistant point, Masonry and its seven liberal sciences have existed, culminating in a keystone of which the awful import cannot be well clothed in words.

The elder St. John was not that Light, but he bare witness of that Light; the younger St. John revealed, or revealed, that which Moses alone had beheld, and which Jacob saw but in a vision. It is this which causes me to think that it would be well to commit the sacred, patriotic, and solemn edifices of our land in perpetuity, as to consecration and foundation, to this impartial, moderate, and order-seeking body of Free and Accepted Masons. We have in our land many forms of adoring the Unseen and Ineffable, but we have none which adores with such practical good sense. The motto of the Masons, indeed, might well be—"Be not weary in well-doing," for they alone, both architecturally and morally, shed over the uninitiated world some of the light reflected from the Sun of Righteousness, which shall "arise with healing in His wings!"

CRYPTONYMUS.

JUBILEE OF THE DOMATIC CHAPTER,
No. 177.

The 50th anniversary or Jubilee Meeting of this chapter was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on the 25th March.

The chapter was opened by Comps. Brett, P.Z. as Z.; Little, H.; and Smith, P.Z., as J.; Buss, Tyrrell, Sisson, Sutton, and Cottebrune, P.Z.'s; after which Comp. Brett inducted Comp. Little (P.Z., 975) and Comp. Coutts (H., 382) into the chairs of Z. and H. respectively, and then installed Comp. Gilbert as J. The following officers were then invested: Comps. Buss, P.Z., as S.E.; Wilson, S.N.; Smith, P.Z., Treas.; Cubitt, P.S.; Foulger and Barrett, Assistant Sojourners. The M.E.Z. then delivered the following address to the companions, which was ordered to be entered on the minutes, and the chapter was closed:

Companions,—There are certain epochs in the lives of men, as well as in the existence of societies which are usually commemorated with festivity and rejoicings. The Domatic Chapter, companions, has attained a period in its history which is peculiarly associated with feelings of pleasure and gratification. We have arrived at the completion of 50 years of honourable labour in the cause of Royal Arch Masonry, and we now meet to celebrate our "Jubilee" a term which is itself suggestive of the joyful character of the occasion. But in thus commemorating an era in our existence as a body, it becomes our duty to contemplate the work of those worthy Companions, whose exertions in the past have so largely contributed to the prosperity of the chapter. It will be only a just tribute to the memories of those who have passed away for ever, and an incentive to all of us to follow in their footsteps and emulate their example. On referring to the Grand Chapter records, I find that the charter was granted to Comps. Robert Gill as 1st Z.; J. A. Farthing as H.; John Purton as J.; Andrew Dowden, Thomas Kay, Enoch Prince, Richard Pratt, William Seepelhorn, and William Frampton. The charter is dated 29th October, 1818, but the first convocation was not held until the 14th March, 1819, or 50 years ago, when Bros. William Sharp and Joseph Franklin were exalted. During the year 1819 only one other candidate was received, viz: Bro. Peter Pendlebury, who was admitted into the chapter on the 9th May. This companion, I may remark, was the grandfather of Bro. Alfred A. Pendlebury, P.M. and P.Z. 1056. Meetings were thenceforward held at the regular time, and many brethren appear to have entered into Royal Arch Masonry under the banners of the "Domatic" chapter. On the 27th April, 1832, the illustrious Brother Stephen Barton Wilson, afterwards so famous as one of the best Masons of his day, was exalted in this chapter. Another great name upon the roll is Companion John Savage, who joined on the 14th November, 1837, from the Royal York Chapter, No. 7. This distinguished and worthy chief is happily still spared to the order, although he is no longer a member of the Domatic Chapter. Among other well-known names we recognize Comps. Fras. Lambert, jun., of the eminent firm in Coventry-street, exalted 23rd May, 1839; William Evans, the jeweller of Great Queen-street, the predecessor of Bro. Spencer; and Captain Wm. Oman, the Master of St. Katharine's Docks. We now come to the stately array of Past Principals, a list of Companions not to be surpassed in any chapter in London—whether we consider their moral worth or masonic qualifications. The first on the roll, and the father of the chapter, is Past Principal William Carpenter, who was exalted on the 25th May, 1848. I need not enlarge upon his literary talents or tell you of his genial humour, which has so often sparkled round the social board, but may fitly sum up his merits by saying that he is a father of whom we are justly proud. Comp. H. G. Buss, P.Z. and S.E., is the next in seniority, having been exalted on the 27th February, 1851. To him we are indebted for the exercise of great abilities in the discharge of the important duties of Scribe, as well as for many manifestations of devotion to the interests of the chapter, and the knowledge of the laws of our order which he possesses will ever keep us in the right path. Comp. Thomas Alexander Adams is the next in rotation; he was exalted on the 29th December, 1852, and few indeed have obtained a higher position in the estimation of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance than Comp. Adams, who has ever been ready to impart to his brethren and companions the extensive knowledge he has acquired. Comp. Joseph Smith, our excellent treasurer, comes next, he having joined on the 27th April, 1853, from the Mount Sinai Chapter, 19. In Comp. Joseph Smith we possess a treasurer of inestimable value—one who studies the well being of the chapter in every particular—a treasurer who understands the happy distinction between liberality and profusion, and between economy and parsimony. As an energetic member of the various boards and committees connected with Freemasonry, Comp. Smith's career is patent to every member of the Craft. The next member, who is also a P.Z., is Comp. Thomas Tyrrell, who was exalted on the 24th January, 1856, and became 1st Principal in March, 1862. Under Comp. Tyrrell's presidency I received the honor of exaltation in the chapter, and shall ever retain a lively sense of the urbanity and dignity with which Comp. Tyrrell conducted the duties of his high office. Comp. James Brett, who was exalted 25th March, 1858, succeeded Comp. Tyrrell in the 1st chair, and, in mentioning the name of this distinguished chief, I feel that I cannot do justice to the many services which he has rendered to Freemasonry in general, and more especially to the Domatic Chapter. His reputation as a teacher of the ceremonies of this supreme degree is, I may safely allege, second to none, and his name must be for ever associated with Royal Arch Masonry. Comp. C. A. Cottebrune was admitted a member on the 23rd April, 1857, and followed Comp. Brett as 1st Principal in 1864. His is also a noted and worthy name in Freemasonry—he is a strenuous supporter of the cause; and, like most of the other Past Principals, a founder of several lodges and chapters. Our Comps. Sisson, Sutton, and Payne have also served the office of Z. of this chapter in a manner which reflects the highest credit upon them severally. Amongst other eminent R. A. Masons who were exalted in this chapter, I must not omit to mention the names of Comps. John Dixon, M.D. (P.Z. 73), exalted 26th March, 1857; George Bolton (P.Z., 169), exalted 23rd April, 1857; and John G. Chancellor (P.Z., 657), exalted 27th March, 1862. Good feeling and masonic ability have in a word distinguished all our worthy Past Principals, who I trust may long be spared to give the benefit of their great experience and sound judgment to the Domatic Chapter. Companions, it is for us to copy the example thus set by our seniors, and to endeavour to maintain the prestige of our chapter by strict attention to the offices that may be entrusted to our charge, and kindness in the due performance of their respective duties. Our names shall then be remembered with gratitude, when we too in our turn shall have passed away, like many of those whose names we commemorate to-night; our memories shall still, let us hope, be enshrined in the hearts of our brethren and companions, as true and faithful servants in the good cause of Ancient Freemasonry.

During the subsequent proceedings, Comp. Payne, the Immediate P.Z., was presented with a handsome Past Principal's jewel in recognition of his services, and after enjoying a very pleasant evening at the social board, the companions separated. The visitors were Comps. Watson (P.Z., 25), Ough (P.Z., 749), Walters (P.Z., 73), Potter (P.Z., 19), Foxall (J. 742), Edersheim and Hosgood (Z., 1056), Dr. Lucy, and our worthy and talented Comp. George Tedder.

The Emperor Constantine the Great said his life was something more honourable than that of a shepherd, but much more troublesome.—Jeremy Taylor.

The study of literature nourishes youth, entertains old age, adorns prosperity, solaces adversity, is delightful at home, unobtrusive abroad, deserts us not by day nor by night, in journeying nor in retirement.—Cicero.

Several communications are—with Bro. Hughan's "Specimens from a Masonic Quarry," and our reprint of the "Proceedings of the two Grand Lodges of England in Ratification of the Union, 1813,"—unavoidably postponed until next week.—Ed. F.

THE REWARD OF MASONIC MERIT.

IT has been justly remarked that the honors of Grand Lodge office, though doubtless equitably bestowed, are limited to a circle of brethren whose qualifications are made known by the influence of friends, to the Grand Master or his councillors. Thus, without any intention of ignoring their merit, many excellent Masons are practically excluded from the dais, because they have no advocate to set forth their claims to recognition and distinction.

Provincial brethren are more fortunate in this respect than members of metropolitan lodges, inasmuch as many Provincial Grand Masters are in the habit of recommending eminent Masons in their provinces for the purple of Grand Lodge, and this, notwithstanding the fact that many of the brethren so nominated have already received the honors of their Provincial Grand Lodges.

In London there are many distinguished Freemasons who work hard for the good of the Craft ; who lose no opportunity of advancing the interest of the Masonic Charities, and who are ever ready to communicate their knowledge freely and generously to the younger members of the Order. Yet, for the zealous London Craftsman who has ruled his lodge with ability and dignity, the jewel of a P.M. usually bounds the circle of preferment, and it is possibly the secret of the remarkable success which has attended the “higher grades,” that brethren can, in those bodies, attain much more speedily to rank, and also to participation in the governing power. We confess that we consider this to be a weak point in the administration of Masonic affairs in England, and infinitely prefer the plan, which has been adopted by the English Grand Lodge of Mark Masters, of requesting lodges to submit the names of their distinguished members to the Grand Master for selection as grand officers. It is true that appointments could not be conferred upon a tithe of the brethren so nominated, if all the lodges in England exercised the privilege at the same time ; but this might be obviated to some extent by granting the power of nomination to so many lodges in rotation. The number of Grand Stewards might also be advantageously increased to 36, reserving the prescriptive rights of the present red-apron lodges, and permitting other London lodges to nominate, in their regular turn, the additional 18 stewards. Great satisfaction would likewise be given if the Past Grand Stewards were permitted to rank in the Craft generally as Past Grand officers, instead of remaining in their present chrysalis or semi-unrecognized position. By the adoption of these or similar measures, for extending the rewards of masonic merit to deserving brethren, greater interest would be taken in the welfare of the Order—a wholesome spirit of emulation would pervade the great body of the Craft—and with increased vitality the noble objects of the Institution would become more thoroughly understood.

We ventilate these suggestions without any captious feeling, because, as we stated at the head of this article, there can be no doubt that Grand Lodge honors are at present equitably bestowed, as far as the scope of the system will permit ; but the fact remains that, under the operation of such a system, many excellent Masons—true masters of the art—are destined to perform thankless services in the outer courts of Freemasonry, because their merits are unknown to the chiefs of the tabernacle.

Masonic Miscellanea.

We are informed that the “Grosvenor” Lodge, No. 1257, will be consecrated at the Terminus, Victoria Station, on Saturday, the 24th instant, by the V.W. Bro. John Hervey, (P.G.D.), G.S.

In future the Faith Lodge of Instruction, No. 141, will meet every Tuesday evening throughout the year, at eight o'clock precisely, at Bro. Fisher's Restaurant, Metropolitan District Railway, Victoria Station, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

GRAND MASONIC CONCERT.—The Grand Concert in aid of the building fund of the Masonic Hall, Tralee, which was to have been held during the present assizes, but which was postponed on the demise of a lamented brother, was held on Monday evening in Benner's ball-room. All the beauty and fashion of the locality were present, and notwithstanding the opposition of certain parties it was a grand success.

ROMISH LIBERILITY.—On Sunday last, in the parish chapel the Freemasons were again denounced by the Very Rev. John Mawe, and all good Catholics were warned to abstain from attending their concert which was held on Monday evening. In the Dominican chapel the denunciation was repeated, in words to this effect :—“We are directed by the parish priest to state, that all Catholics who may attend the concert to-morrow are liable to excommunication.” Such is the picture of Romish liberality, to which we direct the attention of our readers. At the same time we might tell the rev. gentleman that his narrow-mindedness may very possibly recoil on himself and be of very little service to others of his co-religionists.—Kerry Evening Post, March 31.

MASONIC REUNION.—On Wednesday evening last week, about thirty ladies and gentlemen assembled in the elegant room of the Lodge Unity, Wright-street, Southport, for the purpose of inaugurating a series of friendly gatherings intended to promote the genial intercourse of the members and their families—a feature which is deservedly receiving a wider attention from the brethren of the mystic craft than it has hitherto done, and which will tend in a wholesome degree to remove the somewhat jealous feelings with which the fair sex have proverbially looked upon the supposed mysterious doings of their lords. The party first partook of a well appointed tea at the Albert Hotel, and then adjourned to the lodge-room, where preparations of a very enticing nature had been made for the especial delectation and enjoyment of the female portion of the assemblage, the rich furnishings of the room being heightened by a judicious display of flowers and evergreens kindly lent for the purpose by Mr. J. Holden, florist, of Hesketh-street, and several tables were arranged with wines, confectionary, fruits, bon-bons, &c. At intervals throughout the evening the company were enlivened by vocal and instrumental music, and by a few appropriate remarks upon the occasion of the gathering, expressive of the pleasure imparted to the members of the craft by the presence of the ladies, and evincing a desire that the event would be but the first of a long series of similar festivities—a feeling in which, of course the ladies ardently participated. In the course of the evening it was resolved that arrangements should be made for a picnic excursion to Knowsley-park, about mid-summer, for which it was felt that the Earl of Derby would graciously give his permission. After several hours genial and pleasurable intercourse, the company separated, expressing themselves highly gratified with the arrangements, and the result of this the first gathering of the kind ever held in Southport.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

The United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction—Under very favourable auspices the anniversary festival of this numerously attended Lodge of Instruction was, on Friday, the 2nd inst., held in the large room of the Horns Hotel, Kennington-park. There were nearly 100 brethren present, amongst whom were Bro. John Thomas, Preceptor, P.G. officer, and we might say a prince, in Masonry; P.M.'s Worthington, J. Stevens, Harvey, Bowles, White, Alexander (167), King; and Bros. Welsford (518), Pain, Newney, Mauley, Wolfert, Bents (177), Dawson, Jacger (S.W. 548), Niblett, Duckett (507), Driver (905), Salmon, Smith, H. J. Wright (of the Royal Jubilee), J. Walters, Dawney, C.E., Skinner (699), Poone (720), Large (838), Way (1004), Howick (1004), Scuding (852), Wilson (144), J. P. Poncione (72), G. Smith (548), Farthing (1916), T. H. Lavers (211), Boddy (1044), Salmon Gibbs (W.M. 151), T. H. Siree (245), Huddleston (975), Cooper (742), Chudley (177), Turner (902), Ball, Harris, Chas. E. Thompson, S.D. and Sec. of the Southern Star Lodge and of (177) Domestic, &c. Shortly after six o'clock the lodge was opened in due form and with solemn prayer, the brethren appearing in full masonic dress. After the routine business had been disposed of, Bro. P.M. Worthington, in an excellent manner installed Bro. J. Thomas in the chair of K.S., and the usual addresses of inducting of officers were then given. All the brethren were highly pleased at the masonic treat afforded them. Business being concluded, the lodge was closed, and the company sat down to an excellent dinner at which Bro. Thomas presided; after which the usual toasts were given with full masonic honours.

Macdonald Lodge, No. 1216.—The monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Head Quarters of the First Surrey Rifle Volunteers, Brunswick-road, Camberwell, on the evening of the 7th inst. Present, Bro. Major A. S. Irvine, P.M. and P.Z., W.M.; James Stevens, P.M. and P.Z., S.W.; G. Waterall, Steward, as J.W.; Dr. Eugene Cronin, Treasurer; J. J. Curtis, Secretary; T. Dubois, S.D.; H. Puckle, as J.D.; G. H. N. Budges, D.C.; J. Green, J.G.; M. Larham, J. H. Hastie, A. Walton, A. Fletcher, J. W. Carnell, J. A. Patton, J. B. Pike, Z. Cowdry, A. Kethro, T. G. Irvine, W. A. Willis, and Thomas Meggy, P.M.; also Bros. Capt. C. D. Driver, 19th S.R.V. (J.D. 905), Capt. Jackson, 39th Staffordshire R.V. (624 and 351), R. W. Griffith (171), J. S. Wilkinson (176), D. Pierce (144), and A. Whitlet (72), as visitors. The lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes having been read, Bros. J. A. Patton and A. Wolton were raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason in the customary efficient manner for which this lodge is becoming celebrated. Bro. W. A. Willis was passed to the second degree; and after calling off for refreshment and resuming labour, Mr. Charles Fountain was duly initiated into Freemasonry. This being the date for election of W.M. and Treasurer for the ensuing year, the names of members eligible for the former office were read, when Bro. Stevens, the present S.W., addressed the lodge, calling attention to the progress of the lodge during the past year, and the promise that if the present arrangement of officers were continued for a further twelve months the establishment of the lodge as a thoroughly good and perfect working lodge would be certainly secured. He, therefore, on behalf of the Wardens and Officers proposed that the W.M., Bro. Major Irvine, should be re-elected. This proposition met with unanimous approbation, and the re-election of Bro. Irvine was decided upon in the usual manner. Bro. Dr. Eugene Cronin was also elected Treasurer to the lodge, the ballot being unanimous. Bro. Grant was re-elected Tyler, his attention to his duties having been recognized generally by the members. An audit committee having been appointed, a proposition for the presentation of a P.M. jewel of the value of ten guineas to the W.M., at the ensuing meeting, was unanimously adopted, and a committee was appointed to determine the design thereof. The lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren separated.

PROVINCIAL.

MARGATE.—Union Lodge, No. 127.—On Friday, the 2nd instant, this ancient lodge assembled specially for the working in regular and open lodge of the sections in all the lectures in Craft Masonry, under the superintendence of Bro. Hayward, P.M., and P. Prov. S.G.D., Kent. The lodge having been opened in due form by Bro. Athelstan Harvey Boys, the W.M., and the minutes of the last regular lodge read and confirmed, Bro. Preceptor Hayward commenced his arduous labour of superintending the working of the sections by the Brethren, the order of which we here give, as the same may be interesting to those amongst our readers who may desire to "go and do likewise." We will also (with due caution) give a few explanatory words as to the purport or subject matter of some of the sections, which may also prove acceptable. In the E.A. degree; the first section, the basis or elementary matter, was responded to by Bro. T. M. Compton. The second and third, the ceremonial and superstructure, by Bro. A. Wootton. The fourth, the position, support, and covering, with the episodes descriptive of Faith, Hope, and Charity, by Bro. Treves. The fifth, the ornaments, furniture, and jewels, with the allegorical definitions of the tracing-board, and the rough and perfect Ashlars, by Bro. P. M. Townsend. The sixth, the points and movements, and the cardinal virtues—temperance, fortitude, prudence, and justice, by the same. The seventh, comprising the traditional history of the Children of Israel, their miraculous escape, and Virtue, Honor and Mercy, by S. W. Hawkes. The brethren were here called from labour to refreshment, and in a quarter of an hour, from refreshment again to labour. The lodge was opened in the F.C.'s degree. The first section of the lecture in this degree, concluding with the beautiful allegorical language of the working tools; was rendered by Bro. Compton. The second, containing geometry, Euclid, creation, and the origin of architecture, by Bro. Hawkes. The third, the ceremonials, by Bro. Wootton. The fourth, the origin, progress and improvements in architecture, with its accessories and embellishments in the liberal arts, by Bro. Treves. The fifth and last in this degree, "The building of the Temple," was given by Bro. P. M. Dixon. All F.C.'s present were ordered to withdraw, and having so done, the lodge was opened in the third degree. The three sections in this advanced degree of Craft Masonry, which are ceremonial, inscriptive, and instructive, were most ably rendered by those experienced P.M.'s, Bros. Brasier and Dixon, thus completing the entire course. The lodge was then closed down, and closed. In reviewing the work of this evening it was observed that the whole of the sections were ably sustained, as well as given in extenso, by the various brethren above-mentioned, and where all did so well, it would appear invidious to praise any one in particular. But we must specially allude to the presiding spirit and preceptor of the evening, Bro. P.M., E. C. Hayward, whose duties must have been exceedingly arduous; as any brother who reflects that there were in all upwards of 400 questions, besides introductory and concluding matter given by him in the course of the evening, must admit. Bro. John Harvey Boys, the Past Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Kent, who was present, stated that great praise was due to the brethren and to their instructor for the perseverance necessary to gain such efficiency, and that they might consider the labors of the evening to have earned them a triumph honorably obtained; for to the best of his belief and experience the work done that evening had never before been gone through in open lodge in the province of Kent. The brethren then adjourned to refreshment, and we think that our readers will agree with us that they deserved and must have needed it.

LIVERPOOL.—Mariner's Lodge, No. 249.—This ancient lodge held its monthly meeting on Thursday evening, April 1st, when there was a numerous attendance of members and visitors. The W.M., Bro. De la Perelle, presided. The minutes of previous meeting were read and duly confirmed. Messrs. John Lloyd Tom, Drummond, and Alex. Jarvis were declared elected, and the two first-named gentlemen being present were initiated, in accordance with the ancient usages of the Order. The following brethren were elected as joining members:—John Trott (914), M. Griffiths (151, Scotch Cons.), Louis Wylde, Lodge "Consuelo del Imposunio," Buenos Ayres. A request was read from the following brethren for a recommendation of their petition to Grand Lodge for a warrant of constitution to enable them to open a new lodge, to be designated "The Neptune":—Bros. Williams and Healings, P. Masters; A. Davies, J. Richardson, J. Croxton, J. Pemberton, J. Taylor, P. B. Gee, J. T. Dixon, and W. Roberts. The recommendation was unanimously granted. Bro. Hyde was raised to the sublime degree of M.W., Bro. Craue, P.M., officiating. In response to an application from Bro. Banning, J.W., 343, it was resolved to vote three guineas towards the Masonic Life Boat Fund; several sums were also voted as relief for brethren in distress. It may here be remarked that this lodge is very generous in the application of its funds to deserving brethren. The sanction of the lodge was given to the petition of Widow Bach to the "Board of Benevolence." It was also resolved to send a letter of condolence to Widow Wilkin, on the occasion of the death of her husband, an old and respected member of the lodge. Nothing more appearing for the good of Masonry, the lodge was closed in due time and solemn manner, the brethren separating in peace and harmony.

CHESTERFIELD.—Scarsdale Lodge, No. 681.—A regular meeting of the members of this lodge was held at the Masonic Hall, Chesterfield, on Thursday evening, the 1st instant. There was a good attendance of brethren, and Bros. Wilfred, Edmunds, and Henry Slack were passed to the second or Fellow-craft degree, the charge being delivered by Bro. Halehurst. Bro. Holford was appointed J.D. for the remaining portion of the year, in the place of Bro. Jas. Fox, who has resigned that office in consequence of his leaving the district. For the information of the brethren generally, but more especially for the two who had taken the degree, the W.M., Bro. S. Foulds delivered the beautiful and impressive lecture on the tracing-board peculiar to the Fellow-craft degree. Bro. Sheldon, who is 83 years of age, being in a very precarious position, a committee was appointed to visit him and relieve his necessities so far as they might think requisite.

IRSWICH.—Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 959.—At the monthly meeting of this lodge held on Monday, 5th instant, two brethren initiated at the last lodge were advanced to the second degree. The M. of the C. explained the working tools of a F.C. The charge was given by a P.P.S.G.W., of the Province. A letter of condolence upon the death of the father of the R.W., P.G.M. Sir R. A. S. Adair, and of congratulation upon his accession to the ancestral honors was written, and signed by the officers of the lodge, and after a proposition for initiation the lodge was closed in harmony.

ISLEWORTH.—Villiers Lodge, No. 1194.—The first regular meeting of this lodge for its summer session was held at the Northumberland Arms Hotel, Isleworth, on Saturday, the 3rd instant, when the lodge was duly opened by Bro. E. Clark, F.R.S., B.A., the I.P.M., in the unavoidable absence of Bro. Dr. Sidney E. Clarke, the W.M. Among other officers present we noticed Bros. J. Trickett, C.E., S.W.; W. Dodd, J.W.; R. Gurney, Treas.; R. W. Little, P.M., Sec.; H. Allman, S.D.; T. Smale, D.C.; and W. Harvey, W.S. The acting W.M., after the confirmation of the minutes, passed Bro. Major H. W. Palmer to the second degree, after which Bro. Little, P.M., raised Bros. E. H. Dalby and W. B. Tustin to the sublime degree of M.M. The name of a candidate for initiation was withdrawn by the proposer, in consequence of a generally expressed opinion that his introduction into the Order would be incompatible with the excellent maxims, recently promulgated by order of the M.W. Grand Master upon the subject of initiations into Freemasonry. The by-laws of the lodge were then, pursuant to notice, carefully considered seriatim, the annual subscription to the lodge for dining members being fixed at two guineas, and for non-dining members at one guinea. The initiation and joining fees were also fixed at five and two guineas respectively, to be increased to six and three guineas when the lodge numbers 35 members. Three gentlemen were proposed for initiation, and six brethren for joining, after which the lodge was closed. The visitors present upon this occasion were Bros. G. Cattel, P. Prov. G.D. Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire, P.M. 442; W. F. N. Quilty, P.M. 862, and G. C. Tustin, Gresham Lodge, 869. Although the "Villiers" Lodge has been established only eighteen months its present position is highly satisfactory in every point of view. Fifteen initiations and two joinings during that period, added to eight founders still members, represent solid progress in numbers, and what is better, each name added to the roll promises to be a credit to the Order. The next meeting of the lodge will be held on the first Saturday in May.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

PROVINCIAL.

LANCASHIRE.—Provincial Grand Chapter.—A Provincial Grand Chapter, Western Division, Lancashire, was held at the Masonic Temple, Liverpool, on Tuesday se'nnight. Present, Sir T. G. Fermer Hesketh, Bart. M.P., Z.; Col. Birchall, H.; Companion Bourne, J.; H. S. Alpass, Scribe, E.; C. J. Banister, Scribe, N.; P. Armstrong, 1st Ass. Soj.; J. Hamer, Treas.; Thos. Wylie, Director of ceremonies; Peter Ball, Janitor, and between thirty and forty principals and past first principals of the chapters in the province. The Chapter was opened by the Prov. Grand Supt., M. E. Companion Younghusband, Principal Soj. by letter stated his inability to attend. The minutes of the of the last convocation were read and confirmed. The accounts of the Treasurer were submitted, having been duly audited, and were passed unanimously. M. E. Companion Hamer was elected Treasurer, and Companion Ball Janitor for the ensuing year. The following Companions were then appointed officers of the Provincial Grand Chapter, and invested:—Companions Col. Birchall, H.; Bourne, J.; Alpass, Scribe, E.; Mott, Scribe, N.; Armstrong, Principal Soj.; Laidlaw, 1st Ass., Soj.; Pierpoint, 2nd Ass., Soj.; Thos. Wylie, Registrar; Forster, Sword Bearer; Williams, Standard Bearer;

Robt. Wylie, D. Cars.; March, Steward. M. E. Companion Birchall, in the name of the officers of the Provincial Grand Chapter, presented a jewel of office in solid gold to the M.E.Z., in an eloquent address which was warmly applauded. The M.E.Z. thanked the officers for the handsome present, saying it would be his pride to hand it down to his children. On the motion of M.E. Companion R. Wylie the sum of ten guineas was voted unanimously in aid of the fund for the monument erected to the memory of the late M.E. Companion Walmsley. The Chapter was then closed in solemn form.

LANCASTER. — Rowley Chapter, No. 1051. — A meeting of the Companions of this Chapter was held on Wednesday evening last week, at the Masonic Rooms, Athenæum, Lancaster. There were present, Ex. Comp. Moore, M.E.Z.; Ex. Comp. Bagnall, H.; Ex. Comp. Mason, J.; Comp. Hall, E.; Mercer, P.S.; Whimfray, J. Bell and Watson, Janitors. A ballot was taken for the following hon. members, who were unanimously elected: Ex. Companions W. B. Smith (P.Z. 74 Birmingham), E. Bushier (P.Z. 129 Kendal), A. C. Mott, (P.Z. 241 Liverpool), and J. Bowes (P.Z. 129 Kendal). Companions J. L. Whimfray and John Bull were also elected as joining Companions. Brothers J. M. Moore and R. Taylor were balloted for as candidates for exaltation, the last mentioned as serving Companion by dispensation from the M.E. Superintendent of the Province. Bros. J. M. Moore and Joseph Fenton, being in attendance, were duly exalted to the degree of Royal Arch by the M.E.Z., the same degree being afterwards conferred upon Bros. E. Storey and R. Taylor. Several candidates were proposed for exaltation, and the business of the evening being ended the Chapter was closed in due form.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

LANCASTER. — Red Rose Conclave, No. 12. — On Thursday evening last week, a meeting of this conclave was held at the Masonic Rooms, Athenæum, Lancaster, under the presidency of Ill. Sir Knight J. Daniel Moore, M.D., F.L.S. M.P.S. Inspector General for North Lancashire; the second chair being occupied by E. Sir Knight Mason, V.E. Bros. J. M. Moore, 1051, W. Hall, S.W., 1051, and J. Bell, 281, were duly installed Knights of the Order by the M.P.S. who afterwards gave the traditional history. Sir Knight Bagnall, Recorder, officiated as prefect.

We beg to call attention to the following cases:—

ROYAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION FOR AGED FREEMASONS, May Election, 1869.—Bro. George Cooke, seventy-three years of age, initiated in the Pomfret Lodge, No. 360, in 1830, and continued a subscribing member ten years. In 1840 was the first Master of the Lodge of Merit, No. 466, and continued a subscribing member up to 1856. Has been in practice as a Solicitor for 50 years, but through heavy losses, gout, loss of sight (he being nearly blind, as certified by Bro. Jabez Hogg, P.G.D.), and other afflictions, is no longer able to transact any business. Has a wife and two daughters entirely dependent on him for support. The case is strongly recommended by Bro. S. Tillett, of No. 22, Leinster-terrace, Lancaster-gate, W., who will be glad to receive proxies.

ROYAL FREEMASONS' GIRLS' SCHOOL, October Election, 1869.—Martha Stone, an orphan, aged 9 years, is a daughter of our late Bro. John Cranch Stone, Master Mariner of Brixham. He died at sea on the 27th day of January, 1868, off Cardiff, while on a voyage from St. Michael's, suddenly, leaving a widow and five little children, the eldest only eleven years old, and quite unprovided for. Bro. Stone was initiated in Lodge "True Love and Unity," No. 248, Brixham, on the 20th August, 1862, of which Lodge he continued a subscribing member until the time of his death. His widow is left entirely destitute, without any means of support. The case is strongly recommended by Bro. W. J. Hughan, P.M. Lodge "Fortitude," No. 131, Truro, Cornwall; and Bro. H. Browne, J.G.D., 32, Craven-street, Strand, London.

We are informed by a correspondent, "one of the Craft," that a testimonial to Bro. Spratt, Secretary of the New Concord Lodge of Instruction, No. 815, is on the tapis, and we readily call the attention of the numerous brethren who know Bro. Spratt to the fact, that an opportunity now exists of showing their appreciation of his merits.

The Marquis of Bute was created a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre by the Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem on the 11th ult., the sword used in conferring the accolade being that said to have belonged to Godfrey de Bouillon. This distinction is granted only to Roman Catholic gentlemen of position. The Masonic degree of the same name now worked in England and America has no connection with the Papal Order.

ESPECIAL GRAND LODGE FOR THE DEDICATION OF FREEMASONS' HALL.

We have great pleasure in giving hereunder the notice issued by the Grand Director of Ceremonies, respecting the Grand Lodge to be holden on the 14th inst:—

An Especial Grand Lodge will be held on Wednesday, the 14th of April, 1869, at half-past Four o'clock precisely, for the Inauguration of the Buildings of Freemasons' Hall.

The Members of Grand Lodge will assemble in the Zetland, and, after clothing, proceed into the Great Hall.

The Grand Officers having clothed, will assemble in the Board Room.

The Procession will be formed in the Corridor on the Ground Floor, and proceed in the following order up the Grand Staircase and along the Corridor to the Great Hall, viz:—

Stewards of the Inauguration Festival.
Grand Stewards.

Steward. { bearing the Sacred Law on a Cushion. } Steward.
The Deputy Grand Master with the Square.
The Grand Sword Bearer.
Grand Steward. THE GRAND MASTER. Grand Steward.
Senior Grand Deacons.
Two Grand Stewards.
Grand Tyler.

The M.W. Grand Master having taken his place on the Throne, Grand Lodge will be opened.

The Ceremony will be commenced with a prayer by the Rev. Thomas T. F. Ravenshaw, Grand Chaplain.

The Grand Superintendent of Works will approach the Throne, and hand to the Grand Master the General Plan of the Buildings.

The Chairman of the Building Committee will address the Grand Master, and give an explanatory statement in reference to the progress and completion of the Buildings.

An Anthem will then be sung, after which, the Grand Master having descended from his Throne, the following procession will be formed, viz:—

The Grand Chaplain (carrying on a Cushion the Volume of Sacred Law), with the Square and Compasses.
The Junior Grand Warden,
carrying the Cornucopia, with Corn.
The Senior Grand Warden (carrying the Ewer, with Wine).
The Deputy Grand Master (carrying the Ewer, with Oil).
The Grand Sword Bearer.
THE GRAND MASTER.

His Lordship will then proceed with the formal ceremony of the Act of Dedication, and having resumed his seat, will declare the building dedicated to pure Ancient Masonry, and the Grand Director of Ceremonies will proclaim it accordingly.

The Rev. Robert J. Simpson, Grand Chaplain, will deliver an Oration.

Another Anthem will then be sung.
The Grand Lodge will be closed, and the M.W. Grand Master conducted to his room.

The Grand Lodge procession will re-formed, and His Lordship, accompanied by such distinguished visitors as may be present, will proceed into the Banqueting Hall.

By Order of the M.W. Grand Master,
ALBERT W. WOODS.
Grand Director of Ceremonies.

For the information of the Craft, we subjoin the text of a notice sent to all Masters of Lodges, relative to the "Inauguration" ceremony at Freemasons' Hall:—

W. MASTER.—Your attendance is requested at an Especial Grand Lodge, to be holden at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 14th day of April instant, being the day appointed by the M.W. Grand Master for the Inauguration of the New Masonic Buildings in Great Queen-street.

The Masters, Past Masters, and Wardens of Lodges are to be in their places in Grand Lodge at Four o'clock p.m.

The Grand Lodge will be opened at half-past Four o'clock precisely.

No Brother can be permitted to remain in the Corridors, or in the approaches to the Great Hall.

All Brethren, Members of Grand Lodge (except Grand Officers and those called upon to take part in the ceremony) are to be in their places by Four o'clock p.m.

Members of Grand Lodge are first entitled to Seats in Grand Lodge. By special permission of the M.W. Grand Master, if space should allow it, Brethren properly clothed and vouched for as Master Masons will be admitted on this occasion to the lower part of the Hall after the procession has entered.

By Command of the M.W. Grand Master,
JOHN HERVEY, G.S.

Answers to Correspondents.

[All communications for THE FREEMASON should be written legibly, on one side of the paper only, and, if intended for insertion in the current number must be received not later than 10 o'clock a.m. on Thursdays, unless in very special cases. The name and address of every writer must be sent to us in confidence.]

MENTOR.—Your letter on the "Zetland Commemoration Committee" is rather too severe, although it is true enough that there has been gross blundering.

BRISTOL.—We have received your letter, and gladly welcome so able a Mason as one of our correspondents. It is not our intention to insert in THE FREEMASON communications of the nature to which you allude, as we quite agree with you that no good purpose can be served by the use of such intemperate and unfriendly language.

L.F.—1. No. Members of English lodges comprise men of all nationalities and every creed. 2. Twenty one years, unless a dispensation be obtained. 3. The amount varies in different lodges—in London, nothing under five guineas. 4. The Book of Constitutions, price 1s. 6d., to be had at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street.—If you write again, and we find on inquiry that your statements are correct, we may be able to forward your views.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

With our number for next Saturday we intend issuing a SUPPLEMENT, containing a full account of the proceedings at the

INAUGURATION FESTIVAL AT FREEMASONS' HALL.

EARLY ORDERS ARE REQUESTED.

The Freemason, SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1869.

THE FREEMASON is published on Saturday Mornings in time for the early trains. The price of THE FREEMASON is Twopence per week; quarterly subscription (including postage) 3s. 3d. Annual Subscription, 12s. Subscriptions payable in advance. All communications, letters, &c., to be addressed to the Editor, 3 & 4, Little Britain, E.C. The Editor will pay careful attention to all MSS. entrusted to him, but cannot undertake to return them unless accompanied by postage stamps.

THE CHURCH OF ROME AND FREEMASONRY.

"Cardinal Cullen, in a pastoral issued this morning, declared that all Catholics attending Masonic balls are excommunicated, the Church condemning all secret societies."—Standard, Saturday, April 3.

THE Masonic Order takes no cognizance of sect or creed—it closes its gates against no man provided he be not an atheist, an imbecile or a slave, because it cherishes the broad principles of toleration, and acknowledges the right of the creature to worship his Creator in the manner most pleasing to his own conscience.

But these principles find no favour in the sight of sacerdotalists—these laws which are founded upon the true rights of man, are not reconcilable with the pretensions of mitred priests and pontiffs.

Hence the warfare which they have waged, and ever will wage, with Freemasonry—hence the manifestoes—the allocutions—the anathemas, which Rome has hurled against our beloved Order—fulminations of wrath which, in the present day, are as terrorless to Freemasons as the rough mutterings of a March wind. Nevertheless, these utterances from the Vatican, which are re-echoed by the satraps of the Papacy in every land, are worthy of attention inasmuch as they reveal the undying hatred of the Romish priesthood to TRUTH in whatever shape it manifests itself. The spirit which dragged Ridley and Latimer to the stake—which immolated Jerome of Prague, and Savonarola—is still abroad, though happily its vengeance is now confined to vain denunciations and inconsequential threats. Of this we require no stronger proof than the announcement that in one of his recent pastorals, Cardinal Cullen pronounces the penalty of excommunication upon all Roman Catholics attending Masonic balls.

To the Cardinal's morbid and distempered imagination it is evident that danger to the church is mysteriously connected with the mazes of a waltz or the seductive influences of a quiet quadrille. The fact is that Rome views with uneasiness and alarm the communion of man with his fellows—she dreads an association in which the members can shake off the trammels of every day life, and kneel together at the common altar of Charity and Fraternity. She detests an Order whose ceremonies, beautiful as they may be, are shrouded from her view, and unsubordinated to the objects of the Church. She abhors a system which works silently and secretly, yet, aided by discipline, most effectually, in extending the empire of reason, and curbing the sway of passion and prejudice. Every effort, therefore, which her complex but wonderfully perfect organization can put forth, will be unscrupulously made by the Church of Rome to overthrow Freemasonry.

For this we ought to be prepared, and we say it in no spirit of sectarianism, but from the fullest conviction that Papal domination is not merely a question of religion and faith, with which, as Freemasons, we are not called upon to deal. It is a subject which concerns us as citizens of a free country, because the foes of our Order are the enemies of liberty and civilization; and we may rest assured that the diffusion of Masonic principles, and the cultivation of Masonic virtues, will be our most effective weapons in this warfare of Light against Darkness, of Truth against Error—of Freedom against Despotism.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

[Under this head, in future, we purpose answering correspondents on Masonic law.]

W.M.—The law to which you refer, Art. 6, page 43 of the Constitution, applies solely to Grand Stewards, as you will perceive by the heading.

A FOREIGN BROTHER.—There is no law against brethren of foreign lodges being exalted in English chapters, but proof of their having been M.M.'s for 12 months is required.

SECRETARY.—Great care should be exercised in the examination of visitors. There are shoals of "Philadelphes" and other impostors prowling about the country and levelling black-mail on the credulous and unwary. Study the Book of Constitutions, page 89.

When a member of a lodge makes a protest as well as a complaint against the ruling of a W.M., and makes an entry in the Secretary's books to refer to the G.L., the said member demands copies of said minutes, is it in the power of the said W.M. to refuse to give copies, although frequently written to do so by the aggrieved brother?—P.M.—[If the brother requires the copies in order to shape his complaint to superior authority, it is the W. Master's bounden duty to permit him to copy so much of the minutes as may relate to the point at issue, and his not allowing this right of the appellant is in itself a breach of duty, to which the attention of his Provincial Grand Master or other competent officer should at once be called.]—ED. (To be continued.)

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

A very learned Jewish Mason states that the Deacon in the second degree represents either Aaron or Hur.—COSMOS.

If the R.A. ritual, referred to by Antiquarius in THE FREEMASON of last week, be genuine, it would throw considerable light upon a dubious point in the history of Masonic degrees, viz., the substitution of the traditions related in the English Royal Arch degree for those now given in connection with the A. and A. Rite.—30°.

It may not be generally known that the Sword of State, which is borne before the Grand Master of England, was "the old trusty sword of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, afterwards worn by his successor in war, the brave Bernard, Duke of Saxe-Weimar, with both their names on the blade, and further enriched with the arms of Norfolk in silver on the scabbard." This invaluable relic was presented to the Grand Lodge by Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, Past Grand Master, on the 29th January, 1731.—ANTIQUARIUS.

The Ancient and Accepted Rite.—"Rose Croix" is, no doubt, well acquainted with the method of reasoning by which it has been established that Celtic, Sanskrit, Persian, Slavonic, Teutonic, and Greek are derived from the central "Aryan" language of our ancient civilised ancestors who emerged from the banks of the Oxus as early, perhaps, as the time of Abraham. A like process may convince him of the correctness of our Templar traditions. Written proof must not be sought in Lancashire, but at York, London, and Bristol—perhaps Stirling and Edinburgh, though I imagine the latter branch, into which Prince Charles Edward Stuart was received in 1745, was non-Masonic, and on Stirling it rests to prove whether we received the Masonic branch from Scotland or that country from England. Of the various branches, the British is the only one that has never put forward any extravagant claims. It held its meetings anciently in the body of an Arch Chapter which took a military obligation, the ceremonial being very different to that now in use, and claimed, prior to 1851, to represent the united orders of St. John and the Temple. After its connection with Freemasonry (which in England certainly had a Grand Master before the revival and ceremonial revision of 1717) it established the Order of Holy Royal Arch Knight Templar Priests, as claimed on its certificates in 1686, and having, as before stated, points in common with the present 17th degree A. and A.R.; and then the Rose Croix followed as a chivalric version of the Master Mason. When the Stuarts were expelled from the British throne they seem to have kept up a connection with English Freemasonry, which had continued from the time of James I., and a chapter was established at Arras, in France, which included chivalric Masonry. That this was established soon after 1700 is proved by the following:—1. The excommunication of the Stuart Templars by the Ordre-du-Temple. Their charter of transmission must be a forgery, and cannot well be later than 1705, because the signatures of the Duke du Duras and Philip of Orleans have been pronounced genuine. 2. Dr. Leeson has stated that he had in his possession a Belgian Craft Constitution, printed in 1722, which mentions several Scotch high degrees, though these cannot well be all identified under the names given. Is the Stuart Rose-Croix charter of 1721 kept back through its Templar connection? 3. Baron Hinde's theory was, that the Templar Order was amalgamated with Freemasonry in Scotland in 1314, so that such connection was, in his time, so old that different theories could be broached about it, or our brother the Baron was no better than a knave and an impostor. 4. The Chevalier Ramsay taught in the Ancient and Accepted Rite:—First, that the Stuart (James I.) connection with Freemasonry in a degree which might have been substituted for the Templar in the Arras rite through the excommunication; of which Order Ramsay's instructor, Fenelon, was a member; and, secondly, the Templar origin of the Arch and general connection of the Templar Order with Freemasonry. So that in 1728 there were colourable grounds for his theory, or Ramsay was as great an impostor as Baron Hinde. 5. There are some attacks, &c., on Freemasonry alluding to Templars so early as 1760, but, passing over these, the Ancient Masons, who invariably avoided extravagant statements, claimed to represent the pre-revivalists of 1717, and included the Arch and Templar as equally genuine with the other degrees.—There must have been authority for all these views, and England and the Stuarts must have been the central authority. Surely our brother is sufficiently acquainted with English history to see a difficulty, apart from Masonic secrecy, in expecting to find written proof of an Order of which the exiled Stuarts were the chiefs! Why, in my own poor family connections two individuals, whose arms we quarter, lost their lands and one his head. The degrees representing the crosses amalgamated with St. John and the Temple, I take to be very modern. These are Knight of the White Cross (St. John), Knight of Malta, and Knight of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, though this latter may possibly have been originally introduced under competent authority, as it has been a good deal trafficked in as a public Order. I am now in correspondence with an excellently well-informed brother, and also with the Grand Master, representative of the Ancient Imperial House of Constantinople, on the Order; but my impression is, at present, that the claims of the present revivalists are wholly groundless.—JOHN YARKER, Manchester.—[We happen to know that our learned brother's views upon the subject of the Red Cross Order, though shared by many, are based upon insufficient data. The full explanation will be forthcoming soon.]—ED. F.

NOTES BY A NOVICE.

GUARDIAN ANGELS.

"In the Name of the Lord God of Israel, having on my right MICHAEL, and on my left GABRIEL; before me, ARIEL, and behind me, RAPHAEL; and above my head the refulgent glory of Almighty God."

The authors of the Hebrew Liturgy, in composing the prayers to be recited by every religious and pious Hebrew before retiring to rest, directed that the foregoing verse should be repeated by every one professing the faith of an Israelite; that even the infant should lisp it, in order that by early impressions being made upon the child of Five beneficial results might ensue to the man of Fifty.

It is a curious fact that the idea of a Guardian Angel has been cherished by all Nations, and may be traced more or less in various systems of religion, and biblical students entertain the belief that the idea originated from the construction placed upon the following text, when the Lord said to his beloved and faithful servant Moses, "Behold, I send an Angel before thee to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared." (Exodus xxiii. 20.) A critical examination of the words prefixed to this article will lead to inquiry as to the necessity of an intermediate Being, when we are told that the children of Israel were under the immediate guidance and protection of the Deity Himself. That an apparent contradiction exists few will deny, although the obvious meaning was to impress upon the minds of erring mortals how essentially requisite it is at all times to keep in view the immeasurable greatness and power of Jehovah, and thus be convinced that we are none of us sufficiently pure in heart and spirit to approach, unaided, His heavenly seat of glory. A closer analysis of the prayer or verse will, however, demonstrate that the Rabbins did not intend to convey the notion that the intercession of angels was necessary to man, and the following commentary on the abbreviations of the first letter of the names of the four angels above-cited clearly illustrates the doctrine they propounded:—"The oral law, which teaches us to find out all the beauties of the written law, so that man may be enabled to fulfil the precepts of the Lord, is justly entitled to the appellation of the Guardian of Israel, and hence the name Gemara; the Gimmel being the first letter of Gabriel, the Mem of Michael, the Rish of Raphael, and the Aleph of Ariel. And thus upon him who bears in mind such studies, the Angel of the Lord sheds his grace, and shields him from all harm and from all evil."

NEW METROPOLITAN LODGES.

The M.W. Grand Master has been pleased to grant warrants for the following new lodges in the London District:—

No. 1259, The "Duke of Edinburgh," to be held at the New Globe Tavern, Bow-road. Bro. John Wright to be the first W.M., and Bros. Jex and Lusty the Wardens.

No. 1260, The "Hervey," (so named after the esteemed Grand Secretary), to meet at the George Hotel, Walham Green, with Bro. George King, jun., as the W.M., and Bros. G. King, sen., and P. H. Jones as S. and J.W. respectively.

No. 1261, The "Golden Rule," at the Great Western Hotel, Craven-road, Bayswater, of which Bro. J. Egles will be the first Master, assisted by Bros. J. Sunley and A. G. Sharpe as Wardens.

It will interest many of our readers to learn that during his sojourn at Cairo, the Prince of Wales visited the Bulwer Lodge, No. 1088, of which Bro. Reade, the English Consul-General is the present W. Master.

H.R.H. Prince Arthur left London, on Sunday, in order to visit Ireland, where it is understood that he will stay for a month. He left Holyhead at eight in the morning, and landed at Kingstown at twelve. A great variety of festivities will mark the Royal visit; amongst which, the Masonic Ball, on the 9th inst., is expected to be one of the gayest. The Pope having excommunicated all Freemasons, the fair daughters of Erin who acknowledge the sovereignty of his Holiness will be placed in an awkward position.—Standard.

PAST MASTERS AS PRECEPTORS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The favourable notice taken by Bro. Hughan and yourself of my letter under the above heading, published in No. 3 of THE FREEMASON, embolden me further to pursue the subject, and to entertain a decided attempt to bring under the consideration of our supreme authority the whole question of uniformity of ritual.

For this purpose the suggestion thrown out by you in your leader as to "the presentation of a respectful memorial to the M.W. Grand Master," is most valuable, as there can be no doubt that upon a full and fair representation of existing differences throughout Craft working, our Masonic Sovereign would cause such measures to be taken as would entirely set aside the present deterrent influences against earnest study of the Masonic Art.

The views I have already expressed being entertained by very many Brethren of my acquaintance, and notably so by those at present associated with me in the "Macdonald" Lodge, No. 1216, the W.M. of which lodge will cheerfully assist me in endeavouring to carry out the suggestion you make, I shall append to this letter my name and address, in order that direct communications may be made if desired by those whose opinions accord with ours, and I beg most earnestly of such Past Masters and others who agree that "something should be done, and that quickly," to join us in an early conference on the subject, that we may set forth a full and impartial memorial, so strongly supported as to justify the hope and expectation of that earnest consideration which the M.W. Grand Master would surely give to it before arriving at his decision.

I sincerely trust that the proposed movement will have the sympathy and assistance of highly respected and influential members of the Craft. Without desiring to ape a humility I do not feel, or to detract from my right to advance and support opinions respecting Masonic jurisprudence, I yet fear that my position is not quite equal to the importance of the subject, and that the probabilities of success may be impaired through that cause. It would therefore be most gratifying if others would assume the leadership, and as my object is entirely the "good of Freemasonry in general," and not self-interest or self-advancement in particular, a cheerful subordinate assistance would more than content me whilst watching the progress of the work.

During this month therefore I propose to receive from those who desire to help forward the proposal for a memorial, their letters on the subject, and some time during May to appoint a place and date for holding a Conference, when such arrangements may be made as in the opinion of those present will best conduce to secure the end in view. If, meanwhile, either yourself or correspondents could aid the movement by further expressions of opinion, many valuable suggestions and hints may be made for the consideration of those who will take an active part in promoting the establishment of the "Lodge of Preceptors."

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours truly and fraternally,

OPERATIVE LODGES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have to thank Bro. John Yarker for his kind reference to some papers of mine on Operative Masonic Lodges. Like that able brother, no doubt, I find it much easier to ask questions than to answer them; from the fact, that whereas the former may be done with ease in a few words, the latter frequently requires much time and careful examination.

So far as possible I will take his remarks seriatim, and do my best, in the short space of time at my disposal, to afford him the reasons why I do not accept his views:—

(a) Up to this time, none of the records of Operative Masonry in England before the 18th century, or anterior to the revival of 1717, have been produced by any authority whatever to show any important difference between the working in this country and in Scotland. On the contrary (excepting the hereditary Grand Mastership of Scotland), the two countries contain many proofs of the similar character of operative Masonry everywhere; for instance, Kilwinning and York often read on their minutes as one body. So also Banff, Aberdeen, and others, with this difference, however, that "Mother Kilwinning" has not only before the "Revival," but also since, kept exclusively to Craft Masonry.

(b) I am not aware of any Grand Master in any part of the world being appointed before 1717, and therefore must take exception to Bro. Yarker's next observation relative to the "Stuarts," and also the "Annual Assembly" of 1663.

In the fact that we have the "M.S.S." to refer to from which the "Revised Grand Lodge Regulations were compiled" of 1723, and since, and to which Bro. Dermott has alluded, I must beg of Bro. Yarker to name any of those precious documents that mention any Masonic degrees beyond the first. They certainly allude to Craftsmen, and Master Masons, as officially higher than the Entered Apprentice, but not as possessed of other secrets. On this point we know that neither the records of Kilwinning, York, "Antiquity," Stirling, nor any other operative lodge prior to the "Revival" ever mention anything but the "word" that was given to Masons beyond the "Apprentice's." By perusing the Harleian M.S.S., vol. 1242, British Museum, it will be seen that the term "Grand Master" does not occur. The following is the clause referred to:—30thly, "That for the future, the said society, company, and fraternity of Freemasons shall be regulated and governed by one Master, and assembly and Wardens, as the said company shall think fit to choose at every yearly general assembly."

(c) Perhaps Bro. Yarker would kindly inform me where I can get any evidence of the degrees, other than Apprentice, being in the gift of these "Annual Assemblies?" The proof to satisfy me must be documentary evidence of a date anterior to the Revival.

(d) I have just examined the Rawlinson MSS. and the letter mentioned, and all I can say is, that if Bro. Yarker thinks the "fifth order" really does mean the Royal Arch, I will then tell him why I think it does not. At present, after reading the letter, it is difficult for me to think he can.

The Stirling "Cross-legged Masons" I have referred to in my "Analysis," and beg to refer Bro. Yarker to the remark I made then on the subject. If not accessible to him, I will gladly forward them to him on receipt of his address.

(e) The learned brother R. Woof is to me a great authority, on the Knights Templars especially, and his "Sketch of the Order" I value exceedingly. That brother, however, does not mention anything relative to the antiquity of the Royal Arch and Craft degrees in his work; neither do I think he would admit that the "Royal Arch Knight Templar Priests" were instituted, or were even in existence, so early as 1686. I am not aware of any document, certificate, or record that even mentions such a title before the middle of the last century.

In conclusion, I would observe that the quotation from the Constitutions of 1723, as given in THE FREEMASON of April 3rd (i.e., "Apprentices must be admitted Fellow Crafts and Masters only here, unless by dispensation from the Grand Master") does not ever occur before.

In haste to finish, I would also like to say that, though not able to accept Brother Yarker's views, I most sincerely admire his zeal, and appreciate very warmly his valuable efforts in the cause of Masonry.

WILLIAM JAMES HUGHAN.

FREEMASONRY VERSUS MASONRY.

From the building of the Pyramids, which may safely be classed as the oldest existing specimens of the Royal Art, down to our own iron age, "Masonry" has existed, and flourished more or less as the times went. We first find it in the eternal structures of Egypt; we again have it in the classic ideal structures of Greece; it starts up again in the more utilitarian structures of Rome; then we again find it in our noble, awe-inspiring, and heavenward-directing cathedrals, down, as I said, to our own times, which may be fairly classed par excellence as the Iron Age. Through this long period, comprising thousands of years, "Masonry" has flourished, leaving proofs of its work as it went along; not mere "footprints on the sands of time," for the next wave, perhaps, to obliterate, but marking its existence with a pen of iron on the flinty rock.

The institution of "Masonry" may, therefore, be well denominated ancient. But as for our "Freemasonry," that is a different matter altogether; its foundation as an institution, such as we now know it, dates from the time when some of our predecessors formed the idea of turning the lodge of operative masonry (with its word and grip and simple obligation given to its E.A., or Fellow of the Craft, or to an individual admitted into its simple social or friendly society) into speculative "Freemasonry," with its profuse ceremonial but grand ideas. This great change took place about the beginning of last century. Upon the humble Masonic lodge of the seventeenth and former centuries, the great fathers (although their ends were good, I am not so sure about some of their means) of "Freemasonry" founded "a structure perfect in all its parts, and honourable to its builders." That old, simple operative "lodge" may therefore be in some measure entitled to consider itself the parent of our grand Freemasonic "Temple," which, though both are called "lodges," yet as such, especially when we consider their purposes, the one bears about as much resemblance to the other as the hut of a shepherd to the palace of a king, although both are "houses."

As for different Masonic "degrees," with their beautiful ceremonies such as we now have, I hardly suppose such were in existence two centuries ago (although a word and grip and obligation, with perhaps the reading of the rules or constitutions of the lodge, were formerly given to the E.A.), and, as may easily be understood by any one fairly, with unbiassed mind, examining into the subject, our beautiful, sublime M.M. "degree" was an entirely new creation about a century and a half ago. It is altogether, therefore, a mistaken confusion of ideas that leads people to suppose that our noble institution of "Freemasonry," was in existence previous to the seventeenth century. When I say the "seventeenth century," I wish to give myself plenty of time by turning the corner of A.D. 1700.

The purposes of, and the ideas connected with "Freemasonry" are quite different and distinct from those of "Masonry," yet, somehow, the similarity of names has carried away many very worthy people, who confound and mix up the two things. Several centuries ago there were "Freemasons," that is "Freemen-masons, just as there were Freemen-wrights or Freemen-tailors; yet these old "Freemasons" were quite different from the "Freemasons" of to-day—although the name is the same, the thing itself is quite different.

The Old "Freemason" or Freeman-mason, was merely an operative tradesman who worked in stone. The "Freemason" is a worker on mind, while the other dealt with matter. Thus their spheres are altogether different; the one uses dead material the other living stones, the dead stone has to be squared by another, the honour and privilege of the living stone is to square itself, so that it may be suitable for building into "that temple not made with hands eternal in the heavens." The object of the Old Freeman-mason was to secure and keep intact his trade privileges. The duty of the new "Freemason" is to spread the cement of brotherly love, relief, and truth through all the nations of the earth, and to unite all men—whatever their position in life may be, high or low, rich or poor—into one common and universal brotherhood, ever reminding them that they are their "brother's keeper."

By the same door all enter life, and by the same gate they leave it. In these two important events of man's career all are on the level. What signifies it to the unborn babe whether its mother is a princess or a peasant, and what signifies it to your putrifying corpse whether it be cased in a coffin of gold or wood? Then when "this mortal shall have put on immortality," its future life will be based—not upon its once-possessed silver or gold, riches or honours, but—upon the brotherly love, relief, and truth of the past. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

To soften the asperities of the struggle for existence, to succour a falling brother, to comfort the widow, and protect the orphan, such is the grand noble aim and idea of "Freemasonry."

Freemasonry does not now require any false antiquity thrown around it, to recommend it, it recommends itself, while the assumption of, or brooding upon, this pseudo-past antiquity tends to prevent the upholding of its real honour—the performance of the duty of to-day. The noblest laurels of "Freemasonry" do not therefore lie in the past, but in the future—they have yet to be won. LEO.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

III.—MASONRY AND SOCIAL RANK.

T.G.A.O.T.U., in his infinite wisdom, and evidently for the greater happiness of His creation, has throughout nature and throughout society appointed a series or hierarchy of beings. Absolute equality can only exist before Him; and the universal plan—so marvellous in detail, from the microscopic animate to the highest type of human moral and intellectual activity—evinces this fact. But while—to limit ourselves to the contemplation of man and social arrangements—we perceive the absolute impossibility of social equality, we see the great principle of universal love throwing open the barriers, and to worth giving honour, when nobly desired and persistently sought.

In our several spheres of labour, no matter how exalted the rank, we find duties of corresponding magnitude affixed in a manner at once fitted to our capacities and to the limits of our intellectual strength. No reflective man cannot but see that a dead level of uniformity would soon bring about a stagnation in society, incompatible with the effectual preservation of the life of mankind as a means to the great end.

Many have been the modes adopted during the historical life of humanity to effect this gradual and healthy elevation of the races of man. Among the most sure means of increasing the comforts, confirming the orderly stability, and ensuring the happiness of all classes of the community may be reckoned the great and growing Institution of Freemasonry. While it offers to all who seek it a common bond of fraternity, and a mode of exercising intellectual vigour in all directions, it also affords a sure method of developing the noble faculties of our moral nature. To the poor man it teaches the lesson that all are subject to inevitable laws of physical suffering, which can only be obviated by a due obedience to Temperance, and justified by Prudence. To the rich man it proves the truth of the axiom that it is more blessed to give than to receive; it affords to him the luxury of charity, and instructs him in the utter nothingness of mere worldly possessions. To the true Mason, speaking untechnically—i.e., whether initiated or no—every man is a brother in the best of senses. To the untrue brother every man is an enemy. Suspicion is the great fooler of our wits.

One of the greatest advantages of Masonry is the fact of its being open to all classes of the community, subject only to restrictions to which no one can possibly object—such as a bad character, a physical incapacity, or a want of the rudiments of education. With these exceptions, prince and peasant, the capitalist and the labourer are equal before T.G.A.O.T.U. It has been said by some that the right which every Freemason has of visiting lodges is inconsistent with mere social position, but to this it may be replied that a person in an humble station of life and belonging to a lodge consistent with his degree would scarcely fail to see himself out of place in a lodge of those whom rank, fortune, or education have placed above him in the social scale; whereas, if a good Mason, understanding the principles on which the ceremonies are conducted, he would nevertheless meet with a fraternal reception wherever he might present himself. But, as a good Mason, his own common sense would deter him from entering lodges in which those in a superior rank of life assembled. But it is a healthy sign—speaking volumes for the Craft—to see men of the most exalted positions joining in the common labour of "peace and good-will to all men."

It is evident from this non-exclusive characteristic that the secrets, whatever they may be, of Freemasonry are of such a nature that they are adapted for the advancement of Humanity at large. I pass over the question, so frequently urged, of its importance to travellers in remote regions and amidst the dangers and inconveniences attendant upon explorations or war. But it is surely a reassuring idea for such as pass from land to land to be able to feel the security, that everywhere protection and fraternal aid is to be found. My own father owed the prolongation of his life to the fact of his connection with the institution; having become, in the cause of liberty, a prisoner to those of opposite opinions and interests, he obtained his freedom from the circumstance and escaped the extreme penalty.

Much has been said as to the non-political character of Masonry, but it would be unfair to debar men from attempting to promote the well-being of the great principle of freedom for all. Sacred above all things in the universe, is the obligation of fighting for the advancement of political freedom; and the greatest patriots the world has seen have been, are, and ever should be, Freemasons. I name no names, but they will occur to the mind of every reader of these papers. Masonry, however, aims rather at obtaining these desirable results by the more legitimate and less violent means of peace, and by the arts of reason and self-evident arguments of justice and truth. It is not to be denied that secret societies abound which hold tyrannicide a duty and a virtue, but it would be entering on matters beyond our present scope to discuss the rightfulness or wrongfulness of such associations here. Alas! it is but too evident that the existence of such bodies is a deplorable and fatal necessity in these much disjointed times.

But "the bright particular star" is not the prerogative of any one class of our citizens or of our fellow-beings. It is a common property, and appertains to every station in life. There is also in this hierarchy of lodges an incentive of the noblest kind to emulation, and many men would fail to rise in life were there not something to which they might aspire.

All honour to those many noble and patriotic men of high rank who have for years upheld the banner of Freemasonry, and preserved its principles pure, and intact, from age to age. The heir-apparent of these realms has now added himself to this great corporation of Charity; and it is to be hoped that on his return to his native land he will diligently pursue studies which cannot fail both to interest and ennoble that imperishable element of his nature in the re-edification of which, in a consistent spirit, alone lie his hopes of an acceptance in the Grand Lodge of the Hereafter. From the humblest Mason to the most illustrious, there runs a chain of union; and in the race of emulative goodness, let us hope that the Prince will not be found lagging behind. There is plenty of work to be done—although much has been already accomplished—ere the charitable purposes for which the Royal Art exists can be fully carried out. A true and cheerful acceptance of social distinctions and grades of society, cannot fail to materially advance the objects of the Order. Esto Perpetua! CRYPTONYMUS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWO GRAND LODGES OF ENGLAND IN RATIFICATION OF THE UNION, 1813.

At an Especial Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, according to the Old Institutions, held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand, on Wednesday, the 1st December, 1813.

PRESENT.

The M.W., H.R.H. the DUKE OF KENT, G.M., on the throne; &c., &c.

8. That the Grand Treasurer be directed to issue a sufficient sum out of the fund, to defray the expenses of the said Union upon the drafts of the Deputy Grand Master, who shall submit vouchers of the appropriation thereof to the Stewards' Lodge.

9. That a number of copies of the above Articles of Union be printed, for the use of the Lodges at home and abroad.

10. That a copy of these Resolutions be transmitted to the Grand Secretary of the society of Freemasons, of which His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex is Grand Master, for the information of their Grand Lodge.

In conformity with the above Resolutions, a dispensation passed the great seal for the constitution of the Lodge of Reconciliation; and His Royal Highness the Grand Master nominated the following Brothers to form the same:—

Bros. R. F. Mestayer, No. (1), T. Harper, jun. (1), H. J. Goldsworthy (2), W. Fox (4), J. Ronalds (16), W. Oliver (77), M. Corcoran (194), R. Bayley (240), J. M'Cann (244), and Brother E. Harper, Secretary thereof.

His Highness the Grand Master then signed the said Articles, affixed the great seal thereto in Grand Lodge; and the same was countersigned by the Grand Secretary.

The Grand Lodge was then closed with solemn prayer, and adjourned to Thursday, the 23rd instant, at seven o'clock in the evening.

At an Especial Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, according to the Old Institutions, held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, in the Strand, on Thursday, 23rd December, 1813.

The R.W. Brother Thomas Harper, D.G.M. in the Chair, together with the Present and Past Grand Officers, and the Masters, Wardens, and Past Masters, of the fifty-eight Lodges in and adjacent to London.

The Meeting was also honoured by the presence of His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, G.M. of the other Fraternity.

The Minutes of the Especial Grand Lodge, on the 1st December, instant, for the Installation of His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, as Grand Master of Masons according to the Old Institutions, were read and confirmed.

The minutes of the Quarterly Communication, on the evening of the same day, were also read and confirmed.

The Minutes of the Stewards' Lodge, of 15th December, were likewise read and confirmed.

Upon motion of the R.W. Past Deputy Grand Master Perry, it was resolved unanimously—

That the most grateful thanks of this Grand Lodge be given to the Most Worshipful His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent and Strathearn, Grand Master of Masons of England according to the Old Institutions, for the gracious condescension with which he came forward in the most interesting moment, and yielded to our earnest and unanimous desire to take upon himself the truly important task of negotiating an Union with the Fraternity of Masons of which His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex is Grand Master;—for the zeal, ability and conciliation which he displayed in all the conferences that took place in the progress of the same; for the firm and brotherly determination with which he asserted, maintained, and secured the ancient landmarks of the Craft, as well as the rights and privileges of this Grand Lodge, and of all constituents;—for the earnest and strict attention which he paid to the principles of perfect equality upon which the Union was to be founded, and of the pure unity of obligation, discipline and working to be established, by which alone the Union which was affected could be rendered truly cordial, and one unsullied System of Masonry be consolidated in the Metropolis of the British Empire. And they beg leave to express the lively and warm sense which they entertain of the noble generosity which His Royal Highness has manifested in the intimation that he has made to us of his design to move in the General Assembly of the two Fraternities, to be held on the day of St John the Evangelist, that his illustrious brother the Duke of Sussex should be elected Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Freemasons of the books of the two Grand Lodges, and be thereby entitled to tickets of admission to the said Assembly of Union; and that a correct return of the whole be made to the Grand Secretary on or before the 23rd December instant.

8. That the Grand Treasurer be directed to pay such sums out of the funds of the Grand Lodge, as may be necessary to defray the expenses of the said Union.

9. That a number of copies of the above Articles of Union be printed, for the use of the Lodges at home and abroad.

10. That a copy of these Resolutions be transmitted to the Grand Secretary of the society of Freemasons, of which His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent is Grand Master, for the information of their Grand Lodge.

In conformity with the above Resolutions, a dispensation passed the great seal for the constitution of the Lodge of Reconciliation; and His Royal Highness the Grand Master nominated the following Brothers to form the same:—

Bro. Rev. S. Hemming, D.D. No. 384 R.W.M.
W. Meyrick,	I.S.W.
W. Shadbolt, G Stewards'	L, J.W.
S. Jones,	1
L. Thompson,	54
J. Jones,	66
J. H. Suarrratt,	118
T. Bell,	180
J. Joyce,	435

And Brother W. H. White, Secretary thereof.

His Royal Highness the Grand Master then signed the said Articles, and affixed the great seal thereto in Grand Lodge; and the same was countersigned by the Grand Secretary.

On a motion made and seconded, it was resolved unanimously—

That the most sincere and grateful thanks of this Grand Lodge are due, and be humbly presented to His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, the Most Worshipful Grand Master, for the unremitting attention which he has graciously condescended to bestow to the general interest and welfare of the Craft;—for the great portion of time he has devoted in transacting and regulating the concerns of the Society, and particularly for the anxious solicitude evinced by His Royal Highness for the honour of the Fraternity in renewing the negotiation for an union of the two Grand Lodges in England;—for the zeal, ability, and conciliation, which he displayed in the progress of the negotiation, firmly and with brotherly affection upholding and maintaining the ancient landmarks, and the rights privileges, and purity and unity of obligation, discipline, and dignity of this Grand Lodge, and the several Lodges under the Constitution of England, founding the negotiation upon principles of perfect equality, and working, to be established—thereby erecting the edifice of the Masonic Union on a basis constituted of such materials as must be rendered more firm and compact by revolving years, and on which the hand of time can work only to prove that Masons possess the art of raising a structure which storms cannot destroy.

Resolved unanimously—

That the thanks of this Grand Lodge be given to the Right Worshipful Brothers Waller Rodwell Wright, Arthur Tegart, and James Deans, for the zeal, ability, and attention with which they have assisted His Royal Highness the Grand Master in the said negotiation; and for their long continued and successful exertions to promote the interests and respectability of the Craft.

All the business being ended, the Grand Lodge was closed in solemn and ample form, and adjourned to Monday, the 27th instant, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

At the Quarterly Communication, on the 24th November, it was Resolved unanimously.

That His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, the Most Worshipful Grand Master, be respectfully solicited to sit for his Portrait to some Artist of Celebrity, to be placed in their Hall as a further token of the affection of the Craft for the Illustrious Prince who does them the honour to preside over the Order.

[The proceedings of this Grand Lodge were then closed.]

THE EXPLORATIONS IN PALESTINE.

TO a member of the Masonic Brotherhood, there is no land more interesting than Palestine; no city more associated with the glories of the past than Jerusalem. Our ceremonies and our traditions alike proceed from the wondrous people who once ruled the destinies of the East, and without referring to special Christian sympathies, the land of Solomon and Zerrubabel must ever be regarded with peculiar reverence by every thoughtful Freemason.

The great work undertaken by the Palestine Exploration Committee is, therefore, one which commends itself to our earnest support; every fragment of information that can be gained respecting the sacred places of Judea being most valuable, inasmuch as, so far as we can already judge, the revelations obtained confirm in the strongest possible manner the probability—nay, the truth—of our most cherished traditions. It was for many years doubted whether the construction of the arch was known at the time of the building of King Solomon's temple, but this scepticism has been effectually dispelled by men of antiquarian research.

In like manner, Bro. Warren is unveiling at Jerusalem a series of arched passages and secret vaults which will for ever determine the contested points as to the real site of the Temple and other venerated spots. His explorations demonstrate in a remarkable degree how masterly was the skill of the great Tyrian Architect; how admirable his designs, how grand and solid his workmanship. Bro. Warren stands truly "within a city disinterred," whose former grandeur is recorded by the hands of intellectual giants on the massive walls which survive its desolation and decay. He is bringing to light ruins which possess a spirit-stirring yet melancholy interest for all, but especially to the Masonic Fraternity.

In reading the account of his labours, we are insensibly wafted into the mighty regions of the Past, and seem to view the gradual and silent uprise of that stupendous structure whose history is the keystone of the Masonic edifice. We seem to see the vast array of craftsmen under their chosen leaders, the masters of the work—Hiram the Phœnician, and Adoniram the son of Abda. We seem to witness the solemn dedication by the wise King, and the various phases in the history of that unrivalled temple until the overthrow alike of priest and king—of throne and altar. We follow the afflicted Israelites to their captivity by the waters of Babylon, where they long wept tears of lamentation and dismay. We trace the "glory of the latter house" erected by Zerubabel, a prince of the line of Judah; we contemplate the impious temple of Herod, and the vain attempt of the apostate Julian to rebuild it.

Yes; all these musings are prompted by the results of our Brother Warren's untiring perseverance, and we appeal to English Freemasons to give substantial effect to their sympathy by liberal contributions to the great work which is now being accomplished by the Palestine Exploration Committee.

The Domestic Chapter of Instruction will be re-opened at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, on Monday, the 19th inst. All Royal Arch Masons are invited to attend.

OPENING OF THE NEW MASONIC HALL, RICHMOND, SURREY.

The inauguration of the new hall at the Greyhound Hotel, by the Lodge of Harmony, No. 255, took place on the 28th ult., Bros. Rivers Wilson, M.W.; E. Hills, S.W.; and Col. Francis Burdett, J.W. After the business of the lodge was concluded, about forty of the brethren adjourned to the new banqueting room which is connected with the hall by a spacious corridor, where they sat down to a dinner, supplied by Bro. Noyce in his usual excellent style. The hall is a noble room, nearly 60 feet long, 27 feet wide, and 30 feet high, with an open timbered roof, and has a good orchestra at one end. It will accommodate about 500 persons, the banqueting room will dine about 200. Reception and dressing rooms are attached.

The buildings have been designed principally with a view to the requirements of Freemasonry, and to accommodate, in large numbers, the various London lodges when holding their summer meetings. It is almost unnecessary to say that their wants will be well cared for by Bro. Noyce, as his excellent cuisine and wines are not unknown. The buildings were erected by Bro. Carless, of Richmond, and W.M. 820, from the designs and under the superintendence of the architects, Messrs. Brewer and Son, of Richmond.

DEATH OF BRO. WM. KERSHAW FARRAR, W.M. LODGE No. 448, &c.

Bro. Wm. Kershaw Farrar, son of Mr. Farrar, formerly of the Mitre Tavern, Halifax, first went to California in 1857, returned with his family to his native town in 1861, and subsequently returned to California in Nov., 1865. He had for a year past used an old shed (which had formerly covered the Sebastopol hoisting machinery) as a stable, and was milking his cow at the time, when the weight of snow crushed the building, and the heavy timbers composing the roof bore down the animal upon him in such a manner as to dislocate his neck and crush the bones of his right shoulder and side of chest, causing instantaneous death. Robbie, his oldest child, about seven years of age, was in the building at the time, but miraculously escaped uninjured. Owing to the limited assistance at hand, it occupied nearly an hour to extricate the body, but the surgeon pronounced that death had probably been painless. Deceased leaves a widow and three children to mourn their loss.

Bro. Farrar was initiated in the Maison Lodge, No. 23, Grass Valley (California), and joined the St. James's Lodge, No. 448, Halifax, on his return to England. He was a very zealous and persevering Mason, and was elected W.M. of No. 448 in Dec., 1864, and subsequently installed as J. in the Chapter of Regularity, No. 448. He was also J.W. of the Fearnley Lodge of Mark Masters, No. 56; and shortly before his departure for California was elected E.C. of the Prince Edward Encampment at Eastwood, Stansfield, but as he knew he would not stay in this country for a twelvemonth to discharge the duties of that dignified office, he generously gave way for another before he was installed. To mark the esteem of his brethren, before his departure for California, he was presented with a P.M.'s apron and jewel, a Principal's apron and sash, and a purse of money. At the time of his death his subscriptions were paid to the different degrees in England, and he was also a subscribing member to his mother lodge, who accorded him a Masonic funeral on Feb. 14th. The members of St. James are raising a subscription to send to his bereaved widow and family.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Stability Lodge, No. 217.—This lodge met at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, on Wednesday, the 7th inst., at 5.30 p.m., Bro. Edward Hughes in the chair. The lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Mr. Edward Lawrence and Mr. Walter Foley were initiated into the mysteries and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. The lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Thorpe was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft.—Pursuant to notice of motion, Bro. Brodie, P.M., proposed "That the night of meeting be altered from first Wednesday to the first Tuesday in the month." Bro. James, S.W., seconded the motion. After some discussion, the W.M. appointed a committee of principal officers and Past Masters to inquire into and report upon a suitable evening, the present one preventing members of Grand Lodge attending it if they adhered to their duties in this. Bro. G. A. Taylor, P.M. and hon. sec., announced his intention of serving as steward at the Festival of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution for aged and distressed Freemasons and their widows. Nothing further being offered for the good of Freemasonry in general, or "Stability, 217," in particular, the lodge was closed in due form with solemn prayer, and the brethren proceeded to supper accompanied by the following visitors:—Bro. Rev. H. Bartlett, Grand Orator of Canada; Bro. Heath, P.P.G.S.D., Herts; Bro. Lawrence, J.D., "Neptune," No. 22; Bro. Cunningham, "Neptune," No. 22; Bro. Kenning, "Lion and Lamb," No. 192; Br. Inglis, "Caveac," No. 76; Bro. Newman, "Freedom," No. 91; Bro. Hawker, P.M., "Royal Oak," No. 871. After the usual patriotic and Masonic toasts, Bro. Taylor proposed the health of the W.M., speaking in complimentary terms of the working he had displayed. In acknowledging the toast the W.M. expressed great pride that they had thought him worthy of the honour, and assured the lodge that he would always endeavour to do his duty; but he begged them to remember that it was mainly owing to the high state of efficiency of his officers, and the persevering kindness of the P.M.'s in giving them instruction that the working was so harmonious. Bro. Coley returned thanks for the newly-initiated brethren; Bro. Taylor, I.P.M., for the Past Masters; and Bro. James, S.W., for the officers. The health of the visitors was responded to by Rev. Bro. Bartlett in an eloquent address, in which he expressed the great gratification it afforded him to witness a confirmation of the good working which he felt bound to praise on his first visit. He congratulated the lodge on this, as it proved to the world that they were something above the mere knife-and-fork-Masons, and held a high and glorious faith. He also congratulated them on what he had heard of their prospects, and advised them—as he had always urged in his orations and lectures in Canada, the United States, and the old country—by strict investigation before initiation, and constant advice and precept afterwards, to admit only such as might be received into their drawing-room, or saluted as real friends when met with anywhere. On his return to Canada he would be delighted to see any brother of "Stability," who, he assured them, should meet with a hearty reception.—The Rev. gentleman's address was listened to with great interest by the brethren, who frequently applauded him.

PROVINCIAL.

HALIFAX.—Fearnley Lodge, No. 58.—The members of this lodge held their quarterly meeting on Monday, April 12th, when there was not a very good attendance, only fifteen being present. Bro. John Stott, W.M. The principal business was balloting for Bro. William James Laidlaw and Bro. Samuel Firth, of the St. James Lodge, No. 448, who were both accepted, and subsequently advanced to the degree of Mark Master by Bro. Normanton, P.M. Two other brethren were proposed for next meeting. Bro. Charles Woollons gave in his name to be placed on Bro. Thomas Meggy's list as a Steward to represent the Fearnley Lodge at the approaching festival of the Girls' School. Deep regret was then expressed at the death of Bro. W. K. Farrar, who had been accidentally killed near Grass Valley, California, and a small sum voted from the lodge funds towards the subscription being raised by the members of No. 448 for his widow and three young children; after which the lodge was closed in the usual manner.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge, No. 279.—A monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Halford-street, Leicester, on Wednesday, the 7th instant, the W.M., Bro. Kelly, D.P.G.M., in the chair. Among the other members present were Bros. Clarke, Kinder, Morris, and Weare, P.M.'s; Stretton, J.W. Crow (Sec. and Org.), Thorpe, S.D., Burton, J.D., Adlard, Bide, Smith, Rowbotham, Pegg, Widdowson, Tarratt, Astell, Skevington, and Porter. Visitors:—Rev. N. Haycroft (Pastor of the Victoria Road Baptist Church), of the Universal Lodge, No. 181; and Bros. Toller, S.W.; Buzzard, J.W.; Partridge, J.D.; Sargeant, S.D.; and W. Moir, of No. 523. The lodge having been opened, and the minutes of last regular lodge, and also of a lodge of emergency, having been read and confirmed, a letter was read from Bro. Stanley, S.W., apologising for his absence on account of an accident, he having been thrown from his horse. A ballot was taken for Mr. James Stannard, architect, who was duly elected; a ballot was also taken for Bro. John Frederick Klein, P.M., No. 21, London, and P.G.S. (for upwards of thirty years a frequent visitor to the lodge), who was unanimously elected an honorary member. Bros. Astell and Skevington being candidates for the second degree, passed an examination as E.A.'s, and they having retired as F.C.'s, lodge was opened and they were duly passed, after which the W.M. gave the lecture on the tracing board of the degree. The lodge having been closed in the second degree, Mr. James Stannard was introduced and was initiated into the first degree of the order. On the conclusion of the ceremony, the W.M. gave the lecture on the tracing-board and the charge. A letter was read from the widow of the late Bro. Holland, P.M. and P.P.S.G.W., in reply to the address of condolence on his decease passed at a former meeting, and which was ordered to be entered on the minutes.—On the following evening, at a meeting of the Lodge of Instruction attached to Lodges No. 279 and 523, the seven sections of the first lecture were worked by Bros. Kelly, D.P.G.M., Buzzard, Crow, Partridge, and Scalthorpe, greatly to the advantage and information of the numerous recently-initiated brethren who were present. The Rev. N. Haycroft was a visitor on the occasion.

CARNARVON.—Segontium Lodge, No. 606.—A lodge of emergency was held at the Sportsman's Hotel, Carnarvon, on Wednesday, April 7th, Present: Bros. J. C. Fourdrinier (P.M. No. 2) in the chair; W. Maugham, S.W.; Owen Thomas, J.W.; R. Humphreys, Sec.; E. H. Williams, S.D.; R. A. Jones, Steward; G. C. Bradbury, J.G.; R. W. Roberts, R. J. Davids, Llewellyn, Turner, P. Hennett, J. Hawkrigge, Tyler. Visitors: J. Owen (Sec. 384), and Thomas Richards. The lodge was opened in due form with solemn prayer. A ballot was taken for Messrs. R. Griffiths, wine merchant, Carnarvon, and Richard R. Williams, architect, Carnarvon, which proving unanimous, those gentlemen were duly initiated into Freemasonry. Bros. Llewellyn Turner and Percy Hennett, were raised to the sublime degree of M.M. It was resolved that a letter of condolence be sent to the friends of the late Bro. R. M. Williams, Victoria Hotel, deceased. The brethren afterwards sat down to a banquet provided by Bro. Moreton.

COCKERMOUTH.—Skiddaw Lodge, No. 1002.—The usual monthly meeting of this lodge was held in the Lodge-rooms, Market-place, on Tuesday evening, the 6th inst., the W.M., Bro. Skilton, Past Prov. G.S.B., in the chair. The minutes of the former meeting being read and confirmed, the lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Williams duly passed, Bro. Banning giving the lecture with marked effect. There were present Bros. Dodgson, P.M., P.P.G.S.D., R. Robinson, S.W.; J. Evening, I.G.; E. Thwaites, P.J.W.; J. Potts, Tyler; R. Bailey, T. F. Taylor, Sec.; H. Hammill, and J. Bolton. Visitor, Bro. Jesse Banning (J.W. 343, Preston).

IRELAND.

Tralee Lodge, No. 379.—The usual monthly communication of this flourishing lodge was held in the new Masonic Hall, Edward-street, on the evening of Monday, the 5th inst. The W.M., Bro. R. H. Walpole, R.A., presided, the other officers present being—Bros. Morris, H.K.T., S.W.; John McGillicuddy, as J.W.; R. A. Benner, R.A., S.D.; F. McCarthy, J.D.; Weekes, I.G.; J. B. Smith, R.A., Sec.; D. De C. McGillicuddy, jun., H.K.T., Treas.; and Wm. Hill, R.A., I.P.M. The visiting brethren were—Adams, R.A. (P.M. Lodge 73, Limerick, and P.G.J.W. North Munster);—Sloane, H.K.T. (153, Dublin, and Willingale Lodge, St. John's, N.B.) Bro. R. Browne, late of Lodge 500, Dublin, was admitted an affiliated member; Mr. Joseph Newball, 81st Regt., was elected; and Bro. B. O'Connor was duly initiated as an E.A. by the Treasurer, whose abilities in conferring degrees are "household words" with the whole Masonic world in Ireland. A vacancy having occurred by the death of Brother Raymond, late J.W., there were five candidates for the office of I.G., but Bro. Arthur Rowan was elected by a large majority. The other business concluded, the lodge was closed and the brethren adjourned to refreshment, separating at an early hour after a very pleasant evening.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

IPSWICH.—Royal Alexandra Chapter, 959.—At the regular meeting held last Monday, after the preliminary business had been done, Bro. C. H. Woods, of the Phoenix and Prince of Wales Lodges was admitted and exalted to the sublime degree of a R.A.M. The ceremony having been beautifully rendered by the M. Excellent P. Principal, the Rev. R. N. Sanderson. This was the first Chapter held since the hall has been decorated, and the beautiful appearance of the hall elicited the admiration of all the Companions present.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

METROPOLITAN.

Plantagenet Conclave, No. 2.—The fourth anniversary assembly of this conclave was held at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, on Monday the 12th inst., when a large number of Knight Companions attended to do honour to the incoming Sovereign, John Boyd, 30°, P.M., P.Z., P.E.C., amongst whom were Sir Knights T. Wescombe, M.P.S.; D. G. Berri, V.E.; R. W. Little, G.R.; W. H. Hubbard, G.T.; J. J. Marsh, G.A.; D. R. Still, S.B.; J. Mayo, H.; H. Parker, G.O.; T. J. Murray; C. Hosgood; J. Brett, P.S.; T. Cubitt, Treas.; B. Cook; W. Y. Laing; and several visitors, including Col. F. Burdett, 32°, G.H.C., Ins. Gen. for Surrey; J. A. Horner, 30°, Ins. Gen. for Suffolk; G. Kenning, P.S., "Premier"; C. Haigh, No. 6, &c. After the usual ballot, the following brethren were installed as Knights of the Order, viz.:—Bros. G. S. States, P.G. Steward, P.M. and P.Z.; W. Carter, P.M. and P.Z. 145; F. H. Gilbert, W.M. 534; J. Last, 145; and G. Payne, 862. The Sovereign elect was then enthroned, and appointed the officers for the ensuing year. A letter from the R.W. Bro. Sir Edward R. Borough, Bart., 33°, Deputy Grand Master of Ireland, addressed to Sir Kt. Little, was then read, in which the worthy and distinguished brother expressed great regret that he was unable to attend the meeting, a communication which was received with equal regret on the part of the Companions. Notices of motion to increase the installation fee and annual subscription were received, and the conclave was then closed. A splendid banquet was then served under the direction of Bro. Spencer, the efficient manager, and all the toasts were duly honoured. The "Red Cross Song" was sung during the evening by Sir Kt. Marsh, accompanied by Sir Kt. Parker, the music of which will shortly be published, and the Knights separated in the utmost harmony after a very pleasant evening.

SCOTLAND.

St. Andrew Conclave, No. 15.—On Thursday evening, April 8th, a new Conclave, designated the St. Andrew Conclave, was inaugurated at Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh. Among the Sir Knights present were Capt. J. J. Lundy, Capt. Ramsay, Dr. Cairns, Dr. McCown, John Laurie, Wm. M. Bryce, Chas. Fitzgerald Matier, Francis L. Law, T. H. Douglass, F.S.A., Dr. G. Dixon, Jas. Macduff, &c. The Sir Knights elected Capt. J. J. Lundy, the first M.P.S.; Dr. Cairns, F.E.; Capt. Ramsay, S.G.; Dr. Dixon, J.G.; W. M. Bryce, Herald; and F. L. Law, Recorder. The Order is likely to become very popular in Scotland.

THE GRAND MASONIC BALL, DUBLIN.

The grand ball which took place on Friday evening last week, in the Exhibition Palace, in connection with the Masonic body, under singularly auspicious circumstances, was certainly one of the most brilliant and imposing events of the kind that ever took place in a city remarkable for the magnificence of its entertainments and the splendour of its fashionable life. Promoted by an organization which numbers in its various grades the most distinguished representatives of intellect, culture, wealth, and influence in the empire, honoured by the presence of Royalty and the highest ranks of society, it was conceived and carried out on a scale of magnitude almost unparalleled, and was crowned with a success which must have exceeded the most sanguine anticipations. The appearance of the grand transept was magnificent in the extreme, and the decorations certainly surpassed anything of the kind ever before attempted in the building. At the southern end some exceedingly large standards were placed, and over these a great star of gas jets bore the inscription "Quis separabit?" which, in common with the Knights of the Order of St. Patrick, the Masonic body has adopted. At the opposite end of the grand transept was the dais, from its magnitude and beauty perhaps the principal object of interest in the Palace. It was more than 32 feet in length, and elevated about the usual height from the floor, and covered with deep crimson cloth. At the back of the dais two handsome retiring rooms were specially devoted to the use of the Prince, the Lord Lieutenant and Viceregal party, and the Duke of Leinster, as President of the Masonic body in Ireland. But few things attracted more admiration, or evinced more ingenuity of design, than a number of grand military devices which were placed on both sides of the dais. These were formed of antique and modern weapons brought from the Pigeon House Fort, and with wonderful skill made to represent a variety of things. The signs by which the objects and character of Freemasonry are all symbolized and expressed; the rising sun and many other devices, were executed with a taste and skill that could not easily be surpassed. The Leinster Hall was fitted up as a ball-room, and in some respects was decorated similarly to the grand transept. At the end, a handsome and spacious orchestra had been erected, and over it were suspended the flags of Great Britain. High up above the gallery was the principal device, in gas, consisting of an immense representation of the three national symbols—the Rose, the Shamrock, and the Thistle. In front of the orchestra was a trophy of French arms of the 14th and 15th centuries, very effectively arranged, and on either side was a large figure in bronze. Between the pillars were suspended flags of different countries and the symbols of the Order, to illustrate the extent and power of the fraternity, which, in spite of insolent ecclesiastical fulminations, comprises some of the best and wisest of the earth, and exercises a benignant influence upon all who acknowledge its obligations. To exhaust the points of interest which met every glance would be simply impossible. Everything which could fascinate the sight or ravish the mind, in the resources of ornamentation, that wealth could procure or luxury desire—in short, everything which could realize Oriental loveliness in the scene was introduced, and yet with a judgment, a cultivated sense of harmony, that never offended the most exacting taste. Wherever the visitor turned he was dazzled with brilliant constellations of lights, with glittering arms, bright colours, and the choicest treasures of Flora, while groups of "fair women and brave men," in the graceful mazes of the waltz, or standing in easy conversation, completed a picture whose every attribute was felicity, every feature splendour, and "when music arose, with her voluptuous swell," half drowning the harmonious hum of human voices and the soft murmur of waters playing gently in the fountains, the occasion was indeed one to enchant the worshipper of sensuous beauty, and transport his thoughts "where flowers, and founts, and nymphs, and semi-gods, and all the Graces find their old abode." The Grand Concert Hall was fitted up as a supper-room, and nothing which art could do to refine the vulgar but indispensable operations which remind us of our mortality, to tempt the epicure, or delight the gourmand, was omitted. The balconies were hung with emblems of the Order, and at each end was constructed a trophy of old arms formerly used by the Knights Templars. The tables were covered with viands of the most expensive and recherché description, many of which were sent from famous establishments in London and Paris, and comprising rare delicacies, and altogether the supper was worthy of Gunter's most gifted cuisinier. The hall on the opposite side was also fitted up as a supper-room, while refreshments for the Royal party were provided in an apartment upstairs, which was sumptuously furnished, and laid out with exquisite taste. The visitors began to arrive about nine o'clock, the members and officers of the Masonic body wearing the insignia of their order and rank, and the uniforms of naval and military men adding considerably to the splendour of the spectacle. The Grand Master and Deputy Grand Master were received and installed with the usual formalities. About 11 o'clock His Royal Highness Prince Arthur arrived, accompanied by the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess Spencer, Lieutenant-Colonel Elphinstone, C.B., and Lieutenant Pickard, V.C., Aides-de-Camp in attendance; Lord and Lady De Vesci and the Honourable Misses Vesey, Lord Suffield, Lord and Lady Charles Bruce, Lady Sarah Spencer, Hon. H. Bourke, Mr. John Leslie, Captain Wellesley, Major Whyte Melville, Mr. H. Seymour, Mr. E. Ross, and the following members of the Household:—Captain and Mrs. Brydges, Mr. H. A. Lascelles, Captain and Mrs. F. Campbell, Mr. A. Seymour, Captain Donaldson, and Colonel McDonnell. The Royal party having been conducted to the dais, the National Anthem was performed, after which dancing commenced. The ball was opened by Prince Arthur and the Countess Spencer, having as there vis-a-vis the Lord Lieutenant and the Marchioness of Drogheda. Supper was served between twelve and one o'clock, after which dancing was renewed with spirit, and kept up for some time. The Royal party did not leave till a late hour, and were escorted to the Viceregal Lodge by a detachment of Dragoons. Altogether there must have been upwards of 2,500 persons present.

The following was the dancing programme:—

Quadrille, "New Irish," Mooney; valse, "Soldaten Leier," Gungl; galop, "Eclipse," Cootie; lancers, "Original," Hart; valse, "Venus Reigen," Gungl; galop, "Fox Hunters," Tinney; mazurka, "Rivulet," D'Albert; quadrille, "St. Patrick's," Laurent; valse, "Morgenblätter," Strauss; galop, "Flick Flock," Marriott; lancers, "Echoes of London," Cootie; valse, "Claribel," Cootie; quadrille, "Cameronian," D'Albert; valse, "Frühlings Lieder," Gungl; galop, "Burlesque," Cassidy; lancers, "Somebody's Luggage," Cootie; valse, "Voices of the Night," F. Quin, Grand Organist; galop, "Midnight," Harris; mazurka, "Violetta," Kuhner; quadrille, "Colleen Aroon," F. Godfrey; valse, "Kate Kearney," Cootie; galop, "Marion," Gungl; lancers, "English," Cootie; galop, "Iris," Faust. God save the Queen.

SPECIMENS FROM A MASONIC QUARRY.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 131 TREURO,

SPECIMEN NO. 1.—OPERATIVE MASONIC LODGES.

ST. JOHN'S, BANFF, SCOTLAND.

We shall now offer to our readers for perusal, a series of interesting and important minutes relating to the Royal Arch, Knight Templar, and other degrees; after which, we intend giving a resumé of the whole, and then institute another search among the materials in our Masonic Quarry for a suitable specimen for the next article.

It will be seen that, assuming the labours of this lodge to be a fair representative of how the "higher degrees" were worked in Scotland, the institution of the Grand Conclave of the Religious and Military Order of the Temple, A.D. 1811, and of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masonry, August 28th, 1817, were necessary, expedient, and beneficial, when viewed either as respects the ceremonies, or laws of the degrees in question.

But we will present the records without further delay:—

"1779. Att the Annuall meeting of the Operative Lodge of Banff, Proceeded to call over the List and Collect the Quarter pence.

"It was unanimously agreed to by All the Royal Arch and Super-Excellent masons of the Lodge, for the love and favour they bear to George Smith, present Treasurer of the Lodge, and for the Services he has done to Give him these two Branches of Masonry Gratis.

"Resolved that George Ogston shall be allowed for Entering six Members and Passing six Fellow Crafts as the expences he has been at upon that Account, the Sum of Ten Shillings Str., and also to Give him these two Branches of Royal Arch and Super Excellent Gratis, and Likewise to James Smith, Dt. Mr. in Turreff for his good offices to the Lodge."

"Resolutions of the Evening Meeting of St. John's day, 1780:—

"It is Resolved that the Master do collect all the Members Names belonging to this Lodge, whose names are not inserted in the Books of the Grand Lodge, and that he transmitt the same to Edinburgh accordingly, and get the same recorded properly, and get a Certificate of the same. And what money can be spared out of the Box the Recommendation to the office bearers to pay off the Debts of the Lodge, as far as the same will go.

"The Lodge has allowed George Ogston Five Shillings Str., which he lost by making a Fellow Craft who died soon after he was Passed."

"Att the Annual Meeting of the Operative Lodge of Banff, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty one Years, Proceeded to call over the Members names, and to Collect the Quarter pence.

[Here follows a list of the names of 35 Royal Arch Masons, 7 Mark Masters, 9 Masters, 27 Mark Masons, 26 Fellow Crafts, 41 Apprentices.]

"After Collecting the Quarter pence, the Meeting Proceeded to elect the Office Bearers, when John Rhind was Elected Master, James Robertson, Seneor Warden, Geo. Naughtie, Juneor Warden, George Smith, Treasurer.

"Att the Evening Meeting, 1st, Resolved that the Petition from some Members in Doun (the present town of McDuff) be Referred to the Comitee Chosen at this Evening Meeting, and a Minute made in the Books for the Members that has joined the St. Andrew's Lodge of Banff.

"2nd Resolution. It was ordered by the Meeting that an Advertisement should be put into the Aberdeen Journal warning all Absent Brethren to come and pay up their Quarter pennice once in the three years, or they would be scored off the Books and have no more title to the fund.

(Signed) "JOHN RHIND, Master."

"Operative Lodge, Banff, 31st January, 1781. The Comitee having met and taken under their consideration the Memorial read upon St. John's Day, and referred to them by the Annual Meeting then held, which Memorial humbly proposes that the following Grievances be taken into Consideration.

"In the first place whither it is proper, or not, that any Member belonging to this Lodge should, without any recommendation from us, join the St. Andrew's Lodge of this Toun, which some of them has done and Advised others to follow their Example, and to consider whither or not they shall be allowed to Continue members of our Lodge and members of the St. Andrew's Lodge at the same time Considering the terms upon which the St. Andrew's Lodge and us parted.

"The Comitee apprehending that such conduct is contrary to the Spirit and Meaning of our Charter, have come to the following Resolutions:—That after this date they unanimously agree that if any Members belonging to this Lodge join the St. Andrew's Lodge of this Toun, they will be expouged from our Society and to have no more benefits from it afterwards, nor will they be allowed to sit and vote with us; and with respect to those who have already gone off, they request the Master to write to the Grand Lodge and get their opinion how we are to proceed with them, and delays giving any Sentence against them untill we have a return from the Grand Lodge.

"And orders this Minute to be intimated to the Brethren in and about the Toun. wethin the space of twenty-four hours.

(Signed) "JOHN RHIND, Mr."

"PLACE AUX DAMES."

"A secret society of ladies, glorying in the name of the Order of the Sacred Temple, has been inaugurated in Missouri."—American Papers.

OUR contemporary the Daily Telegraph recently favored its readers with a quaint and picturesque description of the meeting of a New York sisterhood which has doubtless been formed upon similar principles to other associations of ladies from which the sterner sex are excluded. But as our contemporary, if we recollect aright, did not allude to the mystic element which lends so great a charm to these sisterhoods, or to the origin of similar societies as the avowed rivals of masculine mysteries, the subject, we conceive, possesses some additional interest from a Masonic point of view.

The laws of Freemasonry, which exclude females from the Order, are of course founded upon the ancient operative character of the institution, but however necessary and proper, these regulations are not appreciated by the ladies. In France, during the reign of the encyclopedists and philosophers, women played no unimportant part in the social and intellectual movement which culminated in the Revolution. Their exclusion from Freemasonry, when the salons of science and the halls of art were freely opened to their demands for admission, naturally intensified the dislike which those literary ladies felt towards the Masonic Order, and gave birth to several ephemeral associations of a mystic character into which both sexes were admitted. Among these were the "Order of Felicity," the "Order of the Anchor," and the "Knights and Nymphs of the Rose;" when, to counteract the superior popularity of these androgynous clubs, the Grand Orient of France made an attempt to supersede them by introducing a pseudo-Masonic Order for ladies, called the "Rite of Adoption." This Order flourished for some time in France, and was followed by Cagliostro's mystery of mysteries, "Egyptian Masonry," into which astounding system of imposture the fair sex were also welcomed. Another development of adoptive Masonry was called the "Ordre des Dames écossaises de l'Hospice du Mont Thabor," the objects of which were undoubtedly praiseworthy and useful, inasmuch as they inculcated the practice of benevolence and the love of social and domestic duties. In Germany, as early as 1737, the society of the Mopses received females, and other minor parodies of Freemasonry were enacted in Italy and other countries.

But the most impressive and beautiful system of the kind is the "Eastern Star" degree, now practised in America, and which is confined to the wives, widows, sisters and daughters of Master Masons. The lodges, or classes, of this degree are termed "families," and are composed of not less than five ladies; indeed, strictly speaking, the degree itself may be subdivided into five parts, under the names of "Jephtha's Daughter," "Ruth, or the Widow," "Esther, or the Wife," "Martha, or the Sister," and "Electa, or the Christian."

There is another degree conferred in the United States, called the "Heroine of Jericho," in which the story of Rahab and the spies is commemorated. But we have said enough to show that the feminine society in New York, whose doings have been so eloquently depicted in the Daily Telegraph, is but a reproduction, in another shape, of an old idea founded mainly upon the exclusively masculine character of Freemasonry, and a fanciful resistance on the part of the ladies to the gregarious tendencies of man.

SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS AND SCIENCES.

1. Grammar's rules instruct the tongue and pen;
2. Rhetoric, teaches eloquence to men.
3. By Logic, we are taught to reason well;
4. Music, has charms beyond the power to tell.
5. The use of numbers numberless we find,
6. Geometry gave measure to mankind;
7. The Heavenly system elevates the mind.

MASONIC WORKING TOOLS.

Let every Mason knock off evil dispositions by the Gavel of righteousness and mercy; measure out his actions by the Rule of duty, fit them by the Square of prudence and virtue, bring them up by the just Level of perfection, adjust them by the Plumb-rule of brotherly love, and spread them abroad with the Trowel of peace.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

PROVINCIAL.—No. The brother cannot be raised within the prescribed period of four weeks.

Multum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

Rite of Misraim.—Will some of my brethren kindly furnish me with information respecting the Rite of Misraim? Is it worked by the Grand Lodge of Ireland? (it is acknowledged by their Council of Rites.) What lodges in France work it? Who are its chiefs? What works are published on the subject? I am aware that Marc Bedaride has published a history of the Order, and that Ragon gives a short sketch of each degree.—F. KADOSH.

The Mark Degree.—Perhaps Bro. Hughan could favour me by stating whether there is any difference between the recorded marks, if such exist, of the "Mark Masons" (who must previously have been passed F.C.), and the "Mark Master Masons" (who must previously have been raised M.M.) of the Lodge of Banff, as practised about a hundred years ago, many new notions, ideas, or "degrees," being introduced during last century?—LEO.

The Ancient and Accepted Rite.—I am indebted to Bro. Yarker for his kindly-written letter relative to the Templars, and the Ancient and Accepted Rite. His conclusions are certainly legitimate, if the premises are admitted. I beg, however, to object to the latter most strenuously. "Written proof must be sought at York, London, and Bristol for our Templar traditions." I ask what traditions? If the connection of the Order of the Temple with Masonry before 1770 is meant, then it is quite useless to go to either of those cities for records or other information in proof thereof, for none such exist. No records of any Masonic Templar meetings in London, Bristol, or York exist of an earlier date than 1779, and then, after all, it is but a certificate dated in that year at York. Neither at Bristol nor at London, are any known so early even as 1779. The next decade, though, witnessed the degree being worked in the two other cities. Stirling contains no records on Templars of any use whatever in this discussion, and therefore I cannot see why Bro. Yarker mentions that town. Dr. Leeson must be in error when referring to a Belgian Craft Constitution of 1722, which he said contained allusions to the Knights Kadosh. I have made every possible enquiry in Germany about the matter, of the very best authorities, and the answer is—No such work ever had an existence at the date named. Bro. J. Howe, in his work on Freemasonry, mentions Dr. Leeson's remarks, I know, but that does not prove their truth. Let the work be submitted to some competent and neutral brother to decide, and I am content to abide the test. The first copy of Constitutions in England was not published until A.D. 1723; and therefore to suppose that a country like Belgium, that actually obtained its knowledge of Masonry from England, printed a book of Constitutions one year earlier than the mother Grand Lodge of the world did, is to me simply preposterous. Ramsay was an imposter, undoubtedly. I do not mean the term offensively, but he certainly foisted on Freemasonry (pure and simple), degrees foreign to the Order, and nothing but the creations of his wild brain. The "Ancient Masons" did not avoid "extravagant statements." I am quite surprised to hear Bro. Yarker say they did, when all historians of importance unite in condemning Bro. Dermott and his party for the manner in which they exalted their Grand Lodge over the only legitimate Grand Lodge in England, with its seat at London. Let anyone read "Ahiman Rezon" of 1766, 1764, and other editions issued by the "ancients" (so called, but really the moderns and innovators), and I am persuaded but one opinion will be expressed. The "ancients" pretended to have authority as "York Masons," whereas the Grand Lodge of York never recognised them! If no written or printed proofs of an Order of which the exiled Stuarts were the chiefs, can be found, I would like to know what superior power Bro. Yarker has to what I have, to enable him to know what was done in their day, and yet for him to escape being deceived, as we all know how their adherents told all sorts of tales to advance their cause. The allusions to the "Red Cross of Rome and Constantine" I trust the Editor of THE FREEMASON will deal with, as that Order can, at least, boast of records as early as any chivalric degree.—ROSE CROIX.

I would modify my late remarks (written in haste to "Rose Croix") by saying that there is another view of the Rose Croix degree, which makes it to represent, ceremonially, the present Templar of St. John; thus explaining the anomalous position of the Royal Order of Scotland, and their claim to represent Bruce's Templars, with the Scottish kings as Grand Masters. The Royal Order of Scotland was revived at Edinburgh in 1738, and made to consist of two degrees—H.R.M. and Rosy Cross; whilst the degrees conferred at the same date at Stirling were Red Cross, or Oak, and Templar of St. John. This, apparently, points to Arras as the source of revival.—JOHN YARKER, Manchester.

Operative Lodges.—After careful consideration of Bro. Hughan's letter, in No. 5, I must say that I see no reason to alter the opinions I have expressed. The only proof of the Master Mason degree yet adduced in Scotland, is the allegorical representation at Roslyn Chapel. I made no assertion of difference in working between England and Scotland, beyond that of the hereditary Grand Mastership of Scotland, which is the gist of the whole matter. The MSS. Constitutions of about 1400 (Halliwell's) and 1500 (Cooke's), both contain references to the Master Mason and to the General Assemblies, but they would fail to convince, being merely confirmatory of oral tradition, and evidently do not come up to Bro. Hughan's standard. The following seems to me to be the principal evidence in the case of Stirling-rock Chapel, and it is desirable that it should be sifted, and endeavours made to ascertain what further there may be:—1. The lodge minutes, showing the performance of its initiatory ceremonies in the old abbey, and patronage of King James. 2. Three brass plates reaching to Malta Order, and thought to be of the early part of the seventeenth century. 3. A forged lodge-charter mentioning the Cross-legged Knights; thought to be as old as 1736—proving old tradition at that date. 4. The chapter minutes from 1743, the previous ones being lost.—JOHN YARKER.

MASONIC LITERATURE.—An American gentleman, Mr. Morris, of Kentucky, who has recently been travelling in Syria and Palestine, is now preparing for publication in the United States his observations on the Holy Land from a Masonic point of view. The book will be called "Handmarks of Solomon's Builders." Mr. Morris wishes to dedicate it to Raschid Pasha, the present Governor of Syria, who is a Turk and a Moslem, but, nevertheless,—like the chivalrous Abd-el-Kader, too, the ex-Emir of Algeria,—a Freemason and an enlightened man. The book will be illustrated with portraits of these and other Oriental Freemasons. It is to be hoped that Mr. Morris, during his travels, had his eyes open for Masons' Marks.—Builder.

INAUGURATION FESTIVAL AT FREEMASONS' HALL, GREAT QUEEN STREET, LONDON.

From 1776 to 1869 — ninety-three years have passed away since our predecessors in Freemasonry solemnly dedicated Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street to "Universal Charity and Benevolence," and before we attempt to relate the proceedings at the second dedication or "Inauguration," in 1869, a brief resumé of the ceremonies observed in 1776 will not, we hope, prove uninteresting:—

On Thursday, the 23rd of May, 1776, the Right Hon. Lord Petre, the Grand Master, and his officers, with a numerous and brilliant company of Past Grand Officers and brethren of eminence and distinction, and the members of the Hall Committee and their assistants, assembled in the Committee-room adjacent to the Hall, where the Grand Lodge was opened in ample form about 12 o'clock. Upwards of 160 ladies, who were complimented with tickets to see the ceremonies and hear the musical performances, attended, and were introduced by the assistants to the Hall Committee into the galleries of the hall. In the upper part of the hall the orchestra was built, where above 60 instrumental and 30 vocal performers were placed. The Masters and Wardens of lodges, and private brethren, were arranged in particular seats set apart for them in the hall. The procession was formed in the Committee-room, and consisted only of Present and Past Grand Officers, Grand Stewards, members of the Hall Committee and their assistants, and the Masters of the seven oldest lodges present. About half-past 12 o'clock the procession entered the hall, and on reaching the Grand Master's chair the brethren in the procession were proclaimed, and from thence walked round the hall three times. At the end of the third circuit, the Present and Past Grand Officers repaired to their seats on a platform at the upper part of the hall, and the other Grand Officers to the upper part of the front seats on each side of the Lodge; and the Grand Stewards and members of the Hall Committee to the lower part of the same seats. Immediately on the Grand Master being proclaimed the music began, and continued to perform a grand piece till all the members of the procession were seated. The Lodge was then placed in the centre of the hall, and the three lights, and one gold and two silver pitchers, containing corn, wine and oil, were placed thereon; the Bible, compasses, square, and Book of Constitutions, on a velvet cushion, being placed on the pedestal. The "Foundation-Stone Anthem" was then sung; and an exordium on Masonry given by the Grand Secretary, which concluded with an intimation of the Architect's desire to return the implements entrusted to his care at the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone; on which the Architect addressing the Grand Master, his Lordship expressed his approbation of the Architect's conduct, and commanded the Grand Officers to receive back the implements which had been delivered to the Architect on that occasion. A solemn piece of music was next performed, during which the ladies withdrew to tea and coffee, and such of the musicians as were not Masons retired to entertain them. The Grand Master then ordered the Hall to be tiled. On which the Lodge was uncovered, and the Grand Secretary informed the Grand Master that it was the desire of the Society to have the Hall dedicated to Masonry. The Grand Master commanded the Grand Officers to assist in that ceremony, during which the organ kept playing solemn music. The Grand Officers then walked round the Lodge in procession three times, stopping each time for the ceremony of dedication. At the end of the first circuit, the organ was silent, and the Grand Master in solemn form declared the Hall dedicated to Masonry; which being proclaimed by the Grand Secretary, the grand honours were given. At the end of the second circuit, the organ was silent, and the Grand Master in solemn form declared the Hall dedicated to Virtue, which being proclaimed, the grand honours were given as before. At the end of the third circuit, the organ was silent, and the Grand Master in solemn form declared the Hall dedicated to Universal Charity and Benevolence, which being proclaimed, the grand honours were given as before. The Lodge was then covered, and the ladies introduced. A grand anthem, composed for the occasion, was sung by Mr. Hudson, of St. Paul's, and others. An oration on Masonry was then delivered by the Grand Chaplain, and the Coronation Anthem performed; after which donations from several brethren were proclaimed. A new ode was performed; after which the procession was resumed, and marched round the hall three times, preceded by Tylers carrying the Lodge, during which the music continued playing a grand piece. The procession having returned to the Committee-room, the Grand Lodge was closed in ample form.

In further reference to the above-described auspicious event, the following extract from "The Revelations of a Square," by the regretted Bro. the Rev. Dr. Oliver, may not be found inopportune:—

"In the year 1776," continued my amusing companion, 'I had the gratification, under a new Master, of witnessing the most magnificent spectacle it is possible to conceive; for it realised the gorgeous description of the Arabian tales. I refer to the solemn dedication of Freemasons' Hall. The numerous band of Grand and Past Grand officers, in full Masonic costume; the galleries crowded with ladies of rank and fashion, presenting the appearance of a magnificent parterre decorated with a galaxy of exotic flowers, dazzling to the eye; a hundred musicians, vocal and instrumental, placed in the orchestra; the Masters and Wardens of private lodges arranged, like a holy Sanhedrim, in order of precedence upon the benches on the floor; added to the splendid and tasteful decorations in the Hall itself, produced a coup d'œil which exceeds my powers of rhetoric to describe. It was a superb sight to behold the brethren, invested with the badges and appendages suitable to their rank, entering the hall from the Committee-room, and proceeding to the Throne of Solomon, compass the room three several times to sweet music, amidst the waving of handkerchiefs and scarfs from the ladies in the galleries. The Grand Tyler led the way, then followed the Lodge, covered with white satin, borne by four serving brethren; after which, the corn, wine, and oil, in covered vessels of gold and silver, carried by Master Masons of good standing in the Order, followed by the members of the Hall Committee, and the brethren of the Alfred Lodge, Oxford, two and two, in their academical dress, surmounted by the insignia of their several offices. But it would be an unnecessary waste of time, the Square interjected parenthetically, 'to describe the order of a procession which must be perfectly familiar to you. When the preliminary ceremonies were completed, and the Lodge placed in the centre of the hall; when the three lesser lights, with the gold and silver pitchers, containing the elements of consecration, were placed thereon; when the three great lights, on a velvet cushion, were deposited upon the pedestal in solemn silence; then did the heart of every brother present rebound, like the war horse at the thrilling blast of the trumpet, on hearing the simultaneous burst of harmony from the orchestra which introduced the opening symphonies of the foundation-stone anthem—

'To heaven's High Architect all praise,' &c., which was sung by Mr. Hudson, of St. Paul's Cathedral, the chorus being filled up by the whole band. The ceremony, I assure you, sir, was very imposing; and although the eye was satiated with the gorgeous display, and the ear delighted with the sweet influence of music, yet the heart of every person in the vast assembly was carried away by the oration of the Grand Chaplain, whose matchless eloquence of language and grace of delivery riveted the attention of his audience. And when he pronounced any particularly fine passage, with all the energy of enthusiasm, the acclamations were unbounded; and the conclusion of the address, after a deep silence of a few seconds, was hailed with such peals of enthusiastic cheering as have scarcely ever since been heard within the walls of Freemasons' Hall. The triumph of the orator was complete."

The inauguration of the new Masonic Hall and buildings, at the Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 14th inst., was an imposing ceremony, and one that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. The magnificent hall was crowded by what may be called the élite of the Craft, from all parts of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the greatest interest was manifested in the proceedings. From the appearance of the building itself, the Building Committee have every reason to congratulate themselves that their labours have been crowned with so much success.

The chairs recently discovered, and which were for some years laid aside, have been re-decorated and were used on this occasion. Amongst the Brethren present (a complete list it would be impossible to give) were the Most Worshipful Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland; T. W. Hall, Prov. G. Master for Cambridgeshire; the Right Hon. the Earl of Limerick, Prov. Grand Master for Bristol; the Rev. Joseph Huyshe, Prov. G. Master for Devon; Lord Kenlis, Prov. Grand Master, for Cumberland and Westmorland; Stephen Blair, Prov. G. Master for East Lancashire; R. J. Bagshaw, Prov. G. Master for Essex; Sir E. R. Borough, Dep. G. Master for Ireland; F. Roxburgh, P.G. Reg. as Dep. Grand Master; Bentley Shaw, S.G.D. and D.P.M. for West Yorkshire; Dr. Jabez Hogg, P.G.D.; J. Savage, P.G.D.; G. Cox, P.G.D.; J. Hervey, Grand Secretary; Rev. R. J. The M.W. Grand Master having taken his place on the throne, Grand Lodge was opened with solemn prayer.

The Grand Superintendent of Works then approached the throne, and handed to the Grand Master the plans of the new and now completed buildings.

The GRAND MASTER then addressed the brethren in the following terms: Brethren, we are on this day honoured by the attendance of the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, Grand Master of Scotland; and therefore I shall ask that two Past Wardens, two Deacons, and two Stewards shall retire and conduct him into Grand Lodge.

The Wardens, Deacons, and Stewards then retired for the purpose, and on their return escorted his lordship in a formal manner to the dais, where he took his seat on the left of the M.W. Grand Master. His lordship was received with loud and enthusiastic applause, and was saluted with the grand honours by the brethren under the direction of the Grand Director of Ceremonies, at the conclusion of which

HIS LORDSHIP rose and said: Brethren, I will not detain you or cause any interruption of the proceedings by making a speech at this time, but I cannot help thanking you most cordially, in the name of my Scottish brethren, for the reception you have given me as their Grand Master, and I say that I accept it as a proof of the brotherly love and affection which, I trust, will always subsist between the two countries. (Loud and prolonged cheering.)

Bro. HERVEY, the Grand Secretary, read the summons convening the Special Grand Lodge for that day.

The GRAND SECRETARY then read a letter from the Earl de Grey and Ripon, stating that he was unable to attend, having only recently received the commands of Her Majesty to attend a Council at Windsor. Therefore, he could not refrain from obeying Her Majesty to attend the Council, but still he would have been amongst them at a later period of the day had Her Majesty not also invited him to dinner with her at Windsor Castle. Such being the case his lordship would be quite unable to be present.

Bro. J. HAVERS, P.G.W., and Chairman of the Building Committee, then addressed Grand Lodge. He said, on the present occasion it was his duty to address a few observations in reference to the building they were about to inaugurate, but as he should be followed by the Grand Chaplain, who would deliver an oration in which the subject would be fully treated, he should only give a short statement as to the origin and completion of the building. For a long period there had existed an earnest desire amongst many members of Grand Lodge that they should have a fitting home for English Freemasons, and when a committee was formed to consider that subject they approached the task with great difficulty, for as all large bodies were difficult to move, they found that the Masonic body did not materially differ from others in that respect. It was about ten years ago when the subject was first mooted, but it was not until 1862 that the Building Committee was formed, and the work was nearly completed in 1867. He understood that the principle of competition was received with disfavour amongst architects, but the execution of this work by the Grand Superintendent of Works, had tended to rescue the system of competition from the disfavour that was previously cast upon it, as it was believed the Committee had accepted the best design. The money for the erection of the building had been borrowed on the credit of Grand Lodge, and, although the Committee had obtained powers to borrow an extra £3,000 for the completion of this temple, he was glad to say that their anticipations of the probable cost were correct, and they were not required to draw the extra £3,000. The Committee felt that there was considerable elasticity in the Craft; they possessed their confidence, and they believed that they could build the building for the sum named, and that they would never miss the money. When they proposed to build this new building, they did not expect to get a return for the erection of their house, but at present they received a rental of £1,200 in addition to a premium of £5,000, and in a few years the rental will be £3,140. It must, however, be borne in mind that this amount was not all clear profit, for there were increased taxes and other charges. There was one matter that he referred to with regret, for there was a coffee-room and library for the use of the brethren, comfortable in all respects, and yet not more than thirty members availed themselves of it, although there was no entrance-fee to be paid, and the whole subscription was one guinea per annum. He was happy to say that with the exception of some small articles of furniture still required, all bills were discharged and all debts were paid. It was a subject of great congratulation to the Building Committee, and to himself in particular, that they were approaching the termination of their seven years' labour, and they felt that under very trying circumstances, to the best of their ability, they had performed their duty, but at the same time he asked the indulgence of the brethren for any shortcomings they might perceive, and he begged to tender to his Lordship his very best thanks for the undeviating confidence which he had from the first reposed in the Building Committee. There was another source of congratulation to them, and one of which they were justly highly proud, viz., that the good work had been begun, carried on, and completed during his Lordship's term of office as Grand Master of England, and although the waves of Masonry at one time ran high, all was now calm, and there was not a portion of the building but would be identified with the name of Zetland, and it would also be cherished in the hearts of Freemasons. (Cheers.) He should be lacking in gratitude if he did not also express it to every one of his colleagues for the kindness and kind support they had at all times given him, and particularly to his esteemed Brother G. Plucknett, to whom he was greatly indebted for the assistance he had given him. In conclusion, he said he had seen carried out the dearest wish of his heart, in the separation of tavern accommodation from Masonry, for they now fortunately possessed a fitting temple for the practice of their art, and he hoped that it would long flourish. (Hear, hear.)

Under the direction of Bro. James Coward, Grand Organist, assisted by Bros. R. Barnby, Fielding, Walker, Wilbye Cooper, Montem Smith, Theodore Distin, and Winn, the following anthem was sung:—

"I Have Surely Built Thee an House."

I have surely built thee an house to dwell in: a settled place for thee to abide in for ever.

But will God indeed dwell on earth? behold the heaven, and heaven of heavens, cannot contain thee: how much less this house that I have builded.

Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, O Lord my God.

That thine eyes may be opened towards this house night and day, even toward the place of which thou hast said, My Name shall be there.

And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray towards this place: and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place; and when thou hearest, forgive.

If there be in the land famine, if there be pestilence whatsoever plague, whatsoever sickness there be:

What prayer and supplication soever be made by any man, or by all thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart, and spread forth his hands towards this house:

Then hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive.

And the Lord said to Solomon, I have heard thy prayer: I have hallowed this house which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever: and mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually.

Amen. Hallelujah.

The M.W. Grand Master then descended from the Throne, and a procession was formed in the following order:—

The Grand Chaplain (carrying on a Cushion the Volume of Sacred Law), with the Square and Compasses.

The Junior Grand Warden,
 carrying the Cornucopia, with Corn.

The Senior Grand Warden (carrying the Ewer, with Wine).
 The Deputy Grand Master (carrying the Ewer, with Oil).

The Grand Sword Bearer.

THE GRAND MASTER.

The procession moved three times round the Grand Lodge, and the Wine, Corn and Oil were then sprinkled by the Grand Master, and the usual dedication to the great principles of which they are symbolic was then made.

The Rev. Robert J. Simpson, Grand Chaplain, then delivered an Oration which was listened to with marked attention, and at the end much applauded.

The following Anthem was then sung:—

Hail! Immortal Lord!
 By heaven and earth adored,
 All hail! great God!
 Before Thy name we bend,
 To us thy grace extend,
 And to our prayer attend.
 All hail! great God!

With solemn prayer the Grand Lodge was closed, and the brethren retired to an excellent which was served in the large Dining Hall, where a procession was formed of the Provincial Grand Masters and Grand Officers, who preceded the Most Worshipful Grand Master and his lordship took his seat at the head of the table. Grace having been sung by the professional brethren, the creature comforts were partaken of, and for the pains and attention bestowed the brethren have to thank Bro. Charles Gosden, the Manager. The arrangements were complete and gave general satisfaction.

BANQUET,

The cloth having been drawn, the National Anthem was sung, the solo parts being given by Mdle. Carola, Madame Bodda-Pyne, and Bros. Wilbye Cooper and Winn.

The GRAND MASTER in proposing the health of Her Majesty the Queen, said he was glad to see she was coming more often among her subjects, none of whom were more loyal than the Freemasons. He was also very glad to find how much she had lately improved in her health and spirits to enable her to transact the important duties of her high station.

The toast was drunk with applause.

The GRAND MASTER said the next toast he had to propose, was that of the "Health of the Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and the other members of the Royal Family." The Grand Master said he was sure that all those Brethren who heard him, would cordially endorse his sincere wishes for their welfare, and would join with him in expressing delight in seeing the Royal Family growing up and being educated under Her Majesty's careful guidance. (Loud cheers.)

The toast was well received, and it was remarked that, contrary to the anticipation of several Brethren no allusion was made to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in connection with Freemasonry.

Song, by Madame Bodda-Pyne.

In allusion to a desire for an encore the M.W. GRAND MASTER rose and said:—There are twenty-eight different songs to be sung this evening. It is impossible to allow encores.

Bro. HALL, Provincial Grand Master for Cambridgeshire, proposed the "Health of the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons of England, the Right Honourable the Earl of Zetland." He said it was a toast which had been given a great many times, but he was sure had never been given with more satisfaction than it would be upon that occasion. (Cheers.) The Grand Master was really their friend. (Hear, hear.) He (Bro. Hall), was old enough to remember what took place twenty-five years ago, when he was elected to the high and important office of Grand Master, and what hopes were expressed then, and which hopes had been fully realised by his consistent perseverance, culminating in the glorious ceremony they had that evening witnessed. The Grand Master had gained the affection of the Brethren, not only in this country but all over the world, and he was quite satisfied that had it not been for his excellent conduct, the Craft would not be in such a flourishing state as it now is. He need not refer to the building, which had been re-organised and valuable a principle adopted, for they now had a separation of their lodges from the tavern. It had for some time been a reproach to them that their mysteries were performed in rooms which were almost immediately afterwards used for conviviality, and it had been well said by the Grand Chaplain that the name of Zetland was not only engraved on the building, but on the breast of every Freemason, for he had found Masonry in a tavern, and he would leave it in a palace.

The toast was drunk with loud and continued cheering.

The GRAND MASTER, who upon rising to respond to the toast was greeted with acclamation, said: Brethren, I will request you to give me, by your silence for a little while, an opportunity of expressing my feelings on this occasion. I can assure you that I find it very difficult to do so, for the kindness with which I have been received this day not only compensates me for all the trouble and anxiety I have had during the five and twenty years I have been Grand Master, but it renders it most difficult to express my gratitude for the kind support you have given during that long period. I may say in reference to the excellent speech delivered by Bro. Havers in the temple, when he complimented me that an honour had been conferred upon Freemasonry by my having served so long as Grand Master, that, but I consider Freemasonry has conferred a greater honour on me in electing me for twenty-five times as Grand Master. I can assure you, brethren, that I never conceived that I conferred an honour upon Freemasonry, but I do conceive that Freemasonry has done me a high and unmerited honour in electing me so often as Grand Master, and I can assure you I feel it in the inmost recesses of my heart. I can never do sufficient to repay the good opinion you have formed of me. I wish I could have done ten times as much as I have done. I wish I could have done my duty in a more able and efficient manner; but as far as my talents and time have enabled me, I have done what I believe to be the best. I can assure you that I feel proud of this day; I feel proud of the compliment you have paid me in inviting me to preside at the inauguration of this building at the end of twenty-five years' service. After what has been accomplished for Freemasonry I am fully aware that very little merit or credit is due to me for what has taken place, except that I have done all in my power to build a temple adequate to the wants of Freemasonry, and separate the Craft from the influence of the tavern. By the indefatigable exertions of the brethren who formed the Building Committee, and the good sense of Grand Lodge, this great act has been accomplished, and I trust for the benefit of Freemasons in ages to come. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) And although, I shall not live to see it, I shall bear to the grave a remembrance of the honour conferred upon me in presiding over the great Craft of English Freemasons. I assure you, I most heartily drink success to this building and all concerned in it. (Loud cheers.)

The GRAND MASTER said:—Brethren, it is now my pleasing duty to propose a toast which I am sure needs no recommendation from me to invite your attention. The toast is "The Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland." (Loud cheers). That is a toast that is given on every occasion of our great meetings, but it is not given then as now, when we are not only honoured by the presence of the Grand Master of Scotland in person, but we are also honoured by the presence of the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland. If it had been possible, we should have been honoured by the presence of the Grand Master of Ireland, but I have received a communication from him stating that, in consequence of his masonic duties in Ireland it would prevent him from coming over, as he did us the honour of attending on the occasion of laying the foundation stone. With regard to the Grand Master of Scotland, I need not say one word, as he is well-known to the greater part of those present, as one who for so long occupied the post of Deputy Grand Master of England, and I am sure he is worthy of the great acclamations you will cordially bestow upon him. As to Sir Edward Borough, the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland, he has done us the honour to come from Ireland to attend on this occasion in the name of the Grand Master of Ireland, I feel myself gratified by his presence here this day, and I am sure you will drink with all possible honours the toast, which is "The health of the Grand Masters of Scotland and Ireland." (The toast was drunk with loud cheering).

The EARL OF DALHOUSIE, Grand Master for Scotland, said:—Brethren, as your M.W. Grand Master has said, the toast he has just given on ordinary occasions is somewhat of a formal character. I rejoice to find that on this important occasion that we are united together, and I thank you for the way in which the Grand Master of Scotland has been received in the Grand Lodge of England; and brethren I shall make my constituents in Scotland aware of the high honour you have conferred on their Grand Master upon the present occasion. I hope, however, that I do not sever myself when I say that, although sailing under my national colours, you all recognise the old flag under which I formerly fought. Although I have been called upon to fill the masonic throne of Scotland for a season, my masonry dates from England, and England is the standard under which I was made and under which I served. I am old enough to remember the introduction of our Most Worshipful Grand Master to the throne of England, and since he has occupied that post he had been of great benefit to the masons of England in the accomplishment of that great work of which he has this day as it were laid the "keystone." Brethren, let me congratulate you that you have now a temple for freemasonry, not where we celebrate festivities but in a place where we carry on the secret mysteries of the craft, and where only those sacred mysteries will be practised, within the walls. You have not only done that, but you have added a group of buildings, and the magnificent hall in which I am now addressing you. Nothing is more required to make freemasonry in England perfect than that every man should put his shoulder to the wheel and assist in doing what he can. I thank you sincerely for the very cordial reception you have given me this day as the Grand Master of Scotland, and I trust I shall long live in your hearts as Past Deputy Grand Master of England. (Cheers).

Sir E. R. BOROUGHS, Deputy Grand Master for Ireland, said:—After the eloquent speech of the Right Worshipful the Grand Master of Scotland, I must leave my case in your hands, but I cannot refrain from saying that I never had a greater Masonic treat than being present on this occasion. I think it was about 1830 when I first entered the Apollo Lodge, at Oxford, and although I have risen to high rank in Ireland, yet I can never forget that I first began my career in England. I have to thank you for your hospitality, and when I return to Ireland I shall certainly tell the Irish Masons all I have seen, and the kind reception I have met with. We have a hall which will soon be open in that unfortunate country (Cries of Oh! Oh!), and if any one of you will do us the honour of coming, and seeing us, we will give you a hospitable welcome. The Grand Master of Ireland was obliged to go away, but on Wednesday next, he will distribute the prizes to the children in the Masonic schools, and although Masonry has been denounced in certain quarters, yet the Grand Master of Ireland has written a letter to me, saying that the masonic ball in Dublin was a great success. I thank you most heartily, and when I go back to Ireland, I shall not forget to tell them what excellent fellows the English Masons are. (Applause.)

The M.W. GRAND MASTER:—I now beg to propose to you the health of the Right Worshipful Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Grand Master and the rest of the Grand Officers for the year. In proposing the toast, I regret that the Deputy Grand Master is unable to be present. I received a letter from him yesterday evening, which will account satisfactorily for his absence, which is to the effect that "the Queen will hold a Council this evening, and as Lord President I am bound to attend, therefore it will be impossible for me to be present at the Freemasons Hall." I regret that he is absent, but he could not prevent it. I hope you will join with me in drinking to the Earl de Grey and Ripon, and the rest of the Grand Officers of the year, believing as I do they are all most anxious to serve the Grand Lodge and the Craft to the best of their ability. He coupled with the toast the name of Bro. Frederick Dundas, P.G.W.

The toast was well received.

BRO. FREDERICK DUNDAS, P.G. Warden, and a representative of the Prussian Grand Lodge, returned thanks. He said the Craft was greatly indebted to the Grand Master for the manner in which he had for twenty-five years presided over them, sparing no time of his own, and no opportunity to further the interests of the Craft to the best of his ability and the utmost of his power and; he believed if it was known how many times he was absent it would not approach the number of times he was at his post. They could never be too grateful to him for twenty-five years was a large piece in a man's life and there were brethren present, who would remember it for years to come. The Craft was in a languid state when he came in it, compared to what it is now. What was it they. Why not only England alone, but the colonies themselves were alive to the spirit of Masonry. That was the result of the arduous duty undertaken by the M.W. Grand Master which would speak for itself. Every Mason here present was, he felt sure, ready to speak a good word for their M.W. Grand Master. He had asked that his name might be remembered in the breast, but he (Bro. Dundas) believed his name would be remembered for ever. (Hear, hear.) I beg in the name of the Grand Officers to thank you, and assure you it will always be our endeavour to support you.

The Most Worshipful GRAND MASTER:—I now beg to call your attention to the toast of the Provincial Grand Masters who have honoured us with their presence this day. I am glad to see so many around me to day; Bro. Hall has returned thanks already, and therefore I will select another in rotation, which is Bro. Bagshaw. P.G. Master for Essex, but he was anxious that he (Grand Master) should couple another name with the toast, which was that of Bro. Stephen Blair, Provincial Grand Master for East Lancashire, who had lately shown himself to be a true Mason by giving a large sum to one of their Charities. He was sure the brethren would be gratified to see so many Provincial Grand Masters, and amongst them the Earl of Limerick, who was ably carrying out Masonry in a different province. He gave them "The health of the Grand Masters of England," coupling with the toast the name of Bro. Stephen Blair, Provincial Grand Master for East Lancashire.

BRO. BLAIR said when he came into the room he had little expectation of being singled out to propose a toast, or to return thanks for the Prov. Grand Masters of England, which had been proposed. He believed that the Grand Master appointed him (Bro. Blair) as one of his Provincial Grand Officers soon after he was appointed himself as Grand Master.

As the great leader, he had been anxious to follow the rules and dictates he had laid down. The M.W. Grand Master had said that he had subscribed handsomely to the Boys' School. He had done so, and he had done it with much pleasure, and he hoped what he had done would be carried on by others in the same way. He knew that they could not have a better institution than the Boys' School, and, if properly carried on, it was in a wrong position in having a debt of £10,000 upon it. Therefore, he endeavoured to put it right, for instead of paying £500 a year in the shape of interest on that debt, they could do far better with the money in assisting the children of their poorer brethren. The brethren had come forward well. He knew that they must have a leader, and he knew that unless he came forward himself he could not expect others to do so. He took the lead, and they followed him. The Boys' School and the Institution for Aged Freemasons, were good charities, and their poorer brethren were relieve in a way that was not done before. Although he did not often see him, yet he followed the Grand Master and endeavoured to carry out what he knew to be the wish of brethren, not only of England but everywhere else, and to assist them by all the means in his power. He had only spoken of East Lancashire, but he would now come to West Yorkshire (hear, hear) and he could bear his testimony to the liberal way in which they supported the Masonic institutions. Should he be required, he should be happy to do more: he hoped that their institutions might flourish as long as he was spared upon this sublunary abode, and for many years after he was gone.

The M.W. GRAND MASTER proposed "The Building Committee," coupling with the toast, the name of Bro. Stebbing.

Bro. STEBBING, Past Grand Deacon, said he regretted that the illness and failing health of Bro. Havers had placed on his shoulders the duty of returning thanks for himself and the Building Committee. At the same time it was some satisfaction to return thanks for him, for the ability and intelligence with which he had carried out his duties as chairman of the Building Committee. It was no slight task to enter upon the building of such an Institution for there were many difficulties to be surmounted, many differences to be smoothed over, and in thus dedicating a temple to Freemasonry they were all deeply indebted to Bro. Havers, and for the success that had been achieved on that occasion, which had been so eloquently alluded to by Bro. Simpson, in the Oration he had delivered that day. On the part of the Building Committee, he said that they were guided by the leading spirit of Bro. Havers, to whom the whole credit was due. He expressed his satisfaction that the building had been begun and completed under the Presidency of their Grand Master, and he took that opportunity of assuring him, after his twenty-five years' service in freemasonry that their hearts were always loyal and true to their chief, that they never wavered towards their M.W. Grand Master, and that those feelings culminated with joy and satisfaction in the completion of this temple. Having paid a passing compliment to Br. Plucknett, he said there was something in freemasonry superior to buildings, superior to palaces, superior to all human institutions; for although they might all pass away, yet Freemasonry, being founded on truth, would endure and never decay.

Some other toasts were given, and the brethren and ladies retired to the Grand Hall, where a selection of music was gone through, and at which the Grand Master, the Earl Dalhousie, and several of the Grand Officers attended.

Bro. F. Spencer acted as Toast-master, and acquitted himself with credit.

The professional singers were:—Madame Bodda Pyne, Miss Agnes, Miss E. Flower; Bros. Winn, Cooper, Theodore Distin, F. Walker, and Coward.

Taken altogether, the whole affair was a genuine success.

The following selection of music was performed during the evening:—

ON MASONRY.

By  B.C., 1222.

The spirit prompts, the mind is blank,
Hail Holy Son, by gifts explain
Mysteries now unfathomable.
O thou in whom a glimmering light
For love fraternal faintly glows,
Who yearns for knowledge pure and true
Substantially to be expressed,
Come masked unsought, but welcome.
And drink from Wisdom's fount,
Prepared with care, bereft of means direct;
Thy rash advance opposed by peril,
Thy fond retreat still stayed,
By that which bides it work to do,
Midst dangers great, o'er perils path
Still walk secure, through trust in God,
Nor fear thy steps to take,
Though darkness cloud thy sight.

MEMORIAL HYMN.

To Craftsmen in the Celestial Lodge above.

By BRO. ROB. MORRIS, LL.D., KENTUCKY.

We sing of those who've gone,
The friends to memory nearest,
Who left our Lodge forlorn
When youthful hopes were dearest;
We drop our voices low,
And tears in silence flow—
They're gone, they're gone, we know,
To the quiet place of death;
To the Silent Lodge beneath,
Where the green sprigs ever bloom,
In the low, low tomb...
Rest sweetly there!
So mote it be!

Each mystic grace they had
Our faithful souls have yielded;
The types that made them glad,
Our hearts on them are builded:
The Level, Plumb, and Square—
The Acacia, green and fair,
We dropped it gently there,
In the quiet place of death,
In the silent lodge beneath,
Where the green sprigs ever bloom,
In the low, low tomb...
Rest sweetly there!
So mote it be!

We deem not they are lost,
To Faith and Hope no craven,
But, with the white-robed host
Who look in Love to heaven,
We raise our voices high,
And call them to the sky
Who here in darkness lie:—
"From the quiet place of death,
From the Silent Lodge beneath,
Where the green sprigs ever bloom—
From the low, low tomb,
Rise, Brother, rise!"
So mote it be!

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS. — A quarterly general court of the governors of this institution was held on Tuesday, April 13th, at the Freemasons' Hall, Bro. John Symonds, P.A.G.D.C., occupied the chair. Bro. John Udall moved, "That notice on behalf of the trustees be forthwith given to the mortgagees of the intention to pay off the mortgage of £10,000 on the freehold property at Woodgreen, at the expiration of six months from the date of such notice." This £10,000 was principally collected at the last anniversary dinner, held on March 10th, in answer to Bro. Binckes's (secretary) energetic appeal. The motion having been seconded, was agreed to. The election of fifteen boys from a list of fifty-four candidates was then proceeded with.—Standard.

ERRATA.—In our report last week of the Provincial Grand Chapter of West Lancashire, the name "Forster" was incorrectly given as that of the Companion invested Sword Bearer; it should have been Fowler.

CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Your correspondent "Leo," in your impression of 3rd inst., seems to be misinformed as regards the Past Master's degree, in stating that it is a side degree in Scotland. It is not, being held by the Supreme Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland as the second degree. (Vide S.B.R.A., Chap., Laws, cap. ii., sec. 1.) Brethren receiving the chair degree (on the blue) are not recognised by any lodge of Past Masters in Scotland; moreover, the Grand Lodge does not authorise it. If a brother has received the degree in a lodge of P.M.'s, I hold that he is admissible to any lodge of "regularly-installed Masters." In Scotland, brethren have a right to the (courtesy) title of P.M. through virtue of being ex-R.W.M.'s; but, knowing nothing of the secrets of the degree, would not be allowed to enter a lodge of "regularly-installed Masters."

"Leo" remarks that some lodges in Scotland (old ones) grant the degree of Chair, i.e., P. Master. They have no right to do so, as Grand Lodge does not recognise such a degree, it not being within the pale of "St. John's Masonry." However, he is quite right in his statement, as a good many lodges take upon themselves to give the Chair degree, but also the Royal Arch, under the charter granted by Grand Lodge. It seems to me great laxity on the part of Grand Lodge to allow such spurious working under their Charter. Let Grand Lodge make an example of a few lodges by suspending or recalling charters from lodges working those degrees, then farewell to Chair and Royal Arch (on the blue). AMMI.

PAST MASTERS AS PRECEPTORS.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have been much struck with the letter of "P.M. and P.Z." in your issue of the 27th ult., and also most cordially agree with your editorial remarks on the same question. As your correspondent invites discussion on the subject, I am tempted to ask you to insert another letter in reference thereto. That it is most desirable to institute one uniform system of working, none I think can doubt; but then comes the question—How is that uniformity to be attained? I have heard many suggestions, and have several times seen the matter mentioned in the Masonic Mirror, but I never saw or heard anything which bore on the face of it such a stamp of feasibility as the idea propounded by "P.M. and P.Z.," and I cannot forbear expressing the opinion that every true Mason should put his shoulder to the wheel and assist to the utmost of his power in the formation of a "Lodge of Installed Preceptors," as I feel persuaded that once let it become an established fact, the great majority of Past Masters will, if I may use the expression of the Pharmacutists, become "members by examination."

If not presuming too much on your patience, I would throw out a few suggestions, in the sincere hope that they will be taken up and improved upon by those who are much more able to deal with these matters than myself. I would propose, then, that a memorial be got up to Grand Lodge praying our M.W. G.M. to appoint a committee, that they in their turn may be empowered to commission, say, twelve Past Masters to constitute a nucleus for the Board of Preceptors; that this nucleus shall have the power to approve or reject all candidates who present themselves for examination, and shall continue so to act, until by the admission of members its numbers so increase that it can then appoint officers, committees, delegates, &c., as occasion may require. It is true that by this means we are placing men in the position of examiners who have not themselves passed the ordeal, but surely we have sufficient confidence in our Grand Master to know that he would only sanction the appointment of such brethren as he knew to be competent to perform their duties properly. And here let me say that, if this matter is to be carried out well and efficiently, we must let no jealousy or non-Masonic spirit creep in. I know that some may say I am setting up a Board of London Past Masters, when there are many in the provinces equally competent; that it is encouraging a spirit of centralization which ought to be avoided; but my reply is—The movement must be commenced by some one, and in some place, and where so proper as in the precincts of Grand Lodge itself? Besides, we must remember that in a short time the board would contain many provincial P.M.'s, who, if not absolutely in the majority, would certainly prove so respectable a minority that their views and opinions would exercise great influence in all deliberations.

After the establishment of the board, comes the question—On what system of working is the candidate for admission to be examined? That this question should have to be asked, shows how great the necessity of an uniform system has become, for I venture to say at the present moment two brethren, who may each be thoroughly good workers, might be found to declare that each knew very little of the proper way to work a lodge; consequently, the only method I can see at present is, that each candidate must most undeniably prove to the board of examiners that he is thoroughly versed in working the degrees, lectures, sections, &c., as usually practised in his province. The consequence would be, we should then get a thorough knowledge of the working of each district, and by taking what is good in some, and refusing what is undesirable in others, we get a system of working at once uniform and good; then, after such ritual had received the sanction of Grand Lodge, it would, of course, become the standard of all future examinations.

Another serious consideration would be the expense and loss of time entailed upon brethren at a distance from London by having to attend personally that they might be enrolled as members of the board; but this difficulty might in a great measure be met by deputing some brother, "well skilled in the ancient charges," to act as a travelling examiner, to meet the expense of which, doubtless, Grand Lodge would contribute an annual sum, while the fees payable by each brother on becoming a member would be sufficient to meet all emergencies.

Independently of the great advantage to the craft generally in having one recognised system of working, the great benefit to ourselves as Past Masters ought to induce all who have attained that high honour to bestir themselves in this matter, and rest not until the desired end is accomplished. The remark made by "P.M." and "P.Z.," that Masters who have, perhaps, most efficiently fulfilled the duties of the chair, are, after their term of office has expired, very apt to grow rusty, is but too true, more especially in those lodges to which no chapter is attached, as, should there be one, they would in all probability be struggling to fit themselves for the honourable discharge of those higher duties to which they are eligible. Let us then lose no time, but each all unite heart and hand to bring to bear all legitimate pressure in high quarters, and our request will quickly meet the response for which we hope.

Apologising for the length of this communication, but trusting that others may take up your space more worthily in ventilation of this important topic,

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,
P.M. 200.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—If by means of the movement originated by Br. Stevens in your columns, uniformity of ritual be obtained, THE FREEMASON will have the honour of having effected the reform which, above all others, is most urgently needed by the Craft.

In a ritual preserved, as that of Masonry is, by tradition only, a gradual deterioration and divergence from the true standard is inevitable. Human memory is fallible, and the mistakes of one generation of officers are adopted as the true and correct version by the next. There are at present no means whatever of regaining the lost standard of correctness, and thus there is a constant tendency to the multiplication of false versions.

The difficulty presented from this cause to an earnest Mason conscientiously desirous of learning thoroughly his duties in the lodge, has been already commented upon in your columns, and would of itself amply justify the demand for a reform in this particular. But the divergence of ritual involves a far graver evil, which has not as yet been put forward. The members of each lodge naturally think their own ritual correct, and any other incorrect. At present the discrepancies are comparatively inconsiderable, but they are daily growing more marked. So long as such discrepancies are allowed to remain, we nourish within the bosom of our Order the seeds of future dissension, which, if suffered to germinate, may in a few years lead to a repetition of the schism, which in the last century split the Order into two contending factions.

In addition to the establishment of the proposed Lodge of Preceptors (which would go far to remedy the evil), I would suggest that the ritual, as settled by such lodge, should be committed to writing and preserved with the archives of the Grand Lodge; and further, that those portions of the ritual as to which secrecy is not only unimportant but absurd (as, for instance, the prayers used in the three degrees), should be publicly printed by authority (as the E.A. charge is at present), for the use of the Craft, thus lightening the task, already sufficiently difficult, of committing the ritual to memory.

Yours fraternally,
DELTA.

OPERATIVE LODGES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have perused with much interest the recent communications of Bro. Hughan, and also the correspondence of Bro. Yarker.

The subject of which they treat is in itself so interesting, that I have ventured to forward the subjoined remarks. The evidence supplied by the Operative Lodges is very valuable, and Bro. Hughan is doing well to disentomb those long-buried minutes and forgotten documents. The more evidence we can collect, the better, as everything tends to throw light on the neglected history and archaeology of Freemasonry.

I am, however, inclined to think that Bro. Hughan and other writers of to-day, rate somewhat too highly the value of such evidence in settling the very difficult question of the true antiquity of the various parts of our system. There seems, for some time past, a growing tendency among a class of writers to exalt the evidence afforded by modern minute books, and equally modern rituals, and to set more store by them than they fairly warrant us in doing. Bro. Hughan will not find any written evidence of the second and third degree, most probably, in the Exertica epoch of the revival, and the evidence we shall have only against, must be, I think, indirect, and to a great extent only inferential.

And the reason of this is plain. In the first place, the minutes only refer to the business of the lodge, then, as now, transacted in the first degree, and do not concern themselves, until a much later period, with the ceremonies. Bro. Hughan's suggestion that the terms Master and Fellow were only distinctions in rank, not in degree or secrets, is, however ingenious, inadmissible, because equally repugnant to the most ancient constitutions and to the most modern minutes, even of the operative lodges. In the next place, I cannot help thinking that much may be said about restricting the "raising of masters" to the Annual Assembly. There is undoubted evidence that, in 1742, the custom of the York Grand Lodge was (following, as they averred, ancient usage) to give the third degree in the Grand Lodge Meeting.

I am not aware whether there is any evidence in Scotland of a "Grand Assembly," or whether the history of Operative Masonry there is simply a history of individual lodges. But as there seem traces of a Grand Master, there may also have been a Grand Convention of the Operative Lodges. Whether there be so or not, all that the evidence of the Scottish Operative Lodges proves, so far, is this: not that the second and third degrees did not exist, but that they are not mentioned in minutes referring to business transacted in the first degree.

Bro. Hughan is perfectly correct in the wording of the Regulation 30, in Harleian M.S.S., vol. 1942 (by a misprint Bro. Hughan says 1242), but I am of opinion that Bro. Yarker is right, in understanding "Master" there to mean "Grand Master," as a private lodge is never called an assembly, and the rule refers evidently to the Annual Grand Assembly.

Believing then, as I do, that such discussions as these are very helpful to the furtherance of a right appreciation of our true history, and admiring, as I do, the perseverance of Bro. Hughan in this interesting study, and the zeal and abilities of Bro. Yarker, I beg to conclude my humble contribution to-day by subscribing myself,

Very fraternally yours,

LATHOMUS.

P.S.—Equally with Bro. Hughan, I should be deeply interested in receiving any evidence which carries the Masonic Templars back to 1686.

VERBOSITY IN REPORTS OF LODGE MEETINGS.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I was much pleased on reading the remarks in your columns of Saturday, the 27th inst., respecting "Hints to Reporters." As a constant reader of your paper since its publication, and likewise that of your contemporary, "The Freemason's Magazine," I can only confirm the statement of your correspondent by saying that I have repeatedly heard complaints made by the brethren of this locality as to the dry, tedious, and uninteresting reports from the generality of the lodges.

I would respectfully suggest, Bro. Editor, that the object of such reports would be sufficiently attained by inserting a list of the names of the brethren, with that of their lodge, as they take their respective degrees.

To the report of one of our Stockton lodges which appeared in your edition of the 20th inst. I think the remarks above-mentioned are particularly applicable, as I noticed the same tedious details of the working of the lodge, with only the following additional, but invidious remark:—"Which is composed of members with whom it is at once a pleasure and a privilege to meet, we wish as much could be said of every lodge in the province."

This evidently has been written by a visiting brother to the Stockton lodge, who, no doubt, wished to pay its brethren a very flattering compliment; at the same time, he should be reminded that he ought not to do so at the expense of the good name of the other lodges in the district.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,
P.M.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

By A. LEWIS.

IV.—MASONRY AND CIVIL OBLIGATIONS.

"For he embarketh himself to set sail with a west-north-west wind, every one in heaps did cast into the ship gold, silver, rings, jewels, spices, clouzs, and aromatical perfumes, parrots, pelicans, monkeys, civet cats, black-spotted weazels, porcupines, &c. He was accounted no good mother's son who did not cast in all the rare and precious things he had."—RABELAIS, Gargantua Book, i. 50.

It might seem strange to the reader to see at the head of this paper a quotation from an author who shares with Lucian, Aristophanes, and a few others a rare reputation for whimsicality joined with wisdom. But to the Mason, the writer is disposed to think, the words will be found applicable. Indeed it is more than likely that Rabelais, who wrote his inimitable budget of fun and satire at a very solemn crisis of the world's history, was himself a Mason. Perhaps, among his wide experience, this honourable body had claimed him; for there are other important allusions in his works to the necessity of charity and prudence. In a very cautious way he, in the directions given for the erection of the Abbey of Theleme, symbolizes many important truths of the Order. Monks are stigmatised as being mal-nez (of ill-bred disposition, or with bad noses), whereas those admitted to the androgyne establishment of Theleme were to be bien naturez, bene nati, well-born, the reverse of malnez, ill-born or disfigured in person. See the fifty-third chapter of the first book of Gargantua.

At the time when Rabelais wrote, the whole of society was in the throes of emergence from the thralldom of the letter arriving at the better condition of the spirit. It was his object, therefore, as it should be that of every good citizen, to promote throughout the world what is to be found in a lodge "just, perfect, and regular."

It is well known in the annals of Masonry that the wandering guilds who travelled from country to country, and built the sacred structures in which the exoteric communities adored the G.A.O.T.U., in defiance and grim mockery of priestly rule, flung sarcastic emblems indicative of their solemn protests against priestly arrogance and evil-doing with those symbols enjoined by tradition and consecrated by Faith. From this time forward a deadly animosity has reigned in the hearts of Roman Catholic authorities against the Order. Hence the various fulminations of the Vatican directly against Freemasons.

The superstitious priests who held up the sacred branch, unintelligible to them from their crass ignorance, did not dare to remove these evidences of Masonic playfulness from the edifices raised for them by their opponents; therefore they remained in grim parabolic manner on the walls of the cathedrals, abbeys, and churches. Let those who can read, read, and be certified of this important truth.

But henceforward there arose a cry that Freemasons desired to subvert that society which in truth, by precept and example, they only sought to remodel. A charge, therefore, was easily instituted by the possessors of temporalities, that the Masons were foes to civil as well as religious liberty. This, however, is answered by the fact that of all things you may speak in a lodge—except religion and politics. Masons are more peculiarly bound to respect civil and political institutions than other men, but they cannot avoid sharing special political sympathies with the mass of mankind. Hence their ordinances enjoin the most scrupulous respect for that which exists, with the most heartfelt hope of gradual and orderly improvement in every direction.

In the family, Masons are taught to restrain their passions, to respect the ties of blood, and to enforce by precept and example the rules of temperance and good report. In the State, Masons are enjoined to have confidence in the appointed rulers and princes under whose guidance and government they find themselves; and to be a Mason, in the true sense, is to be a patriot of the purest character.

Thus it happens that a Mason entering the military state is ready, independent of other considerations, to encounter everything for the honour of his country. As a sailor, he shrinks from no danger that may be necessary to increase the security of his native land. As a minister of religion, he seeks to enlarge the boundaries of morality and true humanity; as a merchant, to increase the wealth of his country without offence or rapacity. As a husband and father, a son or brother, his duty is plain and straightforward; and while he more peculiarly respects and cherishes those to whom he is allied by the tie of Light, he is led to extend the hand of humanity to those beyond. "Many are called, but few are chosen."

Those who say that Masons have no such duties as these, or that they seek mere self advancement, are far from the truth of the matter, and can only be pitied. What has been written above may appear eulogistic, and indeed it is so, but it is no more than the fact, nor while the sacred landmarks remain can Masons act otherwise than thus. Of course there are individual exceptions, alas! to this rule, and some of the legends of the Order point to sad instances of this, but as evil has a mysterious though necessary existence, so occasional instances of erring brethren are to be found. But, as in the world, these do not pass without censure or punishment. If, however, a man on becoming a Mason is not ready to do as Alpharbel, King of Canarre, is represented as doing in the merry romance of Rabelais, he can never be a Mason "in spirit and in truth."

CRYPTONYMUS.

DIVULGING THE MASONS' WORD.

The following amusing anecdote is taken from the Weston-super-Mare Gazette :—

Curiosity and timidity are two important traits in the character of Ralph Sloogey. The former quality some years ago made him desirous of learning the secrets of the Masonic fraternity: but as he had heard that hot gridirons and pugnacious goats with sharp horns are made use of during the ceremony of initiation, to satisfy himself on this point he endeavoured to "pump" an intimate personal friend, Jacob Sleeton, whom he knew to be a Mason. For a long time Ralph tried to worm out something concerning the fraternity; on every possible opportunity he would renew the attempt, until at last Jacob became offended with Ralph's persistency, and determined to punish him. Early one morning, as Ralph and Jacob were hurrying to their respective places of business, the former renewed his inquiries. "I'd give fifty dollars if I knew the signs and password. If you tell me about the password and grip, I'll promise never to ask you another word about Masonry. Come now, Jacob—you've known me since I was a boy, and you ought to be aware that if I am a little curious, I never blab. Will you tell me? Surely you don't doubt your old school-fellow? Out with the password, and I promise you that I'll be mum as a mouse."

When Ralph had completed his request, which was spoken in a loud tone, Jacob turned his head, thinking that the words might have been overheard by a gentleman who happened to be walking behind them.

This gentleman proved to be a Mr. Hinslow, who, a few weeks before, had been dismissed from his position as keeper in the Bellevue Hospital, charged with stealing spoons. The charges against Mr. Hinslow had not yet been formally proved; but a committee of the Common Council were to inquire into the facts of the case at an early day, and Jacob had been appointed a member of that committee.

The last question propounded by Ralph angered Jacob, and as he turned his eyes and beheld the man who had the stolen spoons, an idea instantly entered his mind. He conceived an admirable plan for punishing Ralph, and resolved to immediately put it in execution.

"If I tell you the password," said Jacob purposely slackening his pace to allow Mr. Hinslow to pass before them; "if I tell you the Masonic password, you promise never to divulge it—not even to a brother."

"Never!" exclaimed Ralph exultingly, thinking that at last his curiosity was to be satisfied.

"Upon your soul you swear it?"

"Upon my soul I swear it!" responded Ralph.

By this time Mr. Hinslow had passed on before them, leaving Ralph and Jacob about three yards behind.

"You'll never utter it in the hearing of man, woman, or beast?" asked Jacob.

"I solemnly swear."

"I think that I can trust you. Well, Ralph, I am about to make known to you one of the great secrets of Masonry. When you wish to form the acquaintance of a Mason, all you have to do is to whisper in his ear the mysterious password. That password is—SPOONS!"

"Spoons! O that be——!" ejaculated Ralph.

"I tell you truly—the Masonic password is spoons."

"Spoons! Ha! ha! ha!" and Ralph made a feeble attempt to laugh. "Spoons!—that's a strange password! You must think that I am a confounded fool."

"I am in earnest Ralph. When Masons get into difficulty, and need assistance, they roar out the word 'spoons' three times. Were you to say 'spoons' three times, even here in the public street, and a Mason should hear you, he would immediately rush to your assistance, thinking that you needed it."

Ralph did not believe him; and to show that he could not be so easily gulled, he roared out, at the top of his voice, "Spoons! spoons! spoons!"

Ere the second syllable had passed his mouth, Mr. Hinslow turned round and faced Ralph.

"You said 'Spoons,' did you? Take that—and that!" As he spoke, Hinslow struck Ralph between the eyes, and then under the ear, the second blow lifting the inquisitive man off his feet, so that he staggered and fell to the pavement, completely stunned.

"I'll give you spoons!" roared the excited Hinslow, as he advanced and repeatedly kicked the prostrate man. As Ralph made no effort to rise, the enraged Hinslow soon tired of kicking him, and slowly passed on, occasionally looking behind to see if Ralph were following to obtain satisfaction.

Ralph did not require satisfaction, thinking he might get too much of it; so he prudently postponed returning to consciousness until his enemy had disappeared. As he rose to his feet, he said to Jacob in a subdued tone, "Why did that man strike me?"

"Because you uttered the Masonic password, but could not respond to the countersign. He is a Mason; and, as he was solemnly bound to do, immediately answered the password by making the countersign with his hand. You were unable to answer his countersign, and for that reason he knew you to be a clandestine Mason—a man who has learned the secrets in an improper way. Therefore it was his duty to chastise you. Your life may yet be forfeited for that indiscretion."

"My life! By all that is good, I thought you were only humbugging me when you said that 'spoons' was the password."

"Sh-h-h! Beware!" said Jacob, putting his hand on Ralph's mouth. "Never utter that word again. Masons are ubiquitous, and you might lose your life. As it is, you are in danger: for all the lodges in the city will be immediately convoked to adopt measures that may discover the man who has betrayed them. My life as well as yours, is in jeopardy. Promise me that you will never again utter that password."

"And so 'Spoons' is the password!" Ralph was at last convinced that his old friend had been telling truth. "Well may I be broiled on a Mason gridiron and turned with a red-hot trowel if ever I halloo 'spoons' again!"

Ralph has most religiously kept his word. Should he need a spoon while at table, he now asks his wife for a "sugar-shovel," fearing that if he mentioned the proper name of the required article, some pugnacious member of the mystic brotherhood might respond to the Masonic password.

CELESTIAL MYSTERIES.

BY BRO. HENRY MELVILLE.

We have received a note from Bro. Henry Melville, enclosing a copy of an Astrolabe discovered at Nineveh by A. H. Layard, Esq., M.P., from which Bro. Melville deduces certain facts of an interesting character to the Masonic fraternity, and he desires us to make known the result of his investigations in the columns of THE FREEMASON. This we are quite willing to do, but we cannot help remarking that a little reflection would have convinced Bro. Melville of the inutility of publishing the letters of the Deputy Grand Master, Earl De Grey, and the Grand Registrar, Bro. McIntyre, coupled with the commentaries which Bro. Melville has made upon them. There is not a member of the English Craft who is not proud of Lord De Grey's connection with the Order, but it is manifestly unfair to expect that a Cabinet Minister, like his Lordship, occupied with the cares of State, can devote the time required to master the details of abstruse symbolism, which Bro. Melville acknowledges entailed upon himself nearly forty years' of labour to unravel. The following is an extract from Bro. Melville's explanation of the celestial mysteries:

The undersigned, for many years, has been residing in Australasia, where his attention was first directed to the research after the "long-lost mysteries" of masonry. During a period of nearly forty years he has been so engaged, under difficulties that few, he believes, would have had the perseverance to surmount; but the subject itself he found to be so alluring, so full of startling facts, and those, too, subversive of all preconceived ideas entertained by the modern world of intelligence, that the pursuit became a pleasure he could not resist; and now, after almost a life-time of labour, he can confidently say that he has succeeded in unravelling the deep mysteries of the ancient sages, both oriental and occidental!

The undersigned traced this celestial figure in Melbourne, from a drawing in Mr. Layard's work on Nineveh. He, at first, considered it an ancient Astrolabe, but finding that the points on the circle did not correspond to the requirements of an Astrolabe, he laid the tracing aside, thinking that probably light would be thrown upon it at some future period. The expectation has been realised, for, on his arrival in England, he found in the Assyrian Gallery of the British Museum, in basso relievo, the figure from which Mr. Layard obtained his drawing; but, on comparing the drawing with the slab, he found Mr. Layard's copy incorrect, and was pleased to find that the Assyrian monument was in reality, as he had first supposed, a perfect Astrolabe.

Every reasoning mind will admit, there must be some occult or hidden meaning in these symbolic representations, but the means by which such mysteries were formerly read are totally unknown to the present learned. As before observed, the undersigned has recovered the knowledge, and by the scientific use of masonic keys on Jamieson's celestial planespheres, the whole of the Egyptian and Assyrian monuments can be easily interpreted. The figures are all either simple or compound astronomical symbols, and being pictorial cannot be misinterpreted. Very different it is with the Cuniform writings engraved upon them, the characters of which are anything but pictures, and hence the difficulty of interpretation.

Mr. Layard, in his work, speaking of the Assyrian marble, says it is "The interior of a castle (a ground plan) and pavilion or tent." What resemblance there is to the ground plan of a castle it is very difficult to determine, nor does the space occupied by the horses look much like a pavilion or tent. Mr. Bonomi gives a wood-cut of the Astrolabe, but it is most incorrectly drawn.

The cross-bars within the circle are the equinoctial and solstitial colures. The circular belt is the ecliptic, and on it are 52 points on the slab, but in Mr. Layard's drawing there are only 50 points. The 52 represent the weeks of the solar year. On the outer rim of the ecliptic circle are thirteen houses, apparently with chimnies; on each of these projections are four points, denoting the 52 weeks of the lunar year of thirteen months. The figures interior to the ecliptic are symbolical of the seasons, and when the allegorical reading of the Assyrian mysteries is understood they will be found to be very energetic. The pavilion, as Mr. Layard calls it, has four horses, the animals have on their head-stalls or bridles, and are typical of solis-statio at the winter solstice in Capricornus. Mythology gives four horses to the sun; they are named Aeons, Aethon, Phlegon and Eolus or Lucifer. Phlegon means "burning," and Lucifer "that brings fire or light." There were horses of fire and a chariot of fire when Elijah, meaning "the strong Lord," went up to heaven in the whirlwind. On the Assyrian slab in question there is not any chariot, but there are many chariots whirling with great speed on the slabs adjoining.

Solomon had horses out of Egypt, "they fetched up a chariot and a horse out of Egypt for the kings of Syria," but Josiah, which means "fire of the Lord," took away the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun, and burned the chariots with fire." In the sacred writings, Astro-mythological horses are not unfrequently mentioned. In Zechariah there are four chariots with horses referred to—in the first chariot, the horses are red; in the second, black horses; in the third, white; and in the fourth, grised or spotted black and white. In Revelations there are likewise four horses; white, red, black, and pale—"He that sat on the white horse had a bow, and a crown was given unto him." Death sat upon the fourth and last—the pale horse. These four horses are registered in the heavens, and can be seen in any celestial atlas or on any celestial globe. The first, Sagittarius, the man invariably has a bow in his hand, and in Jamieson's coloured atlas the horse is represented white,—a worthless crown of victory is given to the constellation, it is Corona australis, and the Buddhists place this crown upon the head of the horseman; the second horse is Pegasus, pictured red; the third horse is now called Monoceros, and is pictured black; and the fourth and last, Centaurus, is pale or grised. Centaurus was formerly known as Jacchus, or Bacchus, or Dionysius; and the common Christian era, as settled by Dionysius, began on the first of January,—the Saviour's birth-time exceeding that of the Dionysian era by four years. This is astronomically recorded, and can be mathematically demonstrated.

The masonic astronomical keys are still religiously preserved by the Royal Arch Companions, they are now known as the triple tau and double triangle. . . . The double triangle "scratched, stained or engraved" on a tracing board and placed upon a southern celestial planesphere, when moved in accordance with the laws governed by the Assyrian Astrolabe, will prove the demise of Dionysius to be on the last day of the year, the 31st of the tenth month, or December. As the white horse is symbolical of the opening of the year on the 1st January, so is Centaurus, or Dionysius, the emblem of the death of the year—or rather the alpha and omega, a point between the 31 December and the 1st of January. Then, in Egyptian theology Osiris is entombed, and the infant Horus arises, four years older than the common Dionysian era.

England—a proof of the disinterested spirit by which His Royal Highness has been actuated through the whole of this concern, so important to the cause and interests of Masonry throughout the world. And further to beseech His Royal Highness to be graciously pleased to sit for his picture in quality of their Grand Master, that the same may be placed in the Hall of the United Fraternity."

Upon motion made and seconded, it was also resolved unanimously—

"That the cordial thanks of this Grand Lodge be given to the Right Worshipful Brother Thomas Harper, Deputy Grand Master, for his indefatigable, zealous and honourable conduct during a period of more than twenty-eight years that he has been an Officer in this Grand Lodge; but more especially for his constant and unwearied attention for the last thirteen years, in the discharge of the arduous and important duties of Deputy Grand Master."

"That the especial thanks of this Grand Lodge be given to our Right Worshipful Brother, Past Deputy Grand Master Perry, for the very distinguished services which he has at various times and for a series of years rendered to the Craft.

"That the members of this Grand Lodge are led to the performance of this duty, peculiarly gratifying to them, from the high sense they entertain of the purity of the principles from which he has acted, from their unequalled admiration of the talents and eloquence which he has constantly displayed in their behalf, and from the pleasing anticipation of those happy and glorious consequences which his exertions have so eminently contributed to produce."

The Grand Lodge was then closed with holy prayer till St. John's Day next, to meet at Freemasons' Hall, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

THE ABBOT'S WAY.—Whether the so-called "Abbot's Way," in the turbaries of Somersetshire, belongs to Ancient British times, as some suppose, or was constructed, as its name implies, by some abbot of the neighbouring monastery of Glastonbury, I am in no position to determine. It is now buried about two yards beneath the Turf Moor, and is composed of birchen poles, each a yard long, split, and pegged close together. Pity but some antiquarian society would undertake to once more lay it open to daylight, and use every exertion to ascertain whether it belongs to Celtic or to mediæval times.—The History of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, by Bro. George Markham Tweddell, F.R.S.N.A., Copen.

DYE.—Instantaneous.—In Cases, 8s. 6d.

Extract from the Weekly Times, May:—
"Nicoll's Syrian Liquid Hair Dye may justly be termed the Wonder of the Age, being free from all unpleasant smell; and, acting instantaneously on the hair, must please and astonish those who have occasion to use it."

Extract from the Polytechnic Magazine:—
"It is with great pleasure we call the attention of our readers to the Hair Dye invented by Mr. G. Nicoll. Its great superiority over other dyes confers a boon on that portion of the community who require its use, which we ourselves acknowledge, and our improved looks will testify."

NICOLL'S TRICHONAPHRON removes the Scurf from the skin, prevents it turning grey, and imparts to the Hair a beautifully glossy appearance.—2s. 6d. per bottle.

THE LESSONS OF PROSPERITY.

A Famous general of old having been congratulated upon the splendid appearance of his troops at a review, as they marched past with drums beating and colours flying, coolly rejoined, "Yes, they look well; but I have seen them look better at the mouth of a breach, when their only music was the whiz of cannon-balls." In other words, the warrior chief looked beyond the mere martial display, and thought more of the results to be achieved by the discipline and valour of his soldiers.

The great army of Freemasonry is just now marching through the habitable globe, amid the paeans of applauding multitudes, which drown the feeble voices of its foes. Men from all sides are hastening to join its glorious array, and to enrol themselves under its banners of Freedom and Progress. Nobles and kings, judges and statesmen, merchants and citizens, alike press forward in the race, and, one after another, take their places in the phalax of good men and true. The officers look on with complacency—elated by such unmistakable signs of prosperity—and all who offer their services are welcomed. But the sagacious leader who has tested the worth of his men by actual deeds, and who desires to maintain the prestige of his army, views with dismay the rapid accession to his ranks of recruits unfitted by previous habits or by physical imperfections for the rough duties and toils of a campaign. He appreciates more the men who have accomplished their tasks amidst difficulties and dangers, than those who uplift the flag and draw the sword when earth and heaven rejoice in the sunshine of peace. In like manner we contemplate with distrust and alarm the indiscriminate manner in which thousands have lately been added to the members of the Craft, without that due examination into their moral characters which is as essentially requisite to a high-toned organization as the most rigid scrutiny into physical fitness can possibly be to a corps of picked soldiers. The badge of a Freemason is not to be lightly conferred upon all who seek it—the work is not to be entrusted to unworthy hands. It is not by numbers that we shall augment, or even preserve, the influence which justly attaches to pure motives and noble aims; it is not beneath the smile of prosperity, nor the thunder of men's applause, that we shall best achieve the objects of the Fraternity. Let us remember that the Craft should be composed of a select and disciplined body of far-seeing men, upright in their conduct and patterns of morality to their day and generation.

The Order already links the world in a golden chain of union—its mysteries are celebrated in every land; its children meet on every shore. What we now require most of all, is, to concentrate our strength, and to accomplish the lofty mission of our brotherhood. The day may come when the prosperous rays which now gild the pomp and pageantry of Freemasonry shall be forgotten in the threatening clouds of adversity; the day may come when the vain and fickle multitude will judge us by our professors, and not by our principles. Let us, therefore, be wise in time—let us look beyond the immediate jubilation of success, and choose only those as our brethren and companions upon whose integrity and steadiness we can rely for support, and who will neither join the camp of the enemy nor shrink from their colours in the day of battle.

Sustained by the allegiance of true men, symbolised by deeds of benevolence and affection, and robed in the imperishable vestments of truth, Freemasonry shall thus acquire greater renown, and wider empire over the hearts of men—standing forth, to all ages as a teacher of faith in the great Architect of the Universe, of hope in immortal salvation, and of charity towards all mankind.

Reviews.

"The Voice of Masonry," Chicago, Illinois.
We are favoured by our friend and brother, W. J. Hughan, who is the corresponding editor for England, with a copy of the above admirably-conducted monthly magazine, but as we have arranged to be supplied with copies of every Masonic journal or periodical published throughout the globe, we will defer presenting our readers with suitable extracts from "The Voice of Masonry" until they can form part of our contemplated series of reports of Masonic doings in "every country and every clime."

"Freemason's Calendar for the Province of Durham, 1869." Published by Bro. R. Cooke, 8, Silverstreet, Durham; and by Bro. G. Kenning, 3 and 4, Little Britain, London, E.C.

This neat little work is edited by our esteemed brother, W. Brignall, jun., 30, whose zealous labors in the cause of Freemasonry are well known; and we gladly greet him now as a fellow-worker in the fields of literature. Every information respecting the meetings of lodges, chapters and encampments in the province will be found in this Calendar, which is evidently most carefully compiled; and lists of the officers of the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of England, with the dates of their meetings for the year are also furnished. To brethren travelling northwards this Calendar will prove a most useful and interesting companion, and among the members of the Craft in the province of Durham it will doubtless take rank as a safe and inexpensive Masonic guide.

MASONIC PREFERMENTS.

Her Majesty has been pleased to confer the honour of knighthood on Bro. Michael Costa, 33°, Past Grand Organist of the Grand Lodge of England, who is deservedly esteemed and respected in the musical world.

Bro. Capt. Frederick W. Woodall, of the Royal Sussex Lodge of Hospitality, No. 187, Bristol, and a member of the Concord Red Cross Conclave, No. 8, Jersey, has been promoted to a majority in the Royal Elthorne Light Infantry Militia.

THE RED CROSS OF BOMB AND CONSTANTINE.

The Right Hon. the Lord Kenlis, G. Sovereign, has appointed the Illust. Bro. Colonel W. J. B. McLeod Moore, 33° (Grand Prior K.T.), as Chief Inspector General for the Dominion of Canada, with authority to appoint Inspectors General of Division throughout the Dominion. The Illust. Bro. Robert Marshall, 32° (G. Supt. of R.A. Masons), has also been appointed Inspector General for New Brunswick; and the Illust. Bro. Captain J. J. Lundy, 32°, Inspector General for Midlothian, Scotland.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Justice, No. 147.—At the White Swan Tavern, High-street, Deptford, on Wednesday, April 14th, the last meeting of this old lodge was held. Bro. R. G. Batt, W.M., presided, and there were present, Bros. J. Percival, S.W.; J. Whiffen, J.W.; J. Lightfoot, P.M.; Treas.; H. Bartlett, I.G.; C. G. Dilley, D.C.; J. L. Winn, P.M.; Tyler; J. Patti, G. Hall, J. Cavell, and G. Chapman, P.M.'s; G. Gilbert, J. J. Pitt, J. Ponder, B. Coltar, G. Dukes, G. T. Brown, G. Waterman, W. Andrews, P.M.; S. R. Speight, F. Golding, W. Shaw, J. Roper, S. Jupp, J. Miles, W. Scott, W. Ward, and others. Visitors, Bros. G. Brown P.M. (Treas. 169), H. Whittle (S.W. 871), J. Barrett (J.W. 871), J. R. Tustin (869), and others. The only work done was passing Bro. H. Bunning to the second degree, the ceremony being very well rendered. The usual good banquet followed.

Lodge of Tranquility, No. 185.—This influential lodge met on Monday last, under the presidency of the highly-esteemed W.M., Bro. Holbrook, when a joining member was elected, and a vote of £30 from the Charity Fund to an unfortunate member was confirmed; after which the Brethren adjourned to one of Bro. Hart's (Radley's) usual excellent banquets, and the evening was enlivened by some choice songs by the S.W., Dr. Biegel, and other brothers.

Nine Muses' Lodge, No. 235.—The regular meeting of this old lodge was held on Tuesday, April 13th, at the Clarendon Hotel, Old Bond-street, Bro. J. M. Clabon, W.M., presiding. There was one initiation. A capital banquet followed. Among the visitors were Bros. J. Hervey, G.S.; H. Muggeridge, P.M.; and Bro. the Rev. Henry Bartlett, Grand Orator of Canada, who delivered a splendid speech, which was attentively listened to.

Panmure Lodge, No. 720.—This rising suburban lodge met at the Balham Hotel, Balham, on Monday, the 19th instant, Br. J. H. Gates in the Chair. The Lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Mr. Charles Richard Huntley and Mr. William Withall were initiated into the mysteries and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. The Lodge was opened in the second degree and Bro. Ford was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. The Lodge was then closed in the second degree. The ballot was then taken for W.M., Treasurer, and Tyler for the ensuing session, when Bros. John Baptist Wolpert, John Thomas, P.M., and Bradley, were unanimously elected. A Past Master's jewel was, by the unanimous vote of every brother present, voted for the retiring W.M. The manner in which the proposition was received clearly showed the estimation in which Br. Gates is held in the Lodge. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren retired to a banquet provided in Br. Lilley's usual style. The W.M. gave the usual toasts, which were severally responded to—that of the "Visitors" by Br. Robert Daly, W.M., 1044. The meeting was enlivened by several songs from Bros. Young, Wolpert, &c.

Royal Albert Lodge, No. 907.—The brethren of this lodge met on Monday at Freemasons' Hall, Bro. Charles Chard taking the chair of King Solomon for the last time as W.M., previous to his retirement from office. Bro. Chard was supported by his officers, namely Bros. Henry J. Lewis, S.W. and W.M. elect; J. Vaughan, J.W.; T. Morton, S.D.; A. E. T. Worley, J.D. and Sec.; C. Vidler, I.G.; also by P.M.'s J. Smith, Treas.; T. Lewis, G. Purst; W. H. Farnfield, J. A. Farnfield, and Watson. The lodge having been duly opened, and Bro. W. J. Mitchell having shown that he had made sufficient progress in the F.C.'s degree, was raised to the sublime degree of a M.M. After resuming to the first degree, Bros. Bryan, T. H. Miller, G. E. Webber, and W. Lutwyche passed their examination as E.A.'s, and were afterwards duly passed to the second degree. Bro. J. Smith then presented the W.M. elect to the W.M., as having been unanimously chosen by the brethren to fill the high position of W.M. of the lodge for the next twelve months. Bro. Lewis having replied to the usual questions, and the brethren below the chair retired, a Board of Installed Masters was formed and Bro. Lewis was regularly installed by Bro. Chard as W.M. of the Royal Albert Lodge, to the satisfaction of all the brethren. The other formalities having been gone through, Bro. Lewis appointed his officers as follows: Bros. J. M. Vaughan, S.W.; T. Morton, J.W.; J. Smith, Treas.; A. E. T. Worley, S.D. and Sec.; C. Vidler, J.D.; J. Dennis, I.G.; and Daly, Tyler; delivering appropriate remarks to each as they received their collars at his hands. The address to the Master was then most satisfactorily delivered by Bro. Chard, I.P.M.; that to the Wardens by Bro. W. H. Farnfield, P.M.; and to the brethren by Bro. P. M. J. A. Farnfield. The labours of the evening being ended the brethren adjourned to the banqueting table, where a larger array of masonic celebrities met than has occurred since the constitution of the lodge. Included among the visitors were, Bros. W. Farnfield, P.Ast.G.Sec.; W. Ough, Aast.G.Pur.; P.M.'s Willey, 9; Marsh, 28; Pryor, 177; Walters, 73; Dones, 108; and Bros. Rawlins and Williams, 34; Turner, 186; Prince, 107; Keep, 118; Motion, 453; King, 948; Duffett, 1139; Dixon (Robert Burns). The brethren were also glad to welcome among them Bro. Savage, hon. member of the lodge, a P.G. Officer. The banquet was all that could be desired, Bro. Gosden having exerted himself to the utmost to secure the comfort of the guests. After the health of the Grand Master had been drunk with all masonic honours, the health of the Deputy Grand Master with the rest of the Grand Officers past and present was given by the W.M. in a few suitable remarks, coupling with it the name of Bro. Savage. This Bro. in replying, paid a tribute of respect to the great services rendered to Freemasonry by the Deputy Grand Master. The W.M. announced as the next toast the health of their I.P.M., Bro. Charles Chard (applause). Bro. Chas. Chard had, during his term of office, given every satisfaction, and had won the respect and esteem of all the brethren. The lodge had therefore at their last meeting unanimously voted him a P.M.'s jewel and collar as a tribute of their regard, and he had now the privilege and pleasure of placing it on his breast, wishing that he might long be spared to wear them in the Royal Albert. (Cheers.) He had not yet, however, done with Bro. Chard, for the brethren were so much indebted to him for so many little kindnesses they had received at his hands, that they made a subscription and purchased a diamond ring, which he had now the honour of presenting to Bro. Chard on behalf of the subscribers, nearly all the brethren. Long might he live to wear it, and remember with it the high regard in which he was held by the brethren of No. 907. (Loud cheers.) The ring, of the value of forty guineas, bears the following inscription:—"Presented to Bro. Charles Chard, by the Brethren of the Royal Albert Lodge, No. 907, as a token of regard on his retirement from the Chair, April 19th, 1869." Bro. Chard, in rising to reply, was received with prolonged applause. Most heartily he thanked his brethren for the princely presents they had made him, but if his year had been a successful one, it was as much due to his officers as himself. The health of the W.M. was proposed by Bro. J. Smith, who referred to the fact of Bro. Lewis having been initiated in the lodge and risen to the present high rank. The W.M. in returning thanks expressed his intention of endeavouring to perform his duties to the best of his ability, and hoped they would think as well of him that day twelvemonths as they did to-night. The toast, the "Masonic Charities," was responded to by Bro. W. Farnfield, Secretary of the Masonic Benevolent Institution, who urged the brethren to give increased support to that Institution. The other Masonic toasts were all drunk with the customary hearty responses, and the Tyler's toast brought a well-spent and happy evening to a termination.

Rose of Denmark Lodge, No. 975.—The last meeting of this lodge for the season was held at the White Hart Tavern, Barnes, Surrey, on Friday, the 10th inst. All the officers were in their places, namely, Bros. F. H. Newens, W.M.; G. T. Noyce, S.W.; C. A. Smith, J.W.; H. Potter, Treas.; R. W. Little, P.M., Sec.; G. H. Oliver, P.M., D.C.; C. Page, I.P.M.; W. H. Barnard, S.D.; A. E. Samels, J.D.; W. Hamlyn, I.G., and a large muster of brethren. Bro. Little, P.M., raised Bros. Bradford, Butcher, Curtis, and Kirby, to the third degree during the evening, and a proposition to increase the annual subscription having been negatived, the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to the banquet. During the evening, Bro. Page, I.P.M., was presented with a superb P.M.'s jewel, manufactured by Bro. Kenning, of 3 and 4, Little Britain.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 523.—A monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Leicester, on Thursday se'nnight, under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. A. M. Duff (P.M. 166). The D.P.G.M., and Bro. Major Brewin, W. B. Smith, and C. Johnson, P.M.'s; Toller, S.W.; and six other members of the lodge were present, together with five visitors—one a German brother, and the others members of St. John's Lodge, 279. After the usual preliminary business, a lodge of F.C.'s was opened, and Bros. Elgood and Bryan passed an examination in that degree, and were afterwards duly raised to the sublime degree of M.M. by the W.M., assisted by Bro. Brewin. A gentleman was proposed as a candidate, the lodge closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

WHITEHAVEN.—Lewis Lodge, No. 872.—This Lodge assembled at the Freemasons' Hall, College Street, Whitehaven, on Monday, the 19th instant, at 7 o'clock. Present: Bros. Spittal, W.M., in the chair; C. Morton, P.P.S.G.W.; J. Slade, P.P.G.S.; Hughes, P.P.G.T.; Cooper, P.P.G.O.; W. Whittle, S.W.; R. Foster, J.W.; Ellis, S.D.; Brindle, J.D.; W. Gill, I.G.; Fitzgerald, T. The minutes of the former meeting having been read by the honorary secretary, Bro. Hughes, P.P.G.T., and confirmed, Mr. George Harker was initiated into the mysteries and privileges of Ancient Freemasonry. The lodge having been opened to the third degree, Bro. Tom Dalzel was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, Bro. C. Morton, P.P.S.G.W., going through the ceremony. The labours of the evening drawing to a close, and there being nothing of importance to bring forward, except reminding the brethren of the intended visit of the Provincial Grand Master, Lord Kenlis, on Wednesday, the 20th, at high twelve, and dinner in the refreshment-room at three p.m., requesting as many members as could possibly attend to do so. Nothing further being brought forward for the good and welfare of Freemasonry, or Lewis Lodge, 872, in particular, the lodge was closed in due form with solemn prayer; after which, the brethren proceeded to the refreshment room, and spent the remainder of the evening in a truly Masonic style. The toasts and speeches were very agreeably interspersed with numerous songs and glees, admirably given by Bros. Brunton, Brindle, Hope, Heatley, and Hughes, the accompaniments being ably performed by Bro. Cooper, P.P.G.O. The brethren retired, seriatim, after a very agreeable evening.

LIVERPOOL.—Temple Lodge, No. 1094.—This lodge held its Installation Meeting at the Masonic Temple on the 14th inst., when the following brethren were present:—Josh. Smith, W.M.; Sheldon, S.W., W.M. elect; Geo. Dyke, J.W.; Jos. Wood, Treas.; Thos. Marsh, P.M., Sec.; Richard Williams, S.D.; Winstanley, J.D.; Danson, I.G.; R. H. D. Johnson, P.M.; J. Mercer Johnson, P.M.; Wm. Crane, P.M.; Hamer, P.G.T.; Newman Gilbert, Steward; Richard Tubb, Organist. Visitors, H. S. Alpess, P.G.S.; Thos. Armstrong, P.G.D.; the W.M.'s of Lodges 825 and 823, Turner (823), James McKune (823), Healing (849), Hughes (216), Haswell (216), Jones (P.M. 249), and Wood (W.M. 1182), &c. The lodge having been opened, the S.W., Bro. Sheldon, was presented to the Installing Master, Bro. Smith, by Bros. R. H. D. Johnson and Hamer; after which a board of Installed Masters was opened, and Bro. F. M. Sheldon was duly installed W.M. of Lodge 1094, and it is quite unnecessary to say how the Installing Master did his work; every praise is due to him for the same. After the board had been closed, the investing of officers for the year took place. Bros. J. K. Smith, I.P.M.; George Dyke, S.W.; Richard Williams, J.W.; Josh. Wood, Treas.; D. Winstanley, S.D.; Richard Danson, J.D.; Gilbert, I.G.; Marsh, Sec.; Newman, Speer, Morley, Stewards; Tubb, Organist; James Mercer Johnson, M.C. Mr. Bayley, being in attendance, was duly initiated into F.M. by the newly-installed W.M., which did him great credit. The lodge was called from labour to refreshment. After the usual loyal and Masonic toasts had been given, Bro. Sheldon, W.M., on behalf of the members of lodge presented to Bro. P. M. Smith, a very beautiful P.M.'s jewel as a mark of respect from the members of the lodge. Bro. Smith thanked the W.M. for the manner in which his name had been received, and also for the very handsome present he had that evening received. Other toasts followed, after which the lodge was closed.

WALMER.—Lord Warden Lodge, No. 1096.—The installation of Bro. J. Smith as W.M. of the above-named lodge took place in the Lord Warden rooms, Lower Walmer, on Friday evening, the 16th inst. The imposing ceremony was performed by Bro. E. C. Hayward, P.P.G.S.D. of Kent, P.M. of 127 and 784. The following brethren were appointed officers of the lodge:—E. Allen, S.W.; W. Fuller, J.W.; S. Hinds, Treasurer; T. E. Cavell, Sec.; C. Chamberlain, S.D.; B. R. Easter, J.D.; R. T. Woodcock, I.G.; F. Phillips, D.C.; H. Pearson, S.; T. Norris, T. In consequence of the Lord Warden hotel being closed there was no banquet this year, but the brethren retired to the Sun inn, where a very pleasant evening was spent. Among the visiting brethren were T. E. Mason (W.M. 784), W. Harding (P.M. 784), A. Bird (P.M. 784), and several others. After the customary loyal and Masonic toasts had been duly honoured, the W.M. said he had now to propose the health of the Installing Master of the evening, which he did with great pleasure. He was grateful to Bro. Hayward, who had kindly come over to perform that duty every year since the Lord Warden lodge was consecrated. More particularly grateful did he feel at the fact that that esteemed brother initiated him (the W.M.) an E.A., passed him F.C., raised him to the sublime degree of M.M., and had now installed him W.M.—Bro. Hayward responded to the toast in a few well-timed remarks. Several other complimentary toasts were given and responded to, interspersed with some excellent singing.

SCARBOROUGH.—Denison Lodge, No. 1248.—This new and select lodge met at their lodge-room, Grand Hotel, Scarborough, on Thursday, April the 8th, at seven p.m. There were present—Bros. J. W. Woodall, P.M., P.P.G.S.W., as W.M.; W. F. Ronke, P.M., P.P.G.J.W.; H. A. Williamson, P.M. 200; W. Peacock, W.M. 200; S. H. Armitage, S.W.; J. Groves, J.W.; J. Dormer, Sec.; J. E. Green, S.D.; H. W. Garnett, J.D.; H. C. Martin, P.M., I.G.;

J. Verity, Tyler; Bros. Walshaw, Brearey, Jarvis, Fricour, Knight, Kitchen, Delamere, and Thorp. of 1248; and Bros. Fletcher (J.W.), Parker (J.D.), Hardgrave, and Chapman, of 200. The lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes read and confirmed. Bros. Fisher, P.M., and J. M. Crosby were balloted for and elected joining members. Mr. V. Stewart was balloted for and elected, and initiated into Freemasonry by the presiding W.M., Bro. Woodall, in a very able and impressive manner. Bro. Thorp passed an examination in the first degree and retired, and was readmitted and passed to the second degree. Bros. Jarvis, Fricour, and Knight passed an examination in the second degree and retired, and were separately admitted and raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, the ceremony being performed by Bros. Williamson and Rooke, P.M.'s in a very impressive manner. The Lodge was now worked down to the first degree. Two gentlemen were proposed for initiation at the next meeting. Bros. J. O. Surtees, W.M., who had been absent from Scarborough, joined the Lodge during the evening, and requested the presiding W.M. to remain in the Chair, as he, the W.M., had travelled a very long distance during the day and felt very tired. After a few preliminary arrangements had been made the Lodge was closed with solemn prayer.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

Jerusalem Chapter, 185.—INSTALLATION MEETING. —At Freemasons' Tavern, on Tuesday, April 13th, this chapter met. Companion A. D. Loewenstark, M.E.Z., presided, and exalted two brethren. He then installed Companion J. Harris M.E.Z. Comp. J. R. Sheen, P.Z., S.E., installed Companions J. Stevens, H., and Davidge, J. The officers appointed were Comps. E. H. Patten, P.Z., Treas. Garnett, 1st A.S.; J. E. Green, 2nd A.S.; J. Verity, Janitor; Pattison, Walshaw, Parker, R. D. Woodall, Inskip, Groves, Merrin, and W. Peacock. Comp. J. Fisher, P.Z., was elected a joining member, and Bro. H. Grover exalted to the degree of a Royal Arch Mason. This was the first meeting since the installation of principals, and the manner in which they performed the duties of their several offices exceeded the expectations of all present.—The Provincial Grand Chapter will meet in this Chapter-room next month.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

DEVONPORT.—The regular Conclave of the Royal Sussex Encampment, assembled at their head-quarters, Morice Town, on Thursday, 15th April, for the purpose of installing their Eminent Commander. The choice of the Encampment fell on Sir Knight William J. J. Spry (P.P.G. Supt. Works, Devon), who was thereupon installed in the chair by Em. Sir Knight Samuel Chapple, P.E.C., assisted by Em. Sir Knight Vincent Bird, E.C. (Loyal Veteran Encampment). The E.C. then appointed the following officers to assist him in governing the Encampment:—Eminent Sir Knight Lord Eliot, (Past Grand Prior of England, and Provincial Grand Commander of Cornwall), P.E.C.; Sir Kts. James Hawton, 1st Capt. of Columns; Col. John Elliott, 2nd Capt. of Columns; Philip B. Clemens, Prelate; Vincent Bird, Treasurer; William Foxwell, Registrar; John Brown, Expert; William H. Roberts, Capt. of Lines; Arthur B. Niner, Standard Bearer; Edwin Knight, George Walker, Heralds; James Rashbrook, Equerry. Companion A. B. Niner of the Pleiades Chapter, Totnes, was installed a member of this ancient chivalric degree, which concluded the business of the Conclave, and after partaking of refreshment, &c., the Sir Knights separated.

KNIGHTS OF MALTA.

Royal Sussex Priory of Knights of Malta.—The Eminent Prior, Sir Knight W. J. J. Spry intimated that it was his will and pleasure that the following Sir Knights assist him during the year: Sir Knights Jas. W. Hawton, Capt.-General; Col. John Elliott, 1st Lieut.-General; Philip B. Clemens, 2nd Lieut.-General; Richard Lose, 3rd Lieut.-General; Vincent Bird, Treasurer; William Foxwell, Chancellor; John Brown, Conductor; Josiah Austin, Guard of B.; Thomas Harvey, Guard of L.; Thomas Heath, Guard of D.; George G. Nicholls, Guard of R.; James Rashbrook, Guard.

OPENING OF THE "GILBERT GREENALL" LODGE (No. 1250), WARRINGTON.

April the 12th will long be remembered as a "red-letter day" by the Free and Accepted Masons of Warrington. Some two years ago there was a very general opinion prevalent among the Brethren of the "Lodge of Lights," that the time had arrived when a new lodge might with propriety be formed in Warrington. At the same time there was no wish on the part of its promoters to injure, deteriorate, or in any way detract from the dignity and character of the Mother Lodge. And as time advanced this feeling gradually extended itself, and Freemasonry had made such progress, and become so popular in the district, that it was at length determined to put this oft-expressed wish of the Brethren into a practical form. A petition was drawn up and presented to the M.W. the G.M. of England, Earl Zetland, praying for a Warrant of Constitution to open a New Lodge, under the style and title of the "Gilbert Greenall" Lodge, to make Masons, and to do all such other things as appertain to Ancient Freemasonry. And when it shall be asked by the children of future generations, why it was so called, these records shall be referred to, to give them the required information. Bro. Greenall is and has long been a distinguished Mason. The promoters of the New Lodge, in their first letter to him, say:—

"Your courtesy as a Brother, and your distinguished position as a Mason, eminently entitle you to our most fraternal esteem, and, therefore, it is our great wish, having the prosperity of the Craft at heart, to offer to you, and to ask your acceptance of the highest compliment it is in our power as Masons to bestow, in affectionate admiration of your many virtues as a just and upright man and a Mason."

In thus honouring Bro. Greenall these gentlemen, the promoters of the "Gilbert Greenall" Lodge, have done infinite honour to themselves. They have selected a name borne by a Brother whose life, is said, never to have been tarnished by an unworthy act. A name, the mere sound of which is as music to thousands of Masons, not only in the northern provinces of England, but throughout the kingdom. As one Brother said at the banquet, his name is a "household word" in the province to which he belongs. Bro. Greenall is no "Atheist" or irreligious man, but a believer and a lover of the G.A.O.T.U., and thus believing and loving he has ever been ready to practise the sacred duties of morality, and to unite with his brethren of every persuasion in the firm and pleasing bond of Masonic brotherhood. His large-hearted benevolence, his courteous manner, and his willingness at all times to serve a "friend or brother," have endeared him to all whose privilege it is to know him. Masonry with him takes nothing from, but rather adds dignity to honour. Bro. Greenall has showed himself disposed to compassionate the weaknesses of others, and to demonstrate by the purity of his own life, and the superior excellence of his own faith, the existence of the Great "I AM." Ever ready, cheerfully to extend the right hand of fraternal affection to a brother in distress, zealously to promote the prosperity of the Craft in general, he is of singular merit in the eyes of his brethren, and has thus deserved well the compliment they have paid him by calling a lodge after his name.

At three o'clock the following brethren assembled in the Masonic rooms to witness the viz., Bros. Gilbert Greenall, P.M., P. Prov. J. G. W., W.L., P.S.G.W. Eng.; A. C. Mott, P.M., P.Z., &c., &c., Prov. S.G.D.; Alpess, Prov. G.S., W.L.; H. B. White, P.M., P.Z., &c.; John Bowes, P.M., P.Z., P. Prov. G.R., Cumb. & West; the Rev. A. C. Steadman; Stringer, P.M.; Maxfield, P.M.; Peter Robinson, P.M.; D. W. Finney, W.M. and J. No 148; Wilson, Bancroft, W. Woods, W. Mossop, W. Richardson, W. S. Hawkins, T. M. Pattison, W. Richardson, W. S. Hawkins, T. M. Pattison, Gibbons, Hill, J. Hannan, &c., &c.

Bro. Capt. Mott, by appointment of the R.W. the Prov. G.M., Sir T. G. Hesketh, took the chair, and appointed Bro. Maxfield P.M., and Bro. Finney (W.M. No. 148), as his Wardens pro tem. The brethren of the new lodge being present, were arranged in order, and the lodge was opened in the third degree, and a piece of solemn music was played by Bro. Pattison (Org. No. 148).

The P.O. next addressed the brethren on Masonry, and called upon the Acting Secretary to state the wishes of the brethren, and the proceedings they had taken with respect to the lodge.

Bro. Alpess said: A number of the brethren instructed in the mysteries of the Craft, who are now assembled here, have requested me to inform you that the M.W. G.M. has been pleased to grant them a Warrant or Charter of Constitution, authorizing them to form and open a Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Warrington, in the County of Lancaster, and are desirous that their lodge should be consecrated and their officers installed, according to the ancient usages and established customs of the Order, for which purpose they are now met, and await your pleasure.

The P.O. again called upon Bro. Alpess, to read the petition and warrant, which he did; and the brethren having signified their approval of the officers named in the warrant in Masonic form,

The Rev. Chap., Bro. Steadman, delivered an oration on the nature of Masonry with great judgment, feeling, and ability.

The musical brethren, Bros. Pattison, Bancroft, Savage, Bowes, Woods, and Finney, then sang the Anthem—"Behold how good and joyful," with the greatest precision and effect.

The Chaplain next read the first part of the Consecration Prayer in a very solemn and impressive manner.

Other preliminaries being over, three Prov. Grand Officers, acting as P.M.'s (viz., Bros. Alpess, Bowes, and H. B. White), carried the cornucopia, wine, and oil, in ancient form, solemn music being performed during the ceremony. The final Anthem was then given by the musical brethren, and Bro. Capt. Mott constituted the lodge in proper form.

The "Hallelujah" chorus, having brought this part of the ceremony to a close, the P.O. proceeded with the INSTALLATION.

Bro. Greenall, the first W.M. elect, was presented by Bros. Bowes and White, and received the benefit of installation at the hands of the D.P.G.M., in the presence of a board of installed Masters. This being done, the other brethren were admitted by seniority of rank, and Bro. Greenall, the W.M., received the salutations, as in all past time Masons in his position have done.

At the proper position of the lodge, the W.M. made the following appointments, and invested the holder of each office with the distinguishing badge, viz.:—W. Mossop, S.W.; W. Woods, J.W.; W. Richardson, J.D. and Treas., (elected), D. W. Finney, Hon. Sec.; W. S. Hawkins, S.D.; T. Domville, I.G.; I. Hannah, Tyler (elected).

After this, and before the lodge was finally closed, the W.M. made the usual appeal to the brethren for the good of Masonry in general, and No. 1250 in particular.

Several propositions were received, and the thanks of the brethren were accorded to Bros. Mott, Alpess, Steadman, Pattison, and the musical brethren, for their kind assistance and support. Nothing further being proposed the lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to discuss the INAUGURAL BANQUET.

This was served up at the Lion Hotel, and reflected the highest credit on the catering abilities of Miss Travis, the new landlady. Most of the brethren who had witnessed the ceremony of consecration and installation sat down to the banquet, under the presidency of Br. Greenall, who was supported immediately on his right and left by Bros. Alpess, Steadman, Mott, White, Bowes, Maxfield, Stringer, P. Robinson, and Finney.

We regret that we are unable to give more than a mere bare outline of the list of toasts:—

"The Queen—the Daughter and Niece of Masons," proposed by the W.M. "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family, by the W.M. "The Army, Navy, Militia, Volunteers, and Royal Naval Reserve," by the W.M.; responded to by Bro. Capt. Mott. "The M.W.G.M., the R.W.D.G.M., and the Grand Lodge of England," by the W.M. "The R.W. Prov. G.M., the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., and Prov. Grand Lodge of West Lancashire," by the W.M.; responded to by Bros. Alpess and H. B. White. "The Prov. G.M.'s of East Lancashire, Cheshire, and the neighbouring Provinces," by the W.M.; responded to by Bro. Bowes. "Bro. Gilbert Greenall, first W.M. of No. 1,250," by Bro. Alpess, in a most elaborate speech; and responded to by Bro. Greenall, who expressed his gratitude to the brethren for the honour they had done him. "The Wardens and the Officers of the Gilbert Greenall Lodge," by Bro. Bowes; responded to by Bros. Mossop and Woods. "The Lodge of Lights," by the W.M.; responded to by Bros. D. W. Finney and Stringer. "The Visiting Brethren," by the W.M.; responded to by Bro. Maxfield. "The Masonic Charities," by Bro. White; responded to by Bro. Mott. "The Ladies," by the W.M.; responded to by Bro. D. W. Finney. "To all poor and distressed Freemasons throughout the Globe, and speedy relief to them."

The following brethren expressed their inability to take part in the ceremony:—Bros. J. Hamer P.M., P.Z., &c.; R. Stevenson; J. F. Greenall; S. A. Olives, W.M., No. 178; J. Laithwaite; W. F. Wood; J. Pilling, jun.; W. Cooper; W. Bryce; T. Jones; and E. Morris.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

[Announcements of Births, Marriages, and Deaths relating to the Craft, or their families, will be inserted, free of charge, if properly authenticated.]

DEATH.

HAMILTON.—Drowned through falling over-board, while the vessel was passing up the Hudson to New York, Brother William Hamilton, boatswain, S.S. India, M.M. of Lodge "Clyde," No. 408.

Answers to Correspondents.

We cannot insert the list of lodges that sent Stewards to the Inauguration Festival, which has been forwarded to us, unless authenticated by the name and address of the sender.

E.H.—We shall have great pleasure in reproducing your tale at the earliest opportunity, and shall always be glad to hear from you.

QUINQUING.—We will insert your letter relative to the Masonic Charities, in general and Boys' School in particular, as soon as our space will permit.

A DISGUSTED STEWARD, A TAVERN VICTIM, &c.—We have received several letters complaining of the Festival arrangements after the Inauguration ceremony on the 14th inst., and we are certainly of opinion that they were not commensurate with the importance of the occasion. "A Tavern Victim" condemns the wines and calls the attendance "a perfect delusion." A "Steward" writes that he and his friends got no dinner, as their waiter quietly eloped after the soup had been served. Let us hope that a word in season will cause better supervision for the future.

THE ZETLAND COMMEMORATION FUND.

We don't believe that English Freemasons are an ungrateful body of men, and can therefore come to no other conclusion respecting the "Zetland Commemoration Fund" than the belief that the real objects of the committee entrusted with an affair of such importance, must either be thoroughly misunderstood or imperfectly comprehended. A nobleman has presided over the Grand Lodge of England for five and twenty years; he has been elected annually during that period by the free suffrages of the representatives of the Order in the supreme legislature of Freemasonry; he has fulfilled the duties of his high office (and they are greater and more onerous than many imagine) not only with firmness but with kindness—not only with assiduous attention but with untiring zeal; and he has now crowned the labours of a long and honourable Masonic career by inaugurating, as Most Worshipful Grand Master, a palatial hall for the assemblies of the English Craft. It is proposed to mark this era in the history of the Earl of Zetland by a suitable testimonial, and at the same time to evince to the world in general that Freemasons appreciate the services of the Grand Master of England. We are aware, from the tone of several letters received upon the subject, that great anxiety exists in the minds of many brethren that the Commemoration Fund should reach such proportions as would worthily effect its object, but we are also painfully aware of the fact that a vast number of Masons will never hear of the proposed testimonial unless more effective means are adopted to enlist their sympathies and support. It is not, we hope, too late to suggest that the machinery which has proved so eminently useful in collecting funds for our Masonic charities, should be at once set in motion to secure the triumphant success of the "Zetland Commemoration." It is proverbial that "what is anybody's business is nobody's business," and we are afraid that the committee have trusted too much to the intrinsic merits of the object, instead of appealing in the proper manner for help.

A long list of Grand Officers, named originally by one or two promoters of the scheme, cannot be called a fair representation of the 1,800 lodges and chapters under the English constitution. If the work is to be done, and the honour of our great Craft is at stake in having it done well and speedily, and if the committee are really in earnest, let them discard their preconceived ideas, and entrust the subscription lists to stewards delegated by every lodge and chapter in the Craft. Let us have a general subscription—10,000 brethren at five shillings each will testify more our gratitude to our Grand Master, than 1,000 at a guinea; and we are satisfied that Lord Zetland would feel more pleased by the universality of the compliment than by the mere amount. Let a small and inexpensive decoration, such as a five-pointed star with the word "Zetland" in the centre, be awarded from the funds of Grand Lodge to each steward who shall send in a subscription list of ten guineas, and we will answer for it that the paltry sum of £1,000 which at present, we believe, is the sum total of the Zetland Fund, would expand to ten times the amount, and become a fitting tribute of respect to the Most Worshipful Grand Master, and a credit to the influential body of English Freemasons.

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

The Mark Degree.—In reply to "Leo," as to whether there was any difference between the recorded marks of Mark Masons and Mark Master Masons, I beg to say that I am not aware of there being any, but, on the contrary, believe that the mark chosen by the Mark Mason was unalterable. The distinction of the two classes of Mark Masons is a production of the eighteenth century. In the former centuries no such difference occurred, as the Craftsmen simply chose their marks, and there it ended. Whilst on the subject of marks, permit me to advise all Mark Masons to procure the Builder for March 27th; there are a lot of valuable marks in it, from different parts of the world, by Mr. Godwin.—W. J. HUGHAN.

The Ancient and Accepted Rite.—Perhaps Bro. Yarker has been more fortunate than I have as to Stirling lodge and chapter. Although I have tried for a long time to obtain authoritative information respecting the minutes mentioning the Royal Arch of 1743, none of the brethren in that town appear to know aught of them, and tell me they are as ignorant as I am as to what and where they are! Bro. Yarker says truly, "It is desirable that the matter should be sifted." So says W. J. HUGHAN.

NOTES BY A NOVICE.

GUARDIAN ANGELS.

"ON MY RIGHT HAND MICHAEL," signifying—Who is like unto Thee, O God? Thou art on my right to protect me, to guide me in the way of righteousness; Thou hast graciously taught me never to deviate from the paths of rectitude which will surely lead me to eternal bliss. Thus it was that the Royal Psalmist ejaculated, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, mayest thou, my Right, forget me."

"ON MY LEFT HAND GABRIEL," which is the strength or power of God. The left side being the seat of the heart, which is the centre of man—and as the heart is the centre of man, so the Almighty, our Creator, is the centre to whom we must look up with awe and veneration; for it is He who instils into our minds that the tongue should utter nothing but what the heart truly dictates. Thus, as the Wise King of Israel declares, "Various thoughts are in the heart of man, but the counsel of the Deity is steadfast." (Prov. xix. 21.) Man is also designated by the Hebrew word signifying "Power," he being the lord of the creation on earth. This attribute, however, is not applied to his bodily strength, but to his fortitude of mind. It teaches the important lesson that when bowed down by distress or affliction we are not to murmur against the will of the Most High, nor must we, on the other hand, when basking in the smiles of fortune lift up our heads in pride and pomp; but in all things as humble beings bow down in gratitude to our gracious Father, by whose aid alone we are enabled to govern our passions in every stage of existence, and thus prove man's pre-eminence over the rest of creation. In the fourth chapter of the Ethics we find the following aphorism of one of the fathers which bears upon this point: "Who can properly be called the man of strength? He who subdues his mortal passions." This is evident to every thinker, because such a man imitates the source of all strength, and, like Him, exercises that power to the benefit of his fellow-creatures. Strength, or Gabriel, is symbolised by a stone, a rock, or a pillar. The bow of Joseph "abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the mighty God of Jacob; from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel." In strength was the knowledge of the Lord established as a pillar in the Temple, or the heart of man, to remain in mystic perfection for ever.

"BEFORE ME ARIEL," or, as we may beautifully define it, The Light of God! Before us is the light of Heaven, to illumine us in the paths of virtue and science. The faithful precept is as the lamb, and the law of truth is the divine light which shines from on high. Thus Light typically points to truth as the fountain of all human happiness—truth being an attribute of God, and the very foundation of every social virtue as finely expressed in Holy Writ "Truth is firmly fixed." The abbreviations of which in the original Hebrew are rendered as follow:—Perpetually, King, God. Judged numerically the Hebrew word which signifies "Truth" is equal to 441—the word "Kindness" to 72, and when conjoined 513, all multiples of 9—thus truth and kindness are sisters, or as the royal bard describes it, "Truth and Kindness are in friendly alliance with each other."

"AND BEHIND ME RAPHAEL." This will admit of the following interpretation:—God is my Physician, and alludes to the transitory stay of man in his earthly abode; it reminds us of the closing hour of existence when our mortal career shall have ceased, and we shall be called upon to appear before the great tribunal to answer for all our deeds; it impresses upon our minds a conviction of the mercy and justice of the benign Creator, and embues us with a fervent but humble hope that He will purify our souls from sin, and infuse into our wounded spirits the balsam of everlasting health and peace, so that we may ascend the hills of heaven in purity and love. It denotes that there is but one Physician, whose mercies are unbounded, and who will heal the infirmities of all who have recourse to His almighty aid. Yet, admirable as this may appear, and consolatory as it doubtless is to erring mortals, grander, sublimer, by far, is the reflection that

"ABOVE MY HEAD HOVERS THE PROTECTING GLORY OF ALMIGHTY GOD;" the divine glory being far superior to any intermediate or guardian angel, however great. Let the light of the Lord be with us and our rest shall be in safety.

It will thus be evident that, according to the most eminent commentators on the Jewish law, the doctrine of guardian angels was inseparably interwoven with their ideas of the attributes of God; and the final results of their numerical calculations prove that God, Light, and Truth, are synonyms.

They insist strongly upon the necessity of adhering strictly to truth as the standard of all moral good—as the "light" of glory which shines down upon men in the sacred writings, guiding our steps into those paths of pleasantness which lead to unutterable happiness hereafter. Members of the Craft will notice Masonic coincidences in the illustrations of the Rabbins, and it may with some propriety be said that the great truths revealed in the ceremonies of Freemasonry, are, to a certain extent, foreshadowed or typified in the commentaries of those learned men upon the subject of "Guardian Angels."

The 107th anniversary of the Glasgow Thistle Lodge, No. 87, was held on Tuesday evening, the 20th instant, within the Hall, Eroy-place. About twenty of the brethren were present; the R.W.M., Bro. Thomas Paton, in the chair. A blessing having been asked by Bro. A. R. Wilson, of the St. Mungo's, No. 27, a new supper to the Craft was supplied in the shape of tripe and potatoes, at the low charge of sixpence. The brethren appeared to enjoy themselves with their new fare. On the cloth being removed, the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given, and the evening was spent in harmony.

THE MASONIC FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL, DUBLIN.

The annual distribution of prizes to the most successful competitors and the deserving girls of this admirable institution took place on Friday evening, in the Exhibition Palace, under circumstances more auspicious than on any previous occasion. Very nearly 6,000 of the nobility, gentry, and most respectable classes of the country were present, to evince their interest in an excellent school for the daughters of deceased Freemasons, as well as their sympathy with, and respect for, the principles of the order. The cardinal points of Freemasonry—which neither fulminate or denounce—are those which have adorned Christianity, which have been disseminated by its ministers, made their influence felt and respected in the true sense of the word all over the world, and produced such glorious results for humanity. These principles are included in the words, "Peace, brotherly love, harmony, and Christian charity," which have ever distinguished the operations of the Order, and the object for which they met on Friday evening was in furtherance of them. In addition to the enormous amount of private charity given to their poorer brethren, to near relatives of deceased Freemasons, and to the charitable calls made upon them as individuals outside the order, the scene presented on Friday evening in the Exhibition Palace was testimony of the fruits of their principles, and every member of the Order may well be proud of it. The brethren have great reason to congratulate themselves on the result of the hostile edicts levelled against them by a high ecclesiastical authority, the most indignant protesters against which are amongst his own religious followers. To the Masonic body, as far as the late eminently successful ball and the demonstration of strength on Friday evening was concerned, the result has been most satisfactory. For years, nothing more successful in connection with the Order has occurred in this city, and the Governors of the Orphan School, as well as the brethren generally, have to congratulate themselves on the manner in which their institutions are growing into public favour.

The lighting, decorations, and furnishing were the same, with some trifling alterations, as at the Grand Masonic Ball. On that occasion we gave a detailed description of them, and it is unnecessary to repeat it here. Suffice it to say that the mottoes and Masonic devices in gas jets, the profusion of national and emblematic flags and banners draped and hung round the galleries and walls of the entire building, the imposing and brilliant arrangements of trophies of arms, lances, and bannerets, the luxurious furniture and hangings, and, above all, the gorgeous paraphernalia and jewellery of the Masonic brethren, intermingled with the fashionable costumes of the ladies, and relieved again by the sombre evening dresses of gentlemen not belonging to the Order, combined to produce an effect as gay and enlivening as any ever witnessed in this beautiful palace. The grand Concert Hall was handsomely fitted up for the occasion, the large gallery at the farther end being set apart for the accommodation of the dignitaries of the Order and the male and female orphan children. The doors were opened at a quarter past seven o'clock, and the hall was speedily filled with a large and highly fashionable assemblage. The promenade and galleries were also fairly filled, and it was found utterly impossible to accommodate anything like the number in attendance in the hall where the interesting proceedings of the evening were being held. About thirty-eight girls were seated to the right of the platform, and occupying seats to the left were five clean, healthy-looking, and well dressed boys—the first who have been admitted to the advantages of the Masonic Orphan Boys' School, which is about being erected. They formed a new and interesting feature in the proceedings, and represented another of the benevolent acts of the members of this Order in Ireland. Although the school has not yet been erected a large amount of funds has been subscribed for the purpose, and the governors have in the meantime wisely resolved that the money shall not be idle. They determined to select a number of the most deserving orphans, and place them in a respectable school, to be educated and enabled to fight the battle of life with some hope of success. Five were elected, and in a short time it is hoped that the number will be doubled. Before and after the meeting, those who promenaded the extensive nave were entertained by the splendid bands of the 14th Hussars and the 9th Foot, who played the following programme of music—the airs alternately:—

14TH HUSSARS.—Overture, "Zanetta" (Auber). Selection—"Un Ballo in Maschera" (Verdi). Valse—"Hebe"

(Crowe). Coronation March—"Le Prophete" (Meyerbeer), Grand Procession—"Stabat Mater" (Rossini). "Souvenir di Donizetti" (Fronehert). Valse—"Morgenblatter" (Strauss). Galop (Vocal)—"Nimrod" (Crowe).—A Gwyllymo Crwne, band-master.

9TH REGIMENT.—Fantasia—"Erin" (Basquit). Selection—"Il Trovatore" (Verdi). Waltz—"Voice of Night" (Francis Quin). March—"Freemasons' March" (Ascher). Quadrille—"Royal Irish" (Riviere). Aria—"Tutti in Maschera" (Pedrotti). Galop—"Postman's Knock" (Clarke). Waltz—"Kate Kearney" (Coote). Bro. A. Vlacco, band-master.

Everywhere the scene was brilliant, artistic, and imposing. At eight o'clock the Grand Officers, the Representatives from Foreign and Provincial Grand Lodges, the Masters, Wardens, and Secretaries of the several Lodges, and those Brethren to whom places on the platform had been assigned, assembled in the small Concert Room, and a procession having been formed, it moved through the Leinster Hall and Glass Transept to the large Concert Hall in the following order, the bands playing a Masonic march:—

Stewards.
Assistant Tyler, with Sword.
Lodges, according to seniority, the junior first.
Officers and Members of the Grand Master's Lodge.
The Committees of the Orphan School.
The Vice-Presidents and Honorary Officers of the School.
The Tyler to the Grand Lodge.
Representatives of Foreign Grand Lodges.
Provincial Grand Officers.
Two Stewards.
Grand Organist. Grand Inner Guard.
Grand Superintendent of Works. Grand Stewards.
The Grand Deacons, with their Wands.
The Grand Chaplains.
The Grand Secretary. The Grand Treasurer.
The Grand Wardens.
The Grand Sword Bearer, carrying the Sword.
The Deputy Grand Secretary, carrying the Book of Constitutions.
The Grand Master, his Grace the Duke of Leinster.
Past Deputy Grand Master. Deputy Grand Master.
Past Grand Officers, &c.
The Grand Director of Ceremonies, with his Wand.
Two Stewards.

On ascending the platform the brethren filed off, according to Lodges, and took their places as pointed out by the platform stewards.

The Grand Master, having taken the chair, was then saluted according to ancient usage, with "Eleven on the third coming down."

The pupils of the school entered the room in the following order, and occupied the seats provided for them on the platform:—

Two Stewards.
The Hon. Secretary. The Assistant Secretary.
The Pupils—Two-and-Two.
Two Stewards.

There were about forty respectably-attired girls, who presented an extremely neat and intelligent appearance. They were under the care of their efficient matron, Mrs. Noble, and the governess, Miss Cuthbert.

Amongst those present were the Duke of Leinster, Grand Master; the Hon. Judge Townsend, Past Deputy Grand Master; Lord Athlumney and Sir Edward Grogan, Bart., Grand Wardens; the Revs. J. J. MacSorley, Hon. W. C. Plunket, Henry Westby, R. H. Wall, D.D., and Simpson G. Morrison, Grand Chaplains; Dr. Cameron, Dr. Elrington, Q.C., and E. R. Digue La Touche, Grand Deacons; Charles D. Astley, Grand Superintendent of Works; Alderman Manning, J.P., Grand Director of Ceremonies; Theophilus St. George, Grand Steward; Geo. Hepburn, Grand Sword Bearer; Francis Quin, Grand Organist; Stuart Nassau Lane, Grand Inner Guard; Charles T. Walmisley, Deputy Grand Secretary; Dr. Smyly, Representative from the Grand Lodge of Prussia; J. Vokes Mackey, J.P., Representative from the Grand Lodge of Canada; Lucius H. Deering, Representative from the Grand Lodge of Louisiana; Dr. Ringland, Representative from the Grand Lodge of New York; John H. Goddard, Representative from the Grand Lodge of Portugal; Hugh Lyons Montgomery, D.L., Provincial Grand Master, North Connaught; Andrew Browne, J.P., Provincial Grand Master, South Connaught; Major-General the Right Hon. Francis P. Dunne, Provincial Grand Master, Midland Counties; the Right Hon. Lord Dunboyne, Provincial Grand Master, North Munster; Sir John Marcus Stewart, Bart., Provincial Grand Master, Tyrone and Bermanagh; Captain William E. Scott, J.P., and George Chatterton, Deputy Provincial Grand Masters; the Mayor of Sligo, Provincial Grand Warden; Capt. A. L. Nicholson, J.P., Provincial Grand Secretary; Samuel B. The first two verses of the 100th Psalm having been sung, the meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. J. J. MacSorley, Grand Chaplain.

Bro. E. R. D. La Touche, Secretary, then read the annual report, as follows:—

"The Governors of the Masonic Female Orphan School report that, although the finances of the institution were never in so solvent a condition, they are still inadequate to provide for all the desolate and bereaved orphans seeking admission to the school. A reference to the abstract of accounts appended to the report will show that the total revenue of the year 1868 amounted to £2,234 6s. 8d., and exceeded that of the year 1867 by five shillings. It is to be observed that the impossibility of holding the annual meeting during the past year deprived the institution of a considerable portion of its usual revenue; and that the legacies received in 1867 exceeded the legacies received in 1868 by the sum of £218 0s. 8d. It will also show an increase in every other source of revenue, especially in annual subscriptions and life donations, which constitute the main support of the institution. The expenditure during the year 1868, including £125 1s. 8d. for apprentice fees, outfits, and expenses of pupils, entering or leaving the school, amounted to £1,713 1s. 6d., and exceeded the expenditure of 1867 by £352 15s. 8d. This large increase in the expenditure was, however, mainly attributable to a sum of £287 0s. 7d. having been expended under the supervision of the Finance Committee, in house repairs, furniture, painting, and other matters rendered necessary by illness which prevailed in the school during the early portion of the past year. The sum of £208 was invested during the year 1868 in the purchase of £300 Great Southern and Western Railway 4 per Cent Preference Stock. Twenty-eight shares in the Masonic Hall Company (Limited), of the value of £140, were transferred to the school, and £160 18s. 7d. remained at the close of the year in the hands of the bankers of the institution, of which £157 has been since invested in the Midland Railway Preference Stock. The total sum now invested in Government or other permanent securities, for the benefit of the school, including that £160, is £4,637 2s. 2d. The governors feel assured that an investigation of the accounts will satisfy their brethren that the finances of the institution are managed with utmost economy and prudence, consistently with its efficiency and the character of the education imparted to the pupils. The governors have the satisfaction of reporting that during the past year arrangements for uniting the Cork Asylum with the Masonic Female Orphan School have been carried into effect upon terms which, they trust, will prove beneficial to the Order. By these arrangements the Committee of the Cork Asylum have transferred £410 capital, together with all the annual subscriptions they could influence, to the Masonic Female Orphan School. The governors believe that the effect of this union will be greatly to augment the future revenue of the latter school; and they acknowledge the valuable services of Brother Anderson Cooper, the former treasurer of the Cork Asylum, in bringing about this union, and using all his influence to induce the brethren in the county Cork to transfer their subscriptions to the institution into which it was merged. It is with sincere regret the governors have to report that during the early part of the past year the school was visited by scarlatina, although, through the merciful providence of God, only one of its little inmates (Bessy Beech) was removed. The governors feel that it is due to the eminent medical gentlemen who gratuitously afford their valuable services and assistance to the institution to state that their unremitting care and attention mitigated the sufferings of the children, and, by the will of God, restored their little patients, with a single exception, to convalescence. The governors have likewise to report that the maternal kindness of Mrs. Noble, the matron; the attention of Miss Cuthbert, the resident governess; and the warm sympathy of the girls towards each other, tended much to alleviate their sufferings. The effect of this malignant disease was to suspend the education of the girls for a considerable time, and to arrest the introduction of an advanced and improved system of education, which had been in contemplation. In consequence of it the annual meeting for the distribution of prizes could not be held in 1868, and the annual revenue was not only thereby diminished, but the girls were deprived of those stimulants to learning which competition creates. Upon the 1st of January, 1869, there were thirty-eight girls in the school, including the two elected in December last; and the governors have the satisfaction of reporting that they are in good health. Five girls left the school during the past year. Of these two have been sent to the Balham School for governesses, one to the Hackney branch of the same institution, one has been placed as an apprentice at a respectable place of business in Dublin, and one has been provided for by her friends. The accounts received of the conduct and progress of former pupils have been satisfactory and encouraging. One of them has gone to Yverdon, in Switzerland, to fill the same position formerly occupied by two of the former pupils successively, who had obtained good situations; and another, who had been for some time a teacher in a school at Scarborough, has gone as an English and music teacher to a school in Switzerland. The governors consider that these facts will be not only interesting to the friends of the institution, but evidence of the efficiency of the training and education which the girls receive to qualify them for the honourable position of teachers, or the no less important occupations of business or trade. Some of the friends of the institution will be pleased to learn that notwithstanding the advanced and improved system of education imparted in the school, the old and vital principles upon which it was founded have not been abandoned, and the girls are still trained to perform all household duties consistent with their age and sex. They are trained in habits of obedience and subordination, and are taught that they must depend for their livelihood upon their own industry and integrity, and not upon the influence or favour of their friends. The governors cannot conclude their report without referring to the severe loss which the institution, and, indeed, the Masonic Order, has sustained during the past year by the deaths of several of its warmest supporters, and especially of two brethren who were Masons not only in name, but in deed and in truth. The unostentatious benevolence of the late George Hoyte, and the deep interest which he took in the school for half a century, during the last twenty-five of which he was a vice-president, cannot easily be forgotten, and the clear judgment of the late Thomas Mostyn, Grand Treasurer, in determining what was for the true interests of the institution, and his zeal and energy in carrying it into effect, will long be remembered. The resolutions of the board of governors, at their meeting last October, attest the estimation in which those brethren were held, and the sincere sorrow which was felt by the governors at their death. In conclusion, the governors fraternally appeal to their brethren on behalf of this beneficent and meritorious institution. They invite the co-operation in this labour of love of those who have not previously contributed to its funds and espoused the orphan's cause, if they, upon investigation and inspection, find the institution worthy of support. They recognise with gratitude the services and assistance of their old friends and supporters, and solemnly adjure them to continue their benevolence, and not to close the hand of charity until they have placed this institution upon a foundation more worthy of the great Order to which they belong, and of the principles of love and charity which vivify its indissoluble and mystic bonds."

The Right Hon. Lord Dunboyne, Provincial Grand Master of North Munster, said the Committee had done him the honor of placing in his hands the first resolution. He regretted that it had not fallen into the hands of an abler speaker than he was; but it could not have fallen into the hands of any one who had at heart a deeper feeling of love and affection towards the Masonic Order, or the orphans which they cherished, than he possessed. He had to congratulate the Order and its friends on the flourishing state of the funds of the institution. Still there was scope for a great deal of exertion, in order to enable them to augment the number of their pupils. He also congratulated them on the union of the two schools of Cork and Dublin, which, he believed, would cause both to flourish and do better than before. It was a great source of pleasure to them all to be able to present so good a report that evening. After paying a tribute to the merits of Mrs. Noble, the matron, and Miss Cuthbert, the resident governess of the institution, and observing that no complaint had once been made with respect to the subsequent career of any child educated in that school; his lordship concluded by moving the resolution as follows:—

"That the report be adopted and circulated, and that the thanks of this meeting are due to the members of the Ladies' Committee, and the several other committees of the institution, for the zealous and efficient manner in which they have discharged the duties devolving upon them, and for the lively interest they manifest in everything conducive to the prosperity and progress of the pupils of the Masonic Female Orphan School."

The Hon. David Plunket, Q.C., Past Master, on rising, was loudly cheered. He said: Before I ask you to adopt the resolution with which I am entrusted I have to make an apology to you. I am sure there are an immense number of persons in this room who will not hear a single word that I am saying, and that scarcely any person will hear a word distinctly, partly owing to the splendid success of the meeting this evening (hear, hear), and partly owing to the misfortune in which I am afraid that many of you have lately been in a position to sympathise with me—namely, that I am swamped with influenza. I see I catch your sympathies at once; and, besides that, I have the satisfaction of knowing that as soon as I become intolerably stupid and inaudible, you will be very easily able to sneeze or cough me down, whichever you like (laughter). However, I have one great advantage in addressing you this evening, and that is, that I need say but very little, indeed, in commendation of the resolution which has been so ably proposed to you. The resolution commends itself to all your hearts. Ladies and brethren all, this evening's display is the greatest triumph of the Order in this country, which, I believe, it has ever seen (applause). You who sit down there, none of you individually can have the smallest idea what a beautiful, picturesque, romantic effect you all produce to us here (hear). If you can imagine the largest and most beautiful flower-bed that ever was exhibited, and each flower in that bed the loveliest that ever grew, it would not give you the smallest idea of what I have the pleasure of looking upon now (hear, hear). That is only part of the success; but when I look round on each side of me, and behind me, I see the results of the institution which has worked so well, and I see those who have led and still lead the institution which does its work so well. Ladies and brethren all, I am not going to tell you secrets (laughter), though, I have no doubt, you have a hope that some little bit of the mystery may peep out from under the skirt of the proceedings of this evening. I am not going to tell you any mystery, because I am under an oath not to tell you, and the Most Worshipful the Grand Master would do something to me that I would not even like to suggest if I said a word (laughter). Perhaps if I get you, or, rather, if you get me in private, something might be extorted out of me. However, I cannot tell you any secrets; and I am only going to say a few words which may lead you to agree with us that there is something in Masonry besides the mere salutation which you have just seen, and that the ornaments which adorn this room convey something more than the mere glitter and splendour of the hour. I tell you they have reference to events, and circumstances, and truths in connection with this old Order that render it not only the most ancient, but the most honorable institution that the world has ever produced (hear, hear). You ask me how can I tell you that this is an old or an honorable Order? I cannot tell you the proofs that we have—the grand old stories and traditions that are filtered into our minds as Masons; but I can tell you this convincing proof, that the old principles, the old influences, the old advantages, the old reciprocal kindnesses, the old reciprocal affections that were founded before the Pyramids were built, are still to be found in existence, not merely in this land, but in other distant lands where the European languages are unknown—ay, they have been proved to exist, within the last few years, where before European foot had never trodden (applause). Is not that a proof? What proof more convincing that this, that when the unfortunate European wanderer finds himself overtaken in the wilds of Central Africa—surrounded—his life in the hands of his enemies—by some wonderful recognition the black arm of the intended assassin falls powerless at his side, and instead of being the murderer he is the host, the charitable host, of his white brother (applause). Is not that the true test of Masonic brotherhood? Does not that prove my point? And if you ask me why this institution has lasted so long, I will tell you that, it is because those who built it up at first were great Masons—great free Masons in the truest sense; because they built it upon principles that can never fail and foundations that can never give way. They appeal to principles of the human heart, which are the grandest, and therefore the most lasting; which pervade all ranks and all nations of men, and which, therefore, never fail to solicit a response. What are the principles upon which they built up this glorious agency which has lasted for thousands of years? They built it on such principles as these—reverence for Him whom we Masons humbly recognise as the great Architect of the universe; reverence for Kings and Sovereigns in due authority, and loyalty on the part of their followers (applause)—loyalty to their sovereigns; loyalty to their Order; loyalty to the oaths they have taken; loyalty to one another; loyalty to the great brotherhood of man. Thus they founded it; and in order to adorn it and make it sure for ever they added this more all-pervading principle to hallow it through all ages—they said, "You shall all be governed by universal charity" (applause). In the name of charity we appeal to you here this evening. We show you what charity has done. I have told you how old the Order is. I tell you how new it is; and I appeal to this meeting, is it not a proof that it now flourishes, old as it is, as if it were now in its first primeval manhood? (Applause.) Well, they say a great many harsh things about us (laughter). I assure you I am not going into anything like politics, or anything of that kind. It is a delight to me beyond measure to find myself for once in my life in a place where I have not to talk politics, or to abuse anybody (applause). It is a first principle—and this is not exactly a secret—of the Masonic Order, that we leave politics outside the door (hear, hear.) I believe that is the reason why our entertainments are so popular. Politics may not be disposed to leave us alone, but we are determined that they shall not persuade us to interfere with them (hear, hear). They accuse us of being merely an eating and drinking society. Well, I stand here in the midst of a school, which tells you that we do something more than eating and drinking. But I mean to say this, that every man must eat, and, as far as I have had any experience, most men will eat and drink (laughter). And if you must eat and drink, which is the more Christian, civilised, human thing, to eat in company with good fellows, or to eat in wretched lonely monotony every day of your life? Therefore I am not ashamed of our eating and drinking; but I will tell you this, that while we do that, I hope cheerfully, brothers never dine together and forget to say a word and to fill a glass for poor distressed but deserving brethren (hear, hear), and that if the glass passes round on these occasions something else also passes round, which makes those poor, distressed and deserving brethren mindful even of our festivities (hear, hear). I need not say anything in defence of the Order here. We have passed through fiery persecutions in other days and other lands and have come through triumphantly and survived them. If a paltry little persecution be attempted now, I say it may do us some good, but it cannot do us any harm (cheers). Do you want proof of this?—look round you. The Ball was a great success; this is twice as great a success. Now, then, I have told you what we do. We preserve an old institution, we eat and drink, we keep up charity, and some of you ladies know that some of us can dance too. Well, besides all that, we have this School, and I have wandered so far from the resolution that I have been honoured by being permitted to second, that I must now come back to it, and ask you to agree with me that we are deeply indebted to the ladies' committee and the other committees that have so kindly carried out this good work. A famed writer said of old—I don't know whether he was a Freemason or not—perhaps he was,

"Exegi monumentum ære perennius."

He said—"I have raised a monument more enduring than brass." But have we not reared here, and has not this committee established a monument far more enduring than brass? Have they not established a monument in the gratitude, in the good fortune, in the prosperity, in the future happy lives of those little girls that will last long—long after this Ladies' Committee and other committees, all of whom are here assembled round me this evening, shall have passed away for ever? Surely this is something that we may commend to you all in this festive season, on this festive occasion—the quiet work that has been done by charity, by economy, through evil report and through good report, through sickness, and, as you have heard through death. We present to you this evening the fruit—I will say the beautiful blue and white fruit—of our work, and we ask you to endorse and adopt the labour that we have been at. I hope we shall have all your approvals in this work. I know you will give it to the Ladies' Committee, and all the other committees; and if I have trespassed on you too long—(cries of "No")—I humbly ask you to pardon me, for when the heart is full I cannot cease speaking; and if any of you go away thinking, perhaps, not quite so badly of our Order and its doings as you may have done when you came here, I shall be amply repaid (applause).

The resolution was put and carried unanimously.

Major-General the Right Hon. F. P. Dunne, Provincial Grand Master of the Midland Counties, who was warmly received, moved the second resolution as follows:—

"That the thanks of the Brethren of the Masonic Order in Ireland are eminently due to the Most Worshipful the Grand Master, his Grace the Duke of Leinster, for the liberal and munificent support he has for upwards of fifty years rendered to the Masonic Female Orphan School, and the deep interest he has invariably evinced for the welfare and advancement of those who are sheltered within its walls."

(Applause.) There was no man throughout Ireland who was more beloved or more appreciated by the brethren, because they all knew his worth, not only as a Mason, but as an Irishman. Mr. Plunket had told them so many of the secrets permitted to be told that he could not go further. However, he would ask to detain them for a few minutes to reflect upon what the Grand Master presided over. He believed there was no society in existence—and they were spread all over the world—which eschewed politics so much as the Masonic (hear, hear.) They neither meddled in politics or religion. No matter what a man's religion was, they asked him not—they but asked him was he a man and a brother. (Applause.) They looked merely to his social qualities, and minded not what were his politics. They all met on the square, and entertained only those sentiments that became Christians and men. (Hear, hear.) Benevolence and charity were the characteristics they aimed at. They might not attain them, but they were worthy of any body of men to try and attain. (Hear, hear.) Their principles were always the same, and he hoped they would always animate the human heart. (Hear, hear.)

The Rev. Henry Westby, Past Grand Chaplain, said:—With the most unbounded pleasure I rise to second the resolution so ably proposed by my Brother General Dunne, and although I wish much this duty had devolved upon a more eloquent advocate, yet still I will yield to no brother in the Order in my anxiety of offering our most sincere and heartfelt thanks to our illustrious Grand Master, his Grace the Duke of Leinster (applause). For fifty-six years the noble duke has presided over this ancient Order with the most fond and paternal affection, and in no instance has he ever failed, when required, in giving his sound and wholesome advice, or has his hand or heart been ever shortened in giving a ready and munificent response to all deserving cases (applause). He has been an annual subscriber of £50, from the date of his installation as Grand Master in the year 1813 to the present, to the Masonic Female Orphan School (hear, hear). Long may he live and reign over us, as, under his auspices Masonry must go on and prosper (cheers). Indeed, it is quite unnecessary for me to say anything more upon the merits and actions of one who is so well known and affectionately loved. It would be the attempt of a poor artist to paint the lily or gild refined gold. It is now twenty-six years since I had the honour of being elected a Mason, and the only regret I have is that I did not join it earlier in life, for I am convinced from its philanthropy and benevolence I would now be a better man and a more worthy brother. However, from my very first introduction into the Order it has ever been my most anxious study to advance the cause of charity, and my very first effort was to raise this Orphan School, which had then been long established, to a position that would do credit and add lustre to this Order. At the time I speak of it was in a very poor position—the house situated in an unhealthy and obscure locality, the inmates consisting of from seven to eleven, were badly educated, miserably clad, and not sufficiently provided for. Accordingly, in the year 1846 a resolution was come to by the Order, ably supported and countenanced by his Grace, that an effort should be made to place it in the position of what a Masonic orphanage ought to be (hear, hear). Accordingly we procured ground in Burlington-place, and in less than a year we had the satisfaction of opening our present establishment, without owing one farthing, for the accommodation of 24 orphans; and since that, we have gone on and prospered, and have now the pleasure of introducing to this vast assembly 38 orphans, who are second to none in the kingdom; and I am happy to say had we space to add to our building, we have ample space and willing hearts to still further increase our accommodation for the innumerable and deserving applications that are made to us. But I am sure before long, from the pains taking exertions of the members of the board and the zealous co-operation of the various committees, such plans will be suggested as will meet all the requirements necessary for an increased number of inmates. I do, therefore, most heartily congratulate the Order upon such a gathering as we have here to-night in honor of the Masonic Female Orphan School. To his Grace, to the board, and to the several committees our most cordial thanks are due; but more especially to the Ladies' Committee, without whose countenance and aid no institution could flourish or prosper (applause). To our able and intelligent matron, Mrs. Noble, much praise is due (applause). To our able and intelligent hon. secretary, Brother La Touche—were he not present I would say much more for his energy and zeal—and for our assistant secretary, Brother Oldham, although he is present, I must say all our success is due to him; for I know not where can be found a more untiring energetic, and indefatigable Mason (cheers). And now, my brethren, bear with me for a few moments longer while it is with pleasurable delight I bring before your notice another golden link that has been added to the adamant chain of Masonry. I have now the gratification of announcing that a Masonic Orphan Boys' School is established, and that through the fraternal kindness of the committee who have the arrangements of this most interesting meeting, I am privileged to introduce to you these five intelligent and deserving orphans as the first instalment of our undertaking; and although the movement in this very much needed appendage to our Order has been two years in existence, yet still I am proud to inform you that, headed by the munificent contribution of our noble Duke, funds sufficient have flowed in upon us as enabled us to elect these five boys last January; and I have the further satisfaction of stating that in September next another election will take place, and that we have the most sanguine hopes that in the first month of the year 1870 another election will take place for more candidates. (Applause.) I trust, whoever may be spared to witness our next annual distribution, will see a much larger number of both male and female orphans maintained, educated, and clothed by the Order of Free and Accepted Masons in Ireland; which fact alone will, I think, be a sufficient proof that we are not such a selfish, rebellious, treasonable, and uncharitable society as some people would lead the world to suppose. The plan that the committee of the Masonic Boys' School have adopted for the present is, that, until a sufficient fund is invested for either the building or renting a suitable orphanage for the accommodation of at least forty boys, those orphans entrusted to our care should be educated, maintained, and clothed in some of the public schools in Ireland; and most fortunate, indeed, have we been in the present instance in selecting the Santry Endowed Training School of the Incorporated Society, as from its proximity to Dublin, and the many special advantages it affords to its scholars, under the able and efficient management of its principal, Doctor Engledow, we have no doubt but that our boys will be brought up with the most industrious habits, and will eventually become useful members of society, an enduring ornament to Masonry, and an everlasting source of gratification to the subscribers of the institution. I have lately visited the north of Ireland, accompanied by my respected and zealous brother, Captain Harte, and having brought before our brethren there the claims of both our schools; and I have no hesitation in saying, from the willing response we met with from these truly good and loyal brethren, together with the lively anxiety exhibited from all parts of the Kingdom this glorious movement will be crowned with the most brilliant success, and prove a credit to the ancient and honorable Society of Free and Accepted Masons (cheers).

The resolution was passed with acclamation.

His Grace the Duke of Leinster said he had to thank the meeting for the cordial thanks voted to him. So long as God spared him, and they elected him, he would always cheerfully discharge his duty (hear, hear).

A selection of vocal music was then performed by the members of the Glee and Madrigal Union, assisted by Miss Mayne Moore, a former pupil of the school—the W. the Grand Organist, Bro. Quin, presiding at the pianoforte. The following programme was admirably rendered:—

Quintet, "Blow, Gentle Gales" (Bishop)—Miss Moore, Miss Fennell, Mr. Peele, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Kelly. Orpheus quartet, "Spring's Delights" (Muller)—Messrs. Hemsley, Peele, Smith, and Kelly. Song, "The Love of Years," first time of performance (Francis Quin, Grand Organist)—Miss Fennell. Glee, "Foresters, Sound the Horn" (Bishop). Song, Miss Mayne Moore. Humorous quartet, "The Dance" (Otto)—Messrs. Hemsley, Peele, Smith, and Kelly. Quintet, "Now, by Day's Retiring Lamp" (Bishop).

Every item was sung in a highly creditable manner, and elicited loud applause.

A procession was then re-formed, and conducted the Grand Master to the dais in the Grand Hall; the officers of the several lodges, on reaching the dais, falling back right and left, forming an avenue through which the pupils were conducted to the Grand Master, who then presented to them the several prizes and certificates awarded at the recent examinations, as follows:—

FOURTH CLASS.—Ellen Dalton, second in Scripture, Emily Christian, second in grammar. Kate Godbey, second in geography. Mary Armstrong, second in arithmetic and first in writing. Rose Mossop, second in work, first in Scripture, grammar, geography, arithmetic, music (theory); and a special prize for good conduct during the past year, awarded by the almost unanimous vote of her school fellows, and with the entire approval of the matron and teachers of the school.

The Roscommon Masonic Lodge, No. 248, having, with the permission of the Board of Governors, founded a prize of £3 annually for ever for the benefit of the children of the school, to be awarded to the best answerer in a special course of subjects, and to be denominated "The Ffennell Prize," an examination for this prize took place, which was conducted by the Rev. George Salmon, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity, T.C.D.; the Rev. Professor Galbraith, T.C.D.; the Rev. James Rice, the Rev. Richard B. De Burgh, and Professor Wilkinson, Church Education Society, and the prize was awarded to Minnie Chamney, who was then called up, and received a handsome certificate, the amount of the prize being lodged to her credit in the Post-office Savings' Bank, to be given to her when leaving the institution.

The proceedings did not terminate until a late hour, and a most enjoyable evening was evidently spent.—Saunders's News Letter, April 19.

GRAND STEWARDS' LODGE.—This Lodge met and had its banquet on Wednesday evening, under the presidency of Br. Henry Norman, W.M., when two members were elected—Br. Saunders, of No. 1, President of the Board of Grand Stewards, and Br. Frank Richardson, W.M., of No. 14 and G.S. The Lodge is composed of present and past Grand Stewards, and has no power to initiate, pass, or raise. The Lodge now consists of 24 members, and for the information of those brethren who are entitled to join the Lodge, we mention that the joining fee is one guinea, including the registration fee in Grand Lodge books, and two guineas per annum subscription, which includes the four shillings to the fund of benevolence. There are four banquets annually, to each of which the brethren partaking of the banquet slightly contribute.

There are in Massachusetts about 700 coloured Freemasons, who have seven flourishing lodges in existence. They have never been acknowledged or recognised by the white Freemasons of Massachusetts, and have for a long time been trying to secure what they term their rights. The Masonic publications are discussing the subject, and so is the Grand Lodge (white) of Massachusetts.

By advertisement in another column it will be seen that a grand vocal and instrumental concert will take place at the Beaumont Institution, on Wednesday, the 28th instant, for the benefit of the veteran, Br. Isaac Saqui, and for which we cordially and heartily hope that he may have a bumper, he having for a great number of years been preceptor to several lodges of instruction, more particularly in the east of London, where his urbanity of manner and perseverance in endeavouring to promulgate the working of Freemasonry for the benefit of those seeking instruction have gained him the good wishes of all. Several eminent artistes have, in the most kind manner, offered their assistance. It is hoped the brethren will render him the support he so richly deserves.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWO GRAND LODGES OF ENGLAND IN RATIFICATION OF THE UNION, 1813.

Grand Assembly of Freemasons, for the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England, on St. John's Day, 27th December, 1813.

The important event of the re-union of Ancient Freemasons of England, after a long separation, took place, with great solemnity, this day.

The following order of proceedings, which had been previously settled, was strictly observed:—

Freemasons' Hall having been fitted up agreeably to a plan and drawing for the occasion, and the whole house tiled from the outer porch; the platform on the east was reserved for the Grand Masters, Grand Officers, and visitors. The Masters, Wardens, and Past Masters of the several Lodges, who had been previously re-obligated and certified by the Lodge of Reconciliation, and provided with tickets signed and countersigned by the two Secretaries thereof, were arranged on the two sides in the following manner, that is to say:—The Masters were placed in front, the Wardens on benches behind, the Past Masters on rising benches behind them, and the Lodges were ranked so that the two Fraternities were completely intermixed.

The Masters, Wardens, and Past Masters, all dressed in black (regimentals excepted), with their respective insignia, and in white aprons and gloves, took their places by eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

The Grand Masters, Past Grand Masters, Deputy Grand Masters, Grand Officers, and distinguished visitors of the two Fraternities, assembled in two adjoining rooms, in which they opened two Grand Lodges, each according to its peculiar solemnities, and the grand procession moved towards the Hall of Assembly in the following order:—

Grand Usher, with his Staff. Grand Usher with his Staff.

Grand Tyler. Grand Tyler.

On entering the hall, the procession advanced to the Throne, and opened and faced each other, the music playing a march composed for the occasion by Bro. Kelly.

The two Grand Masters then proceeded up the centre, followed by the Grand Master, visitors, the Deputy Grand Master, &c., all in the Order reversed, those the most advanced, returning in single file, to turn, re-advance, and take their places. The Music ranging themselves in the gallery over the throne. The Brothers bearing the Cornucopias, Vases, &c., placing themselves in the seats assigned them.

The two Grand Masters seated themselves, in two equal chairs, on each side of the Throne, the visiting Grand Master, and other visitors of distinction, were seated on each side, the other Grand Officers and visitors all according to degree.

The Director of Ceremonies, Sir George Naylor, having proclaimed silence, the Rev. Dr. Barry, Grand Chaplain to the Fraternity under the Duke of Kent, commenced the important business of the Assembly with holy prayer, in most solemn manner.

DRUMBO CHURCH ERECTION FUND, ONTARIO, CANADA.

An examination of the official papers set forth below will sufficiently explain, and, I venture to think, justify, my bringing to the notice of my fellow-churchmen the object which I have at heart in visiting England at this time.

The Mission of which I have the charge, situated at Princeton, in the diocese of Huron, covers a very large area, and is, at present, provided with but one church—a provision utterly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of the district.

This church, a very small one (being but 30 by 60), I was enabled to build by the proceeds obtained from lectures delivered by me, and appeals made by sermons and other agencies, supplemented by free gifts of sand, stone, and other material, most liberally contributed by the members of the mission, who gave, in addition, their personal services, both in digging the foundations and bringing to the site the whole of the material required—a distance, in some cases, of twelve miles.

Before leaving Princeton I had the great consolation of seeing this church (St. Paul's) free from debt, and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

My present object is to provide a second church for Drumbo, the northern portion of my mission, distant about seven miles from St. Paul's Church, Princeton.

In this district are many settlers, mostly emigrants from Great Britain, who are very anxious to have the great blessing of a place of worship in their midst, and who, although too poor to help much financially, are both ready and willing to contribute, as their neighbours in Princeton have done, in labour and material.

The amount required for this good end is but trifling, £1,200 to £1,500 being amply sufficient (with the labour and material given) to provide a suitable church and mission-house; and I appeal with all confidence to God's stewards of wealth in England who are happy in the full enjoyment of all Christian privileges, to extend to their fellow churchmen for whom I plead, the blessings so liberally poured out upon themselves.

BRO. HENRY BARTLETT,

(Incumbent Princeton, Canada), Senior Curate (pro tem),
St. George the Martyr, Southwark.

March 17th, 1869.

From His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

"I have examined the papers of the Rev. Mr. Bartlett which have seen to me to be quite correct.

(Signed) "A. C. CANTUAR.

"Lambeth Palace, February 27th, 1869."

From the Lord Bishop of Huron.

"The Rev. Henry Bartlett has been, since his ordination, Missionary at Princeton, in the Diocese of Huron. Within the limits of his extensive Mission, the village of Drumbo is situated. Mr. Bartlett is desirous to erect a church in this village, and the people being very poor, he is under the necessity of seeking assistance from Christian friends for that object. He is going to England to visit his friends, and he hopes to be able to interest some of those to whom the Lord has committed the stewardship of the goods of this world, to aid him in the good work which he has in hand. I would recommend this cause to the liberal assistance of members of the church.

(Signed) "BENJAMIN HURON.

"See House, London, Canada, July 10th, 1868."

From the Ven. Archdeacon Utterton, Commissary of the Diocese of Winchester.

"The Rev. H. Bartlett, of Princeton, Upper Canada, appears to be well accredited, and I shall rejoice to hear that he has been successful in his endeavours to raise funds for the erection of a church at Drumbo.

(Signed) "J. S. UTTERTON, Archdeacon of Surrey.

"Farnham, August 21st, 1868."

The "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge,"

At its Monthly Meeting, held December 1st, 1868, made, at the suggestion of the Standing Committee, a grant of £25 towards the above object, on the condition that the residue be raised.

The undermentioned gentlemen have kindly consented to receive contributions towards the "Drumbo Church Erection Fund," and an acknowledgement of all subscriptions received will be forwarded to the Times, by the Lord Bishop of Huron, immediately after my return to Canada (D.V.) in June next:—

Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler, & Co., Bankers, 50, Cornhill; Br. John M. Clabon, P.G.D., P.M., 235, Z., 2, 21, Great George Street, Westminster; and Br. Edward Bullock Watts, 412, Rolls Chambers, 89, Chancery Lane.

[Br. Henry Bartlett, G. Orator of Canada, stands well with the Order there, comes fully accredited, and highly recommended, therefore, the object of appeal being a very deserving one, we hope the brethren will support the Rev. Brother with liberal contributions.—Ed. F.]

THE BRETT TESTIMONIAL FUND.

It is with very great pleasure that we place before our readers the first list of Subscribers to the Fund now being raised as a substantial recognition of Br. Brett's services in every branch of Freemasonry. To those who know the worthy brother it may seem superfluous to state that, as a teacher of the Craft and Royal Arch ceremonies he has never been surpassed in kindness, courtesy, or efficiency. Br. Brett possesses the rare faculty of placing himself en rapport with all who seek his aid in climbing the difficult steep that lead to the summit of Masonic knowledge, and never has his friendly help been denied or given reluctantly. Many well-known brethren, both in lodges and chapters, are indebted to Br. Brett for the proficiency they now exhibit, and such a result is mainly attributable to the untiring patience and ability of their preceptor. We therefore trust that the following list may be considered merely as an earnest of future support to this most desirable tribute of respect to a talented Freemason.

CHAIR DEGREE, OPERATIVE LODGES, AND TEMPLARY.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The difference in working, alluded to by "Leo" and "Ammi," is easily explained, and there ought to be no difficulty in arriving at uniformity. When the ceremony of a Master Mason was first adopted, it was evidently intended to be conferred upon the Master of a lodge only, for the legend implies as much, and the statement was further made by the "Ancients;" but as the building art increased throughout England, there were many Master Masons (or employers of F.C.) in one lodge, and as these received the Master's ceremony, it became necessary to invent a distinctive one for the Master of a lodge, viz., the degree of Chair Master, which, in turn, lost also its distinctive character, and came to be conferred on any brother willing to pay the fee.

Following the runic marks, I have suggested that Masonry was introduced from France, through the Arabs, who employed immense numbers of stone-cutters between A.D. 600 and 800, in Syria and in Spain. The growth of speculative Masonry was gradual between 1600 and 1717. Permit me to say a few words by way of closing the correspondence with our esteemed Bro. Hughan and "Rose Croix," and also to thank "Lathomus" for his able letter, which accurately expresses my own views.

I cannot accept the German writers as authorities on English Freemasonry, and far too much is made of their sceptical works; an over suspicious spirit will destroy any institution, and I invariably find that those who are the most forward to decry the traditions of the Order, are the least acquainted with them. I must assure "Rose Croix" that I did not adopt Bro. Dr. Leeson's statement of the 1722 Constitution, until I had ascertained every particular about the work in question; and I must object to the 1717 Grand Lodge being styled "the mother Grand Lodge of the world," because this term, so far as England is concerned, can only apply to the Athelstan General Assembly, which, we are assured, was formed on the model of those existing abroad.

In reference to the statement that the chivalric orders were unknown in Bristol before 1779, I can only say that they assert the existence of a vellum document of 1780, proving a long previous existence; and the well-informed brother, Thomas Dunckerley, was installed in their camp, and asserted, in 1791, that it had been held there time out of mind. There is also an assumption of antiquity in every other document of about the same date. I am aware this will have very little weight with many Craft Masons, whose stock assertions on the "high grades" can only imply that every holder of these degrees, since 1717, has been either a knave or a fool. Should it ever be established that Freemasonry before 1717 had only one ceremony, it will not effect at all the status of the Templars of St. John—all they contended for last century being that the Arch Degree was established by them, and conferred only on those who held the rank of a Master in Freemasonry, their order having probably been conferred for a long time by knighthood and the simple investment with the cross of their Order.

The Chevalier Ramsay was a pious and most learned man, and though he may have been mistaken in the theories he embodied in the degrees invented by him between the 18th and 30th, his works betray his honesty of purpose.

The most satisfactory proof of the antiquity of the Templar system, seems to be in the charter of the Ordre-du-Temple. The present form of the English Order could scarcely have been adopted until after its connection with speculative Masonry—which, in the form possessed by the Athol and York Assemblies, I hold, with Sir W. Scott, may be as old as the civil wars of England—and, whilst the charter could not well have been concocted later than 1705, it proves that at that time the Stuart, or Scotch Order of the Temple, had secret forms of recognition (which the French branch altered), and included the knights of St. John; thus proving, on the supposition that the charter was concocted in 1705, perfect identity with the present Order, and their belief in its genuine antiquity and superior claims to their own Order—or why go out of the way to attack it?

I hope to write to Bro. Hughan ere long, and, in the meantime, as requested, append my address.

Fraternally yours,

43, Charlton-road,

Manchester.

JOHN YARKER

PAST MASTERS AS PRECEPTORS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am pleased to see the commencement of a correspondence on this subject, the ventilation of which I feel assured will result in the adoption of some such plan for securing uniformity of ritual as I have put forward.

However the proposed "Lodge of Preceptors" may be formed, whether after the plan suggested by our Brother "P.M. 200," (with which I do not exactly coincide), or otherwise, it should be by the wisdom of Grand Lodge, supported by the strength of the Craft generally, and aided by the beautifying influence of the shining lights of the Order. In other words it should be subject to supreme authority, upheld by and at the expense of the Institution, and its object attained by the voluntary labours of Brethren of the highest merit. I quite set aside all question of fees for membership, and desire that neither in regard to furniture, lodge room, or other necessities, should there be the least call upon the purses of its members. My idea is that of a lodge constituted, fitted, furnished and prepared by Grand Lodge, into which it shall be inducted such of the Brethren as are "able and willing to take the management of the work," of guidance and instruction, which can be entered only through the doorway of "merit and ability," and shall have no other entrance to it of any kind. "Promotion by purchase" should be entirely ignored, and membership considered the very highest honour in the power of the Grand Lodge to bestow in recognition of zeal and assiduity. Its members after carefully ascertaining the fitness of others to assist their deliberations, might recommend, but it should be the province of Grand Lodge to appoint. And such distinctive marks of importance should be provided for its members as should invite a general desire in the breasts of the all worthy Masons to fit themselves for a participation in the honours and dignities so conferred.

All this and much more can be done if only earnest men and skilled Masons will unite and persevere with a firm determination to "let no jealousy or non-Masonic spirit creep in." It is no Utopian scheme, and should not present any difficulty to the descendant of those who so firmly established our noble Institution in the face of calumny and opposition. And the ulterior object in view, that of deciding upon and enforcing the observance of one recognised system of ceremonial and ritual, is surely incentive strong enough for those who desire to see the welfare and continuance of the Institution strengthened and promoted, and all possibility that the seeds of future dissension might germinate and in a few years lead to the repetition of a former schism.

Your correspondent "Delta" suggests a "written ritual," the MSS. of which should be preserved with the Archives of the Grand Lodge, and of which a portion should be printed by authority for the use of the Craft; but this is a point upon which much diversity of opinion will surely exist, and is moreover one which could more properly and safely be determined by the very body we are seeking to have established. The "Lodge of Preceptors" should settle "all questions relating to ritual and well as ceremonial."

Since I last wrote on this subject I have had a forcible and practical illustration of the necessity for the proposed Lodge. I attend many Lodges of Instruction, and have consequently heard many different "workings." Within the past week at one of these meetings a very able Brother, a P.M. of a Provincial Lodge presided for the first time, and in the first degree. His repeated departure from the recognised working in that Lodge of Instruction caused frequent interruptions, and at last reduced him to the necessity of entirely submitting himself to the promptings of an expert Brother, acting as I.P.M. On the conclusion of the evening's labour the Brother before referred to, took me aside to express his regret at his apparent inefficiency, and then, to prove that he was not altogether unskilled, he poured into my delighted ear such a specimen of "ritual" as positively astonished me. It was another ritual altogether, but so beautiful in its composition, and perfect in its relative connections, that I could not but feel how very much our method would benefit by the introduction of some portions of it. I sympathised much with our brother who had earnestly desired to distinguish himself, was certainly well skilled in his usual mode of working, and yet so signally failed on the occasion I refer to. It was, however, another proof that what is now proposed is necessary, and I shall not hesitate to continue the agitation for the preparation of a memorial to the M.W.G.M. to consider the question further.

Past Masters are therefore again respectfully invited to communicate by letter their wishes to join in conference on the suggested memorial. We shall meet some time in the course of next month, and special notice of the meeting shall be forwarded to all those who desire it, and who will address

Yours truly and fraternally,

JAMES STEVENS, P.M., P.Z., &c.
Clapham-common, April 19th, 1869.

CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I can inform "Ammi" that I know perfectly well that the "Past Master's Degree" is held to be legal by the Supreme G.R.A. Chap. when it is given in a Royal Arch Lodge; but I was not referring to the Royal Arch, but to chairing, as I said, "on the blue," which chairing, "Ammi" admits, many lodges in Scotland practise; consequently, if a brother be chaired in one blue lodge, he will be eligible to see the degree worked in all other blue lodges which practise it. Is "Ammi" aware that the "Mark" is, or can be, practised by all lodges in Scotland with consent of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, said Grand Lodge ignoring the Royal Arch as a part of St. John's Masonry, but considering the "Mark" as appertaining to the Fellow Craft, while the "Chair" ceremony is held to appertain to the Master. The Royal Arch tried to get the Grand Lodge of Scotland to put a stop to their daughter lodges working the "Mark," but the G.L. of Scotland could not see it. The old Scottish lodges tell the Royal Arch, "Why should we give up the mark and chair to please you, seeing our Fellow Crafts got their marks recorded in our books long before you were born, and our Master, when elected, filled the chair long before you were ever heard of; your Royal Arch ideas are a new creation merely of last century, whereas we were in existence long before."

I beg to disagree with the following remarks, made by "Delta," "Lathomus," and "Cryptonymus:"—

First, "Delta" says, "In a ritual preserved, as that of Masonry is, by tradition only." I deny that. "Delta" should either say nothing or tell the truth.

Secondly, "Lathomus," says "Bro. Hughan's suggestion that the terms Master and Fellow were only distinctions in rank, not in degree or secrets, is, however ingenious, inadmissible, because equally repugnant to the most ancient constitutions and to the most modern minutes, even of the operative lodges." I consider Bro. Hughan is right. The office of Master, Master Mason, or Master of Work, is ancient, but the "degrees" of M.M. is only about 150 years old, and I know of no proof to make it older. The old minutes of old lodges extant, previous to A.D. 1700, show that there was then no such "degree" practised in the seventeenth century.

Thirdly, "Cryptonymus" tells us that "the wandering guilds, in defiance and grim mockery of priestly rule, mingled sarcastic emblems indicative of their solemn protests against priestly arrogance and evil doing," &c.; the priests "did not dare to remove these evidences of Masonic playfulness from the edifices raised for them by their opponents." (!) I am afraid "Cryptonymus" forgets the power of the "priestly rule." I therefore deny his inference. These "sarcastic emblems" were, I would consider, undoubtedly placed there with consent of the bishop, abbot, or other superior of the cathedral or monastery, either to point a lesson or in some cases, possibly, as a practical joke wrought in stone, or to act as a warning by recording the memory of some brother monk who had been caught fooling; whatever they were made for, I consider it was done with consent, not "in defiance." "Cryptonymus" also says, "But henceforward there arose a cry that Freemasons desired to subvert that society, which in truth, by precept and example, they only sought to remodel." If that refers to anything the Freemasons did, or could do, before the seventeenth century, I beg to say "Cryptonymus" makes that assertion without any substantial foundation whatever. The idea of the members of the building fraternities of the thirteenth or fourteenth centuries being opposed to Rome is a mistake. And as for "Freemasonry," previous to the seventeenth century, opposing Rome, where is there any evidence of it? Where, even, did "Freemasonry" exist previous to the seventeenth century? LEO.

INFORMATION DESIRED BY A COUNTRY BROTHER.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am a member of a country lodge, but having within the past few weeks become permanently settled in London, I should like to enter a London lodge as joining member. Will any brother kindly inform me the numbers of a few lodges, any one of which I could enter with as little expense as possible. I am only a working-man, who has plenty of calls on his purse; but at the same time should like to rise in the Craft—if such ambitious pinnacle can be obtained in other than strictly "ashionable" lodges. My thirst for Masonic knowledge will possibly be excused, when I state that I am the son of a P.M., M.M., R.A., K.T., &c., and, moreover, grandson of one whose name I was delighted to see in the last number of THE FREEMASON, in connection with the records of the St. John's Lodge, Banff, of which he was W.M.

Any information I can therefore get on the point I have mentioned will be much valued.

EASTERN STAR.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

V.—MASONRY AND WOMAN.

The ladies claim right to come into our light,
 Since the apron, they say, is their bearing;
 Can they subject their will, can they keep their tongues still,
 And let talking be changed into hearing?

E.A.P. Song.

In ancient Rome one Clodius dared to intrude himself into an assemblage of ladies, and thereby profaned the mysteries in course of celebration, at great risk and personal disadvantage to himself. One modern instance of retaliation has taken place in the person of the Honorable Elizabeth St. Leger, Lord Doneraile's daughter, afterwards the Hon. Mrs. Aldworth. It is not my intention to enter into the particulars of that remarkable train of circumstances. Unless we accept the French system of the Rite of Adoption and the "Mopses" lodges, no woman except Mrs. Aldworth has, to the best of my knowledge, ever participated in those ceremonies peculiar to Masons. But by placing these two facts in juxtaposition we can scarcely be doing wrong. Courage, we thus learn, is one thing; temerity is another.

Clodius was wrong. The other case was probably, if the history of the affair be rightly recounted, an unavoidable necessity. There is, however, a moral to be deduced at the present time, when women's social rights have become a prominent matter of argument and illustration, in practice as well as theory.

In the varied scenes of human life we see at work feminine influences of the most diverse character. We see the highest type of a Florence Nightingale in grim contrast with the misguided wretchedness of drunken Biddy, the Basketwoman. We behold the cultured gentleness of a Lady Jane Grey side by side with the outspoken and brazen independence of a Girl of the Period. But is there nothing in between?

I am disposed to think so. There exist women amongst us who, without the fortune of a Countess or the infatuation of a Saurin, minister both wisely and well in the cause of charity. These ladies are not heard of in the gayer haunts of life, nor do they ostentatiously parade their deeds. Like Howard and Elizabeth Fry, their sphere is one of simple action, in places repugnant to their pleasure-loving contemporaries. And verily they receive their reward—they act on the principles of Masonry instilled, not by obligation, but example. It is a great thing to be assured that this class of intellect is neither on the wane nor is likely to prove so. Intelligence guides their actions, and without undue curiosity they pursue their unwearied way, doing the right and shunning no exertion to promote the good and the real. To them, therefore, also apply the words—"Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

At the same time, any one who has studied the nature of the feminine mind cannot but recognise the justice—irrespective of other considerations—of their exclusion from participation in Masonic secrets and ceremonies. The female mind works upon laws of its own; it has a kind of orbital eccentricity, ill adapted for sameness or system. To take a parallel case—that of inventors—it cannot follow a beaten path, a Roman street, but seeks to penetrate by new and difficult ways. As in cookery, so in benevolence or in action—there is always "another way." The absorbed male mind seeks to steady itself by pursuing beaten paths; it seeks the repose of the Indian, and clings with tenacity to the established order of things. The ratio is that of the telescope to the kaleidoscope, and yet the object—giving pleasure to the contented, amusement to the weary, and instruction to the thoughtful—is the same. The philosophical toy has the same solemn signification as the philosophical implement. Both exist in the nature of things, and perform, when rightly estimated, their uses for the general good.

Hence the good Freemason, from the influence exercised upon himself by the duties imposed upon him in his solemn promise on initiation, as a rule, finds himself placed in an orderly home with truly enjoyable surroundings. A silent influence permeates the dwelling of those whom, under Heaven, he loves the best; and sheds over everything the brightest and best of hues. Many a man—otherwise at unrest, and hence in "the gates of bitterness and the bondage of unbelief"—has been solaced and reclaimed by an association with the solemn lessons of Freemasonry. When all seemed weary, the oasis was found, and the fata morgana of mere outward life lost its enticing terrors; the haven had been gained, and sorrow, without losing its chastening effect, had been turned into peace.

The ladies of the present day have learned to respect the Craft, instead of to laugh at it; and they supplement its own noble spirit of charity by ten thousand graceful and well-timed works of forbearance and human kindness.

Although it is not to be denied that these noble qualities may exist outside of any influences of Freemasonry, it must be evident that the institution tends to stimulate the exercise of the virtues to which I have referred, and hence to raise the standard of morality and truth. There is an unquestionable benefit to be derived from the system which has soothed to rest so many angry passions, and relieved so many of the ills to which flesh is heir; and while ladies cannot themselves be Masons, no one can doubt that they are gradually arriving at a consciousness of the utility and excellence of a system of morality which places its main strength in its catholicity, and proceeds fearlessly forward in the task of the alleviation of suffering and the removal of ignorance. This is also proved by the many subscriptions paid, and works of goodness rendered, by ladies associated, by birth or marriage, with members of the Fraternity. To such the warmest thanks of every lover of mankind are due, and they are cheerfully paid on every occasion of a lodge meeting.

Sometimes, however, to use a homely phrase, "the boot is on the other leg;" sometimes the discretion of ladies is greater than that of the male sex. Hence my allusion to Clodius. As Laurette exclaims to Champagne, in Quinault's comedy of "La mere Coquette":—

Tu ne saurois rien taire, et tu veux savoir;
 Crois-tu que, quand je garde avec toi le silence,
 Je ne me fasse pas beaucoup de violence?

Translated, freely:—

No silence canst thou keep, and yet would still be knowing!
 Dost not believe, in keeping silence with thee,
 Much and sore trouble I endure?

Without desiring to slander the ladies, it is perhaps as well—other reasons apart—that they have no participation in Masonry. The virtuous Cato was slightly put out on the occasion of his visit to the Floral Games. Verbum sap.

"That the exclusion of the fair sex from the Order," observes a thoughtful writer on Masonry ["Introduction to Freemasonry," London, 1820; p. 97], "is so far from a bar to their happiness—yea, rather heightens it—innumerable instances might be adduced; for, however harsh on a transient view it may appear, it vanishes when we reflect that this exclusion is far from being peculiar to our Order; for, in tenderness, also, they are excluded from legislation, from war, from the arduous cares of the State, and the dangers of the field; as, likewise, from various other functions in civil life—indeed, from all but domestic cares. For so greatly favourable to the fair sex are the laws and institutions of man, that their very disabilities are their safest and best guardians, and that often against the undue influence of their lords."

Since the first portion of this paper was written, I find the Editor of THE FREEMASON has alluded to "Female Freemasonry" in a leader. To what has been stated I may, perhaps, add a few words in conclusion. Of the peculiar Rite of Adoptive Masonry, the Duchess of Bourbon was the installed Grand Mistress in 1775, and among subsequent Grand Mistresses we find recorded the names of the unfortunate Princess de Lamballe, and the illustrious consort of the first Napoleon—the Empress Josephine. A snatch, freely translated, from the E.A.P. song used in these lodges, may amuse, and fitly terminate these remarks.

'Tis said that in England that Goddam doth make
 The best of all language without a mistake;
 But here, in true France, we another employ,
 To enable us all life and health to enjoy;

And we take our stand,
 And join heart with hand,

And ejaculate

Eva! Eva! Eva!

Ejaculate Eva!

Or justial demand!

No! The work that women can perform is of a character better adapted for their physical and mental constitutions; and while they are welcome guests at the festivals with which Masons enliven their more serious pursuits, they never can or ought to be associated with the latter.

CRYPTONYMUS.

CELESTIAL MYSTERIES.

BY BRO. HENRY MELVILLE.

(Concluded.)

In the same Assyrian gallery is a compound astronomical figure, the interpretation of which cannot be misunderstood. It is that of a sedate-looking man, with wings on his shoulders, in like manner as Virgo is pictured, he has an ear of corn in his hand, and Isis, Virgo, is never pictured without an ear of corn in her hand. Ptolemy, whose picture constellations are said to be of Anno Domini 138, has Auriga with a "scourge of small cords" in his right hand, and a goat on his left arm, so has the Assyrian figure. A strange fancy carrying a goat on the arm, and still more strange that no celestial figure of Auriga was ever represented without a goat on the arm. In Ptolemy, and in all modern atlases, there are two kids or lambs on the arm or bosom with the goat—"He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, but the wisdom of the Egyptians could not always arrange to have brilliants to govern their astronomical points, therefore, of necessity, they had to select small stars by which they could govern their calculations. Capella means "a little goat." Capella of the goat is a brilliant of the first magnitude, and in the year 1820 was at AR 75° 51, then one of the lambs, the little star lambda was at AR 76° 36. At some time or other this little lamb must have been extinguished or allegorically burnt, by the sun rising at the vernal equinox in "Aries," but the Jews were commanded by Moses to reckon their festivals from Tishree, "Libra," and that would be evening with them. Early in the morning Isaac said, "Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb for a holocaust?" and his father replied, the Elohim (Gods) will provide the lamb, and Abraham took "Aries," and "offered him up as a burnt offering." This was on the equinoctial morning, which would be sacrificing the paschal lamb in Tishree at the passover of the sun in the evening. "Your lamb ye shall keep until the 14th day of the month: and the whole assembly of the congregation shall kill it in the evening." The 14th day (evening) of the lunar month is the full moon, and Spica, the ear of corn of Virgo, is called Azamech, meaning "the station of the moon." Our Easter Sunday is yet dependent on the full moon at the paschal equinox, as may be seen in any orthodox prayer-book. The Jews are one day or one degree on the circle in arrears of Christians, thus their Moon day is our sabbath or Sun day. The lamb, therefore, instead of being at 76°36, as with us, was with them at 77°36, year 1820.

The processional cycle of the Egyptians is 25,920 years, or 72 years for each day or degree of the solar circle.

77°36 years multiplied by 72 years gives 5580 or Anno Mundi of the Jews, for the Christian Anno Domini 1820.

"The lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

The inscription on this stately Assyrian figure, according to Mr. Daniel Smith's reading of the Cuneiform characters, is an invocation to the rising sun on Easter day. It thus commences "Proclamation Palace" * * * "Oh that thou wouldst cry aloud, and scatter the multitude of stone gods, and show me the extreme beauty of the true God and the manifestations of his glory. Hasten thy desires. Light shine forth and spread around the eternal and unchangeable supreme. And thine Altar shall be covered with the glory of him that is above all," &c., &c.

Elul means "cry aloud," and is the month of Virgo of the Jews, and Spica, the ear of corn, and the wings of Virgo, are combined with the Assyrian figure of Auriga. "So the wall was finished on the 25th of Elul in fifty and two days," and Spica is the (say) 25th of Elul Virgo, when the circular wall would be finished in 52 "weeks of days," when the sun would rise at the equinox as described. Cannai is the Buddhist name of Virgo. The stone gods are the constellations formed of precious stones, heavenly gems, and these disappear at sun-rise, when all the inhabitants of Cannai or Cannan melt away. The Assyrian inscription continues, "the Eternal cometh quickly, and will assuredly * * * * * destroy the Rock my God," "the rock of ages." "And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked: and behold, the multitude melted away and they went on beating down one another." At the moment "lambda," the lamb of God, sets, the centre of Ara the altar rises; this is the masonic pedestal, for above it are the compasses, the level, and the square. The Light of the eternal and unchangeable Supreme is above the altar on the roof of the choir in Saint Paul's cathedral. The sun rising—and as the sun rises in the east to enlighten the world, so does the W.M. rise in the east to enlighten his lodge.

The Assyrians, or whoever the people were that constructed the monuments now known as Assyrian, must have been masons, that is "SPECULATIVE or Astral" free masons. Adjoining the pavilion or dwelling whereunder are the horses resting, is a remarkable strong man generally considered as a eunuch or chamberlain; he is standing between two pillars or posts, and as these have on their summits the goat Capricornus, they may as well be considered as the pillars of Freemasonry, one of which signifies in the strength, or in the goat. The strong man then is Samson or Hercules; Samson means "his sun" and his posts are otherwise the pillars of Hercules or Hiram, who constructed Jachin and Boaz. The Assyrian Hiram is between the entrance of the Lodge of the house of sun where the horses are, and the outer porch or entrance. In his left hand and over his shoulder is the cable tau, and in his right the rod or twenty-four inch gauge. Without the porch are four miserable sojourners in tribulation desiring to be released from Misriam Sirius or Egyptus. The figure in charge of them is the bow-man Sagittarius, who holds in his right hand a mystic cross-bow bolt, it is now known as Sagitta, it is "the arrow of the Lord's deliverance and the arrow of deliverance from Syria."

ROSICRUCIAN SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

A quarterly meeting of this body of scientific and philosophical Masons was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen Street, on Thursday, the 8th instant. Owing to the absence of Dr. Woodman, the Secretary-General, from town, we are unable to furnish more than a brief resumé of the business done. After the confirmation of the minutes, Brs. E. Busher, Hon. Roper-Curzon, W. H. Bateman, and H. Wetherall, were admitted to the grade of Zelator, and eleven fratres to the grade of Adeptus Minor. Br. D. Murray-Lyon, M.A., of Ayr, was elected an honorary member and corresponding member for Scotland. Authority was granted by the Council to Frater F. G. Irwin to erect a College of Rosicrucians at Bristol, the total number admitted not to exceed twelve; and the Secretary-General was directed to prepare a list of the names of all members by the next meeting. The fratres then separated after the usual solemnities.

Rite; Ill. Bro. Captain Nathaniel G. Phillips, 33rd, has been chosen as G. Treasurer-General; and Ill. Bro. John G. Sandeman, 33rd, as G. Secretary General of the Council.

MASONIC BALL.—A private Masonic invitation ball took place at Reading on Thursday, April 8th, and was attended by nearly a hundred and fifty ladies and gentlemen. Visitors from London, Guildford, Basingstoke, &c., helped to form one of the most perfect assemblies that have met in Reading for many years. The room was profusely decorated with shrubs, flowering plants, flags, &c.; these, with the varied colorings of the ladies' toilettes, formed a most pleasing and brilliant scene. The band (one of the most important items in meetings of this kind) was that of the 1st Life Guards, under the leadership of Br. Edwards, and the beautiful music they discoursed seemed to animate the entire company, as one and all took part, as true votaries of Terpsichore should do. The refreshments and supper were supplied by Mrs. George, Queen's Hotel, and gave general satisfaction. The arrangements were carried out by a most indefatigable band of stewards; and to these we can safely say the great success may be attributed. Dancing was kept up with unabated vigour until the rays of morning caused this most pleasant and successful meeting to disperse.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

EVERY requisite in GENTLEMEN'S CLOTHING, SHIRTS, and HOSIERY, for home or abroad, supplied on demand or promptly made to order by

BRS. GANN, JONES & CO.,

Tailors, Shirtmakers, Hosiers, Glovers, Outfitters, and Manufacturers, 171, FENCHURCH STREET; AND MANUFACTORY, 15 & 16, BLOMFIELD STREET, E.C.

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]

The value of a tradition is not to be estimated solely with reference to its antiquity; we must also take into account the analogy it bears to the history of the period, and consider its efficacy as a link in the chain which connects us with remote events in the mythic dramas of the past.

In this spirit we approach the Solomonian era, and raise upon the majestic pillars of the Jewish Temple an edifice grander by far; wherein are celebrated those sacred rites of brotherhood, and those sweetest ministrations of affection, which have crowned with unfading glory the lofty dome of Freemasonry.

The traditions which cling around the Temple of Solomon, like ivy round a ruined porch, are not only venerable but picturesque; they are not only harmonious in their dramatic unity, but profoundly ethical in their teachings and philosophy. But traditionary lore is a dead letter to the optimist who views only the glittering foam that tops the wave of life; while the metaphysician plunges beneath the surface, and returns laden with the exuviae of rare and precious thoughts. Hence it is that we can trace through the revolving cycles of time the same truth appearing in a thousand varying hues, according to the idealistic or realistic garb in which it is clothed. We have only to take as an example the original conception of the Unity of God, a belief common to all ages, and to all nations, and then follow its grotesque distortions in the Oriental mythologies, with their myriad divinities—in the populous halls of Olympus, and the countless theories of religion which invest the attributes of the Divine Being with personality and substance—and we shall cease to wonder that thoughtful men cherish the records of tradition, and find in those obscure and mystic paths rays of wisdom and light unnoticed by the utilitarian historian.

Great truths, as every Master Mason knows, are enveloped in the solemn rites of the third degree; but the peculiar significance of the legend attached to Royal Arch Masonry as a corollary to those rites has never, we conceive, been fully estimated. The symbolism of the rebuilding of the temple upon the ruins of the former structure is as apposite to the preceding teachings of the third degree, when properly considered, as the due succession of the corn to the seed, or the flower to the bud. The renovation of man's celestial nature is figured in every sentence of the Royal Arch ritual, and we may add that since our own admission into this sublime branch of Freemasonry, now some years ago, we have entertained the honest conviction that it is indeed, as its eulogists asserted, the very "root and marrow of Freemasonry," the culminating point, and the pinnacle of our speculative and philosophical institution.

Thus impressed, we have endeavoured to study its mysteries, and if the result of our investigations shall in any measure induce Royal Arch Masons to persevere in the acquisition of those treasures to which they alone possess the key, we shall consider ourselves amply rewarded for the time and labour which we frankly confess have been bestowed upon the task. It is first necessary to explain that in the introduction of illustrations connected with this supreme degree, we shall probably travel to some extent over beaten paths and time-honoured tracks in Masonic literature. Such a course is inevitable if we would preserve a logical sequence, and in any case we are fortified by the reflection that our opinions in this respect resemble those of certain great men who have expressed their belief in the efficacy of iteration and repetition. In the attempt to elucidate certain points over which our sacred vows will compel us to cast the veil of obscurity, let our readers bear in mind that a reference to Holy Writ will in many instances be found eminently useful. And we may here remark that it is certainly not one of the least recommendations of our sublime society that the revealed Word of God is to be found, as the unerring standard of truth, in every lodge and every chapter.

Reviews.

"Ten Miles from Town," by Bro. WILLIAM SAWYER. Second Edition. London: William Freeman, 102, Fleet-street.

In Bro. Sawyer we recognise a true poet, one of the gifted few who possess the faculty of penetrating into the inner life of man, and revealing its mysteries of cloud and sunshine, of hope and joy, or of doubt and darkness. It is a strange psychological fact, that the inspirations of genius are frequently arrayed in deep and solemn thoughts, and we remark the traces of this profound yet pleasing melancholy in the utterances of Bro. Sawyer's muse, underlying, as it were, the genial current of many bright and happy fancies. We also find that Bro. Sawyer realizes the true mission of the poet as a teacher of truth, as when he tells us emphatically that,

"Men thrive in conflict: soul refreshes soul,
And hearts in trial and suffering grow strong,
As he who wrestled with the Angel forced
No blessing till he strove the whole night long!"

or

"There is a true philosophy of life
For those who win their way with manly stroke."

The first few lines of "In the Rectory Garden" are perfect as a picture of the "drowsy calm" of a "July noon," and recall to our mind visions of the Castle of Indolence, or the slumbrous trances of the Lotus-eaters. As a telling contrast, the verses entitled "A Wedding Ring" will be found brimful of vigour and passion. "The June Dream" is also a lovely poem, imbued with tender thoughts exquisitely expressed.

Another test of Bro. Sawyer's poetic gifts will be found in the numerous lines suitable for quotations, as for example, when speaking of the poet he says—

"With Truth and Beauty he had dwelt apart,
And from their heights as from a tower looked down,
Calm, dignified, immortal!"

The stanzas commencing "Sister, not Nun," we commend to the attention of ladies who may be yearning after "Starr" celebrity. "At the Opera—Faust" is a faultless gem of lyrical sweetness, Tennysonian in its flowing metre.

But the best thing we can do is to cordially recommend our readers to get Bro. Sawyer's book, and judge for themselves as to the charming character of its contents.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Fidelity, No. 3.—This lodge met on Wednesday, the 21st April, at Freemasons' Hall. Bro. Cartwell, W.M., presided for the first time during his year of Mastership, and initiated five members, viz., Messrs. William Alfred Heath, Wm. Morden, Thomas Burland, Joseph Davis, and James Meadows. Thirty-eight members and 11 visitors (among whom were Lord Ernest Vane Tempest and Bro. Emmens, P. G. Purst), partook of the banquet, which was enlivened by songs by the newly-initiated brethren, Heath and Morden, Bro. Meadows playing a piece on the piano. Bro. H. M. Phillips and Bro. Emmens also sang, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

Lodge of Israel, No. 205.—This numerous and influential lodge met on Tuesday, at Radley's Hotel, when the W.M., Bro. Chamberlin, in his usual efficient style, initiated Messrs. Isaac Cohen, George Purnell, and George Stanley Betzeman; passed to the second degree Bros. Southgate, Barnes, and Davies, and conferred the sublime degree of M.M. on Bros. Waylett, Aydan, Kitching, and Asher Isaacs. After the conclusion of the business of the lodge, the brethren adjourned to one of Bro. Hart's most recherche banquets, and after the usual loyal toasts the Rev. Bro. R. Warren Molesley, Lindsay Lodge, No. 712, and Bro. S. Gale, P.M., Royal Athelstan, No. 19, severally returned thanks—the Rev. Bro. especially mentioning how happy he felt on all occasions, and especially on this, in being able to meet on an equality with members of every religious denomination who worshipped the M.H.—for the other visitors, viz., Bros. Weaver, S.W., 862; M. Jacobs, 43; Miles, 180; Alfred A. Davis, 90; Harris, 247; Taylor, 504; and Haigh, 1077. The W.M. proposed the initiates of this and the former meeting, highly complimenting the latter as to the satisfactory manner in which they had answered the "usual questions." Bro. Coote, P.M., in a felicitous speech, returned thanks for the toast of "The Benevolent Fund of the Lodges," which produced a most hearty response from various brethren in the shape of liberal donations and subscriptions. After a very able address from the W.M., in returning thanks for Bro. Littaur's pleasing, learned, and highly complimentary manner of proposing his health, Bro. Coote, P.M., took the opportunity of calling the attention of the brethren to Bro. Saqui's benefit at the Beaumont Institution next evening, where he said that many very talented professors of music and singing, with himself, would attend gratuitously. The W. Bro. Cohen, P.M., Hon. Sec., in returning thanks for the P.M.'s, also earnestly advocated Bro. Saqui's cause as being the father of the Lodge of Israel. The pleasures of the evening concluded with the usual toasts of "The Officers," &c., and the brethren separated highly pleased with the proceedings.

Lodge of Finsbury, No. 861.—This flourishing lodge met on Friday, 23rd April, in the lodge room, at the Jolly Anglers' Tavern, Bath-street, St. Luke's, under the presidency of the highly-respected and talented Master, the W. Bro. Watson, when Bro. Davey S.W., was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing year, Bro. Alfred Day, P.M., was re-elected Treasurer, and Bro. Vesper, Tyler. A presentation jewel was then unanimously voted to the W.M., for his able services during the past year, when the lodge adjourned to one of Bro. Bond's excellent banquets. Amongst the numerous visitors we particularly noticed the W. Bro. Terry, who made an excellent speech in returning thanks for the toast of "The Visitors."

PROVINCIAL.

Ipswich.—British Union Lodge, No. 114.—The monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Masonic Hall, on Thursday, April 22nd, Bro. W. Boby, W.M., presiding. The business of the day was to ballot for and initiate Mr. Edward Hayward into the mysteries of the Craft. The ceremony was impressively given by Bro. F. Gull, P.M. The working tools were given by Bro. P. Cornell, J.W.; the charge by Bro. C. Schülen, P.M., T.; and the lecture on the first tracing board was given at full length by Bro. A. J. Barber, S.W., P.G.O. Among the visitors were Bros. J. H. Staddon, W.M., 376; Forrester, P.M.; C. Davy, J.P.M., 225; W. A. Smith, J.W., 376; J. B. Fraser, S.D., 376; E. C. Tidd, 959, D.P.G.S.; S. Wright, J.D., 959; E. T. Read, 376; A. Gamman, 376. After business the brethren partook of a banquet, and the day was closed in harmony.

IRELAND.

Bandon.—Lodge 84.—The members of the mystic tie will be glad to learn that the Order is progressing in Bandon. Lodge 84, or the "Antient Boyne," as it is termed, is weekly gaining strength, both in number and influence. On Monday evening Viscount Bernard was balloted for, and it was on that occasion stated by Brother Bennett that he has in his possession the Red Warrant, which it is proposed to attach to the lodge.

The Antient Boyne can boast of many efficient members, but none more so than the present W.M., Bro. Tresilian, and Secretary, Bro. Bennett, to whom, in a great measure, Masonry in Bandon owes a great deal of its prosperity. Bro. Bennett may truly be said to be a working member, as on him devolves the labour of imparting the degrees. Masonry being a purely non-political and non-sectarian institution, it is pleasing to record its progress in the West, and while on the subject we may refer to the rapid strides and spread of the Order in Skibbereen. Here we find the brethren persevering in furtherance of the cause, and not only have they swelled their list to gigantic proportions, but are now energetically engaged in raising subscriptions for the erection of a Masonic Hall, a work into which Bro. R.H.R. Becher has thrown an amount of energy which is certain to insure success, when coupled with the willingness of the brethren generally to co-operate. Already the list of the patrons for the approaching bazaar is large and promising, embracing, as it does, some of the most influential personages in the country. Almost in every household we hear of something being made for the coming event, so there will be a display of récherche work and unique articles that will vie with anything of the kind ever introduced in this country. The concert held in Cork on Friday, also betokens a kind feeling on the part of the public to aid in the good work, so that on every side we see that Masonry is appreciated, and by none more so than by the fair sex. This is as it should be, for good Masons make considerate brothers, kind fathers, and excellent husbands. Therefore, ladies, "ply your needles and thread" in aid of the bazaar, and show the world you appreciate an institution which offers the hand of fellowship to all Christians, no matter what his creed or political belief may be.—Skibbereen Eagle.

Belfast.—Friendly Brothers Lodge, No. 609.—The regular communication of this very flourishing lodge was held in their lodge-rooms on Monday evening, April 26th, the W.M., Bro. Alex. Stewart, having opened the lodge in the M.M. degree, Bro. John Todd, who had received the E.A. and F.C., was raised to the sublime degree of M.M., by Bro. Freeman, P.M., of Hiram's Lodge, No. 97. The lodge having been called down to the E.A., Mr. John Ferguson, being properly prepared, was initiated in the degree of E.A. A discussion arose regarding the members becoming subscribers of THE FREEMASON. A very large number of them signified their intention of so doing, by giving their names to the agent here, Bro. Hugh McCormick. The lodge having been closed in due form, the brethren adjourned to the refreshment board, when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were drunk with much ardour. The toast of our newly raised and initiated brothers having been given and responded to, the W.M. next gave, our visiting brethren, which was very ably responded to by the Rev. Bro. McCullough, Chaplain, No. 154 and 513. After spending a very pleasant hour the brethren separated, happy to meet, sorry to part, and happy to meet again. This lodge is one of the most flourishing lodges in Belfast. Emergency meetings are held regularly to try if possible to get a large number of new members generally raised; an emergency meeting was held last Tuesday night week, when five members were raised to the degree of M.M.

Kilkenny.—Lodge No. 642.—The usual monthly meeting of this flourishing lodge was held at their lodge-rooms on the evening of Wednesday, the 14th April. The W.M., Bro. Fredk. Wydenham, R.A., presided, the other officers present being Bros. Chas. Lyster, S.W.; George H. Gardiner, J.W.; William Nicholson, S.D.; John Bradley, J.D.; Thomas Booth, T.G.; Thomas Hyde, Sec. and Treas.; also Bros. Mathew Smyth, Thos. Chaplin, P.M., Michael McCreary, W. O. Mills, William Wade, P.M., John Coogan, and John Isdell, R.A. The visitors were the Rev. C. B. Weldone (646, Durrow), Irvine (1045, China), W. Lyster (150, Rathdowney), Hutchinson (28, Antrim). Several members of the lodge were unavoidably absent. Bros. Adam Lambert and Joseph Kirkby were duly initiated as E.A.'s by Bro. Gardiner, whose proficiency was much admired on the occasion. The other business concluded, the lodge was closed and the brethren adjourned to refreshment; separating at an early hour, after a very pleasant evening.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE.

Invicta Chapter.—A meeting of this chapter was held at the Masonic Hall, Woolwich, on Friday, the 16th ultimo, under the presidency of the Ex. and Perf. Bro. W. P. Ward, 18°, M.W.S., supported by the Ill. Bros. Colonel H. Clerk, 33°; Capt. N. G. Phillips, 33°; G. Lambert, 30°; J. Forrester, 18°; Hemsworth, 18°; Hyde Pullen, 32°; P. Laird, 30°, &c. Bros. J. M. Clabon, George Kenning (proprietor of THE FREEMASON), Thomson, and Cook, were duly perfected as S.S., P.P., Rose Croix 18°, and, after the transaction of some formal business, the members adjourned to the banquet-table, and spent a most agreeable evening together. Ill. Bro. Brignall, 30°, of the Royal Kent Chapter, was among the visitors.

FREE (AND EASY) MASONS.

"There are thirteen!" screamed the terror-stricken stage-manager, when to his consternation he suddenly discovered that a supernatural addition had been made to his troupe of twelve counterfeit demons engaged in dancing an infernal ballet.

When the Illuminati of Dublin the other evening were joyously occupied in "chasing the glowing hours with flying feet," it would not, we presume, have surprised Cardinal Cullen had an unvouched-for "mysterious stranger"—concealing a bifurcation in a varnished chef-d'œuvre of Hoby, and a pair of cornuted excrescences beneath highly-macassared curls—appeared among those "free and accepted" who "greatly daring" danced.

Perchance the assumed absence of the sable "super" (for if he were present in propria persona he seems to have been too desirous of maintaining his traditional character as a gentleman to have made his objectionable company vulgarly conspicuous) was due to the fact that the majority of the faithful having abstained from joining the saltatory sinners, the dread potentate declined to waste his terrors on sceptical representatives of "Protestant ascendancy." True, a sprinkling of the orthodox ventured to leave the gathering "in spite of my Lord Cardinal," but these would seem to have been terpsichorean fillibusters who declined to acknowledge even a provisional allegiance to that spiritual authority of their own creed, within whose jurisdiction they found themselves temporarily abiding; or perhaps they danced on the principle of the sleeper who scorned the terrors of fire in the house where he reposed, consoling himself with the reflection that he "was only a lodger." But we are not allowed to assume that the bulk of the true believers abstained willingly from the revel. We hear of certain lustings after fleshpots in the shape of applications to His Eminence for a dispensation; and so we are compelled to come to the conclusion that ecclesiastical and lay ideas of the sin involved in Freemasonry—or at least in the patronage of Freemasonry—do not exactly coincide. Notwithstanding, however, the Cardinal's ban, the affair appears to have been a brilliant success. Nothing occurred to give any indication of divine displeasure. The ordinary incidents of a Masonic ball—a cannon of couples in a gallop resulting in a dual prostration, a catastrophe probably attributable to some clumsy craftsman's momentary oblivion of his obligation to move by right lines and angles—a dress torn out "at the gathers" the result of a too sedulous attention to other and more technical "steps" than those of the "first set"—such petty disasters can scarcely be thought to illustrate the church's malediction, seeing that they are common to other revels not under priestly inhibition. The same may be said of other consequences, the inevitable result of exposing to the battery of the bright eyes of Erin's fair daughters such inflammable hearts as are said to beat beneath the collars and jewels of the men of whom it is sung

"No mortals can more
The ladies adore."

If, on the one hand, the gallant brethren, recalling the aphorism of the sturdy smith that

"Love's darts
Pierce hearts
Through mail shirts," find silk and cambric equally vulnerable, so, on the other, many a gentle Hibernian may bitterly experience that from the poet's proposition,

"Men were inconstant ever,"

Freemasons are by no means necessarily excepted.

But surely something terrible must happen one of these days to those naughty, naughty polkers and waltzers. Aproned depravity cannot always be allowed to apply to papal prohibition the contemptuous philosophy of the burly coalheaver thrashed by his puny wife, "It amuses her and it don't hurt me." Those wicked brethren must not for ever be permitted to sing in the words of the chorus to a song once popular at the music halls,

"We'll be free and easy still!"

True, nothing unpleasant occurred to mar the festivities of the evening in question, but this was strictly in accordance with providential precedent. When another Cardinal—the Lord Archbishop of Rheims—anathematized the purloiner of his ring, it was not during the continuance of the entertainment that the result of the malediction became apparent; on the contrary, according to the tradition, although "Never was heard such a terrible curse;

Yet what gave rise
To no little surprise,
Nobody seemed one penny the worse."

But as the small and sable culprit ultimately experienced what a very uncomfortable thing it was to pilfer from an archbishop, so we must suppose that one of these days the defiant Dublin dancers will find out that they can't offend a Cardinal with impunity—post hoc propter hoc is a very useful sophism which popish casuists well know how to make effective with imperfectly disciplined minds. Did not the Lord Chief Justice of heretic England say unkind things of saintly sisterhoods, and decline to see the beauty of holiness in wearing dusters on the head and boots round the neck; and did he not nearly break his neck while out riding within a week afterwards? Shrewish wives and delusive tips are the least the male sinners have to expect: stingy husbands and cross babies the lightest punishment the lady offenders can look for as the results of disobeying the holy injunctions of His Eminence of Dublin.

Seriously, however, not only all good Protestants, but very many Roman Catholics—for the influence of “the man in black” is decreasing even in Ireland—will rejoice that an insolent attempt on the part of the ultramontane clergy to dictate and control the form which Irish loyalty should assume in welcoming the son of our Queen has been defeated. The success of the ball in Dublin is a perfect confutation of the theory which seeks to bracket Freemasonry with Fenianism. The one is an association for the purpose of overthrowing law, of disorganising society, and reproducing original chaotic anarchy; the other a society which, formed to illustrate the angelic proclamation, “Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace and goodwill towards men,” places in the foreground of its tenets the duties of allegiance to the sovereign, and obedience to the law. Whatever Freemasonry may be on the continent, this is its character in these islands. Here it is emphatically non-political and non-sectarian. Cardinal Cullen’s denunciation of the Fraternity, which has recently had the distinction to enrol among its members “The Prince of all the land,” on the occasion of its assembling to offer a loyal and hospitable reception to his royal brother, was tactically a mistake—it evinced that incurable propensity on the part of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to behold the affairs of the world at large exclusively through the distorting media of Italian lenses which is fast destroying all Papal claims to Catholicity; and we are much mistaken if English and Irish Romanists do not themselves smart under the effects of this artificially-produced obliquity of vision in their pastors. The Ultramontane clergy of Ireland have been accused of toying with treason—of secretly sympathising with Fenianism. We will not reiterate the imputation, but let them reflect that it will not be without colour of probability so long as they continue to denounce a system which teaches, in the words with which we conclude, a lesson of loyalty, not superfluous surely in our unhappy sister island. Every one of these denounced brethren has obliged himself “to be exemplary in the discharge of his civil duties by never proposing, or at all countenancing, any act that may have a tendency to subvert the peace and good order of society, by paying due obedience to the laws of any state which may for the time being become the place of his residence, or afford him its protection; and, above all, by never losing sight of the allegiance due to the sovereign of his native land; ever remembering that nature has implanted in his breast a sacred and indissoluble attachment towards that country whence he derived his birth and infant nurture.”—The Blue Budget.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

VI.—MASONRY AND HISTORY.

“That which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?”—Ecclesiastes vii. 24.

Diverse indeed have been the theories broached by men of intellect concerning the historical nature of Freemasonry. Some have referred its origin to ages of which the most acute and appreciative mind fails to form any adequate idea. Others have assumed an origin within reasonable historical limits. Which is the true view? With the inquiring Indian of Texas, who accepts all things as he finds them, we may say Quien sabe? “Who knows?”

Perhaps, however, the answer is more readily to hand than is suspected. Captain Cuttle’s oracular friend, to whose judgment in all difficult cases he was accustomed to defer, used to say, “The application of the observation lays in the bearings of it.” The individual notion of the present writer is, that in all ages of which we have any historical knowledge we find the human mind naturally predisposed to a leaning towards some system of symbolism; a desire for mysticism prevailing amongst men, as commonly as a desire for eating and drinking. All literature, all art, all poesy, veils within itself the nexus between the scrutable and the inscrutable, the finite and the infinite.

Taking this view, the highest antiquity of Freemasonry is reconcileable with its most modern reconstruction. Eleusis is not, therefore, so remote, nor is the Temple of King Solomon less a reality, when regarded through the light of symbolism. The father of Greek, perhaps of universal history, Herodotus, passes over the Jewish polity in silence, but, in a higher and holier sense, that polity existed. Yet it is plain from documents commanding our respect as evidence, that the origin of speculative or philosophical Masonry has a definite date attachable to it. England, the cradle of much that is good, but unfortunately also of much that is evil, gave Freemasonry, as now understood, coherency and form. The tendency to symbolise the solemn events of life and death—the application of pre-existent instruments of architecture—are no novelties. In the Roman building communities the symbols existed on the tombs; but those writers, in my opinion, err who would claim for speculative Masonry an origin more remote than a period extending back to the age of Sir Christopher Wren.

It is a question fairly to be encountered, and courteously to be investigated. Let it be admitted that the Bible, as delivered to us in these days, contains the principles, practice, and, as it is argued by many, even the literal ritual of Freemasonry—it is at the same time self-evident that that system may have originated at a period very much closer to our modern times than is supposed. When it is remembered that Christendom was for many centuries in possession only of incomplete and incorrect versions of the Scriptures—incorrect in the grossest manner even now—it is easy to understand that the application of those scriptures to Freemasonry must have been a literal impossibility on the part of men who could neither read nor write.

There was a relative truth in the beautiful fictions of Hellenic and Roman mythology, but no one in their senses, either during their prevalence or since their decadence, claims for the heroes of Hesiod and Ovid absolute actuality of existence. So with the mythology—to express it by one word—of Freemasonry. It is relatively true, but absolutely a systematized fiction founded upon historic verity, of which very dim shadows are extant for men of modern times. One Order connected with Masonry existing at the present time—the Red Cross of Constantine—is avowedly founded upon a vision, and unless it is proposed to affirm that the age of miracles is not past, a symbolical, and not an actual, truth must be allowed for similar ceremonies and presumed events. The Temple, of which Christ is represented as speaking, was “not made with hands,” but is the human body, with its concomitant outbirth, the mind and soul—the enduring immortal essence.

Well says the learned and philosophic Krause:—

“When we find in any nation or age social efforts resembling in aim and organisation those of the Freemasons, we are by no means justified in seeing any closer connection in them than such as human nature everywhere and in all ages is known to have in common—which characteristics form the basis of all social intercourse—unless we are thoroughly convinced, by most reliable historical facts, that a real historical connection exists. And even such historical connections are very various in kind; for it is one thing when an institution flourishes through the being constantly renewed by the addition of new members, its sphere of action and regulations undergoing at the same time repeated changes; and another thing when we learn from history that from an already established institution a perfectly new one takes its rise; and again somewhat different is it when a newly-formed institution, just rising into existence, takes for its model the views, sphere of action, and social forms of one which has become entirely extinct. The difference between these three kinds of historical connection must be everywhere most clearly defined in such cases, likewise, where they all three appear. In the history of Freemasonry the third kind is most especially important, because it is most generally to be found, and to those unversed in the subject it seems as if there actually existed historical connection of the first and second kind. Take, for example, the strong resemblance, most distinctly marked, between the constitutions and symbols in Freemasonry, and the sect called the Essenes. Whoever should give this as a reason for asserting that the Essenes had by successive transitions been incorporated into the Society of Freemasons, would greatly err by coming too hastily to a conclusion.”

No! Freemasons must be content to date the full development of their benevolent and universal system from the latter part of the seventeenth, or the beginning of the eighteenth century; and in thus throwing away the mantle of age a very promising career of healthful activity may be predicated. Surely it is a matter of experience that all institutions of a purely human character have their youth, prime, manhood, and decay; and though the great principle of Charity—with its three fundamental and organic laws of Fraternal Affection, Relief, and Truth—is destined to flourish perpetually, a misty and mythical past is hardly to be desired for an institution as noble as it is vigorous.

Two other points, and I have done with this branch of my theme. It may appear strange to affirm that Freemasonry is a political institution, seeing that politics form no portion of its functions, but surely every institution is political per se which busies itself with the education of youth and the moral regulation of the conduct of citizens? It is political in the highest sense; forming an aid to the executive Government, adding stability and preserving order. In a similar sense it is eminently religious; it reveres as one of its great lights the volume in which all Christendom places a reverence of the highest kind, and though men of all faiths can join the Brotherhood, it forms a necessary portion of the furniture of a lodge. In the purest sense of the Religion of the Heart, Freemasonry is a religious institution.

CRYPTONYMUS.

P.S.—Since forwarding the foregoing paper, I have read the remarks made by the Bro., signing himself “Leo,” in the number of the 24th April. Will “Leo” kindly understand that a courteous notice will be taken of his observations in No. VIII. of these papers? No. VII. I had proposed to apply symbolically, and therefore would prefer to maintain the prescribed order for sufficient reasons. At the same time, these papers are of a tentative nature, so that criticism of them is both fair and desirable. But my view as to “speculative” Masonry, in contradistinction to pure “operative,” “Leo” will find confirmed by my researches, although we must not forget the power of symbolism. C.

RED CROSS OF ROME AND CONSTANTINE.—The following reply to the claim of Antonio Lascaris Comneno, to which we gave publicity in No. 4, appears in the Court Journal and in the Court Circular of the 17th April:—

“To THE EDITOR.—Sir,—My attention has been called to a paragraph in your influential journal of the 27th ult., which has also been extensively circulated in other European publications, stating that the Roman Senate has lately inscribed in the Golden Book of the Patriciate, the name of ‘Antonio Lascaris Comneno,’ as the sole descendant in a direct line of the Eastern Emperors, and perpetual Grand Master, by right of hereditary transmission, of the Supreme Constantinian Order of Knights of St. George. As the representative of my house in this country, I hasten at once to protest against such inscription by the Roman Senate, and against the claim set up by ‘Antonio Lascaris Comneno.’ My family are the senior direct lineal descendants of the Byzantine Emperors, and the sole legal inheritors of the titles and honors belonging to that dignity, now improperly assumed by ‘Antonio Lascaris Comneno,’ and steps will forthwith be taken to establish our indisputable rights and privileges. Accept, Sir, the assurances of my highest consideration.—RHODOCANAKIS.

“Clarendon Hotel, New Bond-street, April 15th.”

A Grand Masonic full-dress entertainment took place at the Theatre Royal, Cork, on Friday evening, April 23rd, in aid of the funds being raised for the erection of a Masonic Hall at Skibbereen, under the distinguished patronage of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Munster, the Masters, Wardens, and Brethren of the several Lodges of the Province, and the officers of the garrison, who kindly granted the valuable assistance of their splendid band. Brilliant success attended the performance—a thing not to be at all wondered at considering the great array of attractions announced. The play chosen for representation was Lord Lytton’s grand production “Richelieu,” Mr. Clarence Holt taking the part of the celebrated Cardinal. He was very ably supported by Mr. Wallace as De Mauprat, and by the entire company. After “Richelieu” had concluded, the splendid band of the 15th came on the stage, and under the direction of Mr. Allen, band-master, performed a varied selection of Irish quick steps and airs in a manner which was a convincing proof of their having received most skilful and careful training. Madlle. Tarelli next came, and sang in her very best style, and with immense effect, some of her choicest selections. The performance wound up with a miscellaneous concert by amateur brethren of the Craft.

MASONIC FESTIVALS.

OUR lively neighbours, the French, are accustomed to gauge the civilization of a nation by its skill in the noble science of gastronomy, and most of us remember the tale of the Duke of Wellington and his chef, when the latter quitted Apsley House in despair, because the great man failed to appreciate the triumphs of his unrivalled cuisine. From a Scythian feeding on roots, to a Heliogabalus feasting on dainties worth their weight in gold, is an abrupt transition, and a well-balanced mind revolts as much at the savage diet as at the wasteful banquet. Happy, therefore, is he who follows the via media—who rejoices in the goodly fruits of the earth in their season, and cheerfully gives of his excess to the poor and needy. A good dinner has long been an institution in England, and hence we find that soon after the reorganization of the Masonic body in 1717 the "Annual Feast" was revived, and has been held uninterruptedly ever since. It is a pity that we have no accessible records of those earlier festivals over which such men as Philip the "mad" Duke of Wharton, and the princely Howard of Norfolk presided, for although we know that the toasts now used were introduced so far back as 1723, in other respects vast changes and improvements have taken place in the conduct of our "Grand Feasts."

Undoubtedly, good order and regularity prevailed at those old Masonic meetings to an extent unknown at other festive gatherings of the period, but the manners and customs of the time favored excess, and six-bottle men were the exemplars of society. Fortunately all this is altered now, and a Freemason at the present day can partake of the bounteous hospitality of the Grand Stewards, enjoy the sweetest strains of music, and retire to his home at an hour when the Whartons and the Montagues of the early decades of the 18th century were entering upon the first stages of their nocturnal orgies. It is noteworthy that the Grand Festival is really the only general feast of the Craft unconnected with the mystic rites, or charitable objects of the Order. It is simply a fraternal banquet where brethren can meet and rejoice together over the progress of Freemasonry, and the triumph of truth and justice.

Each Grand Festival marks a year of Masonic work, and invites the fraternity to pause from labour and renew the animal man with well-earned refreshment. It is figurative of that spiritual renovation which the mind receives from a contemplation of the Divine nature, for "man does not live by bread alone." Let us, therefore, adhere to the ancient custom of feasting and fraternising together once a year, and enjoy in moderation the good things of this life. Let our path be neither that of the ascetic nor the glutton; let our festivities be conducted with temperance and prudence; and, above all, let us not forget to sanctify the feast by harmony and brotherly love, "as though an angel supped with us unseen."

THE HIGH PLACES OF FREEMASONRY.

WE are not about to expatiate upon the dignities and honours of Freemasonry, as some may imagine from the title of this article; neither is our business at present with the modern representatives of King Solomon or the cunning workman of Tyre, highly placed though they be in the Craft. Our subject is loftier still, and, in a word, it is "mountains."

The records of Holy Writ inform us that the children of Israel, deaf to the prayers and warnings of their prophets, persisted in burning incense and offering sacrifices in "high places." One of these hills was Mount Hermon, whereon stood a temple dedicated to Baal; and at the base of "Great Hermon"—for there are two mountains of the name—the sacred river Jordan takes its rise. Hermon is the highest pinnacle in the chain of hills known as Anti-Lebanon, its altitude being nearly 9000 feet above the level of the sea. Our readers will not forget how beautifully David refers to this holy mount when he compares the blessed influence of brethren dwelling together in unity to the "dew of Hermon, and the dew which descends upon the hills of Zion." A recent traveller in the Holy Land describes it as "the majestic Hermon, with its icy crown."

Another "high place" in Palestine is the famous Mount Hor, which Aaron, the first high priest ascended, and then laid him down to die. This mountain is now a landmark in the desert, and whenever an eastern caravan comes in sight of the "tomb of Aaron" a lamb is slain to his memory, and the Arabs offer sacrifices on a stone altar close by as memorials of the dead high priest. Hor is described as "the very throne of desolation itself;" so rugged and barren is the wilderness around it.

Lebanon presents a vastly different picture, and is thus lauded by one of the Arabian poets:—"Lebanon bears winter on its head, spring plays upon its shoulders, autumn rests on its bosom while summer lies sleeping at its feet." Thence did Solomon bring the mighty stones that were needed as material for the temple, and from the cedars of the forest the necessary timber was fashioned. Of these but few remain, although efforts have been made of late years to replant the cedar groves of Lebanon. Innumerable passages of scripture refer to this interesting mountain, whose history is inseparably woven with the most cherished traditions of the Craft.

The holy Mount Moriah is another "high place" of Freemasonry which invites our contemplative gaze. The scene of Abraham's trial of faith, when he scrupled not to offer his beloved son Isaac, till "lo! God's angel stayed him;"—the spot where Araunah erected his threshing-floor, and David reared an altar to Jehovah—this sacred hill was afterwards the chosen site of the Temple itself. Around it cluster many bright Masonic memories.

Tabor—beautiful Tabor, the pride of Galilee—a fortress occupied by the princes of the land—is another hill intimately associated with our traditions. But perhaps the most familiar name of all is Mount Zion—the peculiar glory of Jerusalem—the type of peace and happiness—the mystic image of celestial perfection. There, wrapped in the silence of the tomb, David and Solomon rest from their labours; to that spot the pilgrim directs his steps, and muses over the faded grandeur of the Past.

Truly there is rich pabulum for thought in the wondrous scenes which have been enacted in the "high places" of Freemasonry.

SINCERITY.

Sincerity is one of the most beautiful words in the English language, and, like many other words, it has a history. It comes from two Latin words, sine and cera, without cement, and its origin was in this wise. In the golden days of Roman prosperity, when her merchants were very affluent, and dwelt in marble palaces on the banks of the Tiber, there was a very natural sort of emulation in the grandeur and artistic adornment of their dwelling. Their successful wars had made many of the gems of Grecian art the possessions of the Roman people. A taste for sculpture had been awakened, and the sons of Rome set to work themselves in the schools of design. Good sculptures were quickly bought up. But dodges sometimes took place then, as now; for instance, if the sculptor came upon a flaw in the marble, or if his chisel missed its aim, he had a carefully constructed cement, with which he filled in the chink, and so cleverly fixed it as to be imperceptible. In time, however, and after the purchase had been long completed, heat, or damp, or accident, would affect the cement, and it would reveal its presence there. The consequence was, that when new contracts came to be signed for commissioned works of art, there was a clause put in that they were to be sine cera, or without cement.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

PAST MASTER.—We are clearly of opinion that a W.M., when unable to attend his lodge, cannot depute any P.M. to perform the work in his absence. The I.P.M. takes the chair in such a case, and in his absence the senior P.M. of the lodge present, failing which any P.M. in the lodge may, at the request of the S. Warden, occupy the chair, but he cannot claim it as a right. The Book of Constitutions is binding upon R.A. Masons wherever its laws are applicable, but it does not follow that the R.A. Regulations are a criterion for the government of Craft lodges.

GRADUS.—We have before stated that the Grand Lodge of England does not recognise a "Past Master's" degree. The body in which an I.M. is entrusted with the secrets of the chair is not a "lodge" of P.M.'s, but a "board" of I.M.'s; therefore neither an uninstalled Master of a Scotch lodge nor a brother with the Scottish P.M.'s degree is admissible to an English Board of Installed Masters.

A P.M. (Vide "Original Correspondence").—The office of Provincial Grand Standard Bearer is unknown to the Book of Constitutions, and consequently all such appointments are illegal. The subject was very properly brought before Grand Lodge some time ago, by Bro. H. G. Warren, and it was then understood that such irregularities would be visited with severe displeasure if made known to the authorities. With respect to a W.M. accepting a minor office in a Provincial Grand Lodge, when higher posts are conferred upon his juniors, it is a matter entirely within his own discretion. We should not consider it infra dig. ourselves, especially as the rule of promotion, year by year, prevails in many provinces.

Enoch is said to have been the first man who erected a public altar to God. The principal altars of the Jews were the altar of incense, that of burnt offering, and the altar, or table, for the shew-bread.

The M.E. Grand Superintendent of N. and E.R. of Yorkshire, has signified his intention of holding a Provincial Chapter of the Holy Royal Arch, at the Old Globe Chapter, Scarborough, on the 19th of May, at 2.30 p.m., when it is hoped that as many Companions as can make it convenient will attend. The banquet will afterwards be held at Companion Parker's, "George Hotel." Tickets, including dessert, 5s.

GRAND MASTER'S SANCTION.

We have the gratification to announce that the Right Honourable the Earl of Zetland, K.T., Most Worshipful Grand Master of England, has kindly granted us permission to report the proceedings of Grand Lodge in "THE FREEMASON," and in thanking his lordship for this mark of confidence, which it shall be our study to retain, we also embrace the opportunity of expressing our high appreciation of the generous support extended to "THE FREEMASON" by the Craft at large.

The circulation of our Journal as a purely Masonic Paper is already the largest in Europe, it having reached the large number of 5,000 weekly, within a period of less than Two Months.

GRAND LODGE.

INSTALLATION OF M.W. GRAND MASTER, AND APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS.

On Wednesday evening last the Grand Festival of the year was held at Grand Lodge, Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-Fields. Punctually at five o'clock the M.W. G. Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, K.T., took his seat on the throne, and was received with loud cheering. He was preceded by a procession of Grand Officers. Earl Vane occupied the Senior Grand Warden's chair, and Victor Williamson (nephew to the Earl of Zetland) the Junior Grand Warden's position. Besides others there were present, the Earl of Limerick, Prov. Grand Master for Bristol; R. J. Bagshaw, Provincial Grand Master for Essex; the Rev. J. Huyshe, Provincial Grand Master for Devonshire; John Fawcett, Provincial Grand Master for Durham; Alexander Dobie, Provincial Grand Master for the County of Surrey; Lord Pelham, Provincial Grand Master for Sussex; R. J. Spiers, Past Grand Sword-bearer, and Deputy Provincial Grand Master for Oxfordshire; J. L. Evans, President of the Board of General Purposes; C. Locock Webb, Past Grand Deacon; H. Grissell, Past Grand Deacon; John Savage, Past Grand Deacon; Dr. Jabez Hogg, Past Grand Deacon; Samuel Rawson, Past District G. Master for China; Gavin E. Pocock, Past Grand Sword-bearer; E. J. Fraser, Past Grand Deacon; J. Mason, Past Grand Sword-bearer; William Farnfield, Past Assistant Grand Secretary; Charles Beaumont, Past Grand Deacon; H. Browne, Past Grand Deacon; W. Ough, Assist. Grand Pursuivant; Thomas A. Lewis, Past Grand Pursuivant; Col. Burdett, Past Grand Warden, and Representative of the Grand Lodge of Ireland; E. H. Patten, Past Grand Sword-bearer, and Secretary of the Girls' School; E. Roberts, Past Grand Sword-bearer; John Emmens, Past Grand Pursuivant, Old Concord Lodge, &c.; Hyde Pullen, P.G.S.B.; J. Phillips, P.G.D.; the Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, Past Grand Chaplain; J. Udall, Past Grand Deacon; Joseph Smith, Past Grand Pursuivant; W. E. Walmesley, Past Grand Sword-bearer; W. Young, Past Grand Sword-bearer; John M. Clabon, Past Grand Deacon; F. P. Cockerell, Grand Supt. of Works; G. W. K. Potter, Past Grand Deacon; J. W. King, Past Grand Deacon; N. Bradford, Past Assistant Director of Ceremonies; White (J.W. 22), Speed (J.W. 47), Thomas Higgs (P.M.), J. Fitzroy, Ebenezer Saunders (Grand Master's Lodge, No. 1); William Watson (P.M. 23), John B. Monckton (P.M. 197), H. Thompson (P.M. 177, 1158), Massey (W.M. Beadon Lodge), Dr. Goldsboro' (P.M. 201, and Prov. Grand Warden South Wales), W. J. Vian (P.M. 21), the Revs. R. J. Simpson and T. F. T. Ravenshaw, Grand Chaplains; Æ. J. McIntyre, Grand Reg.; Samuel May, P.M.; Samuel L. Tomkins, Grand Treas.; R. Spencer, F. Walters, P.M.; J. W. Halsey (P.M. Caledonian Lodge), Carter, (P.M. 145), James Brett (P.M. Domestic, and P.Z.), R. Spencer, Grand Steward; J. Nelson, Past Grand Deacon; H. G. Buss, P.M., P.Z., &c.; F. Hookley, P.G. Steward; R. W. Little, P.M., P.Z., &c.; Charles E. Thompson (1158 and 177), &c.

The Grand Lodge was opened in proper form, and with solemn prayer by the Grand Chaplain.

The minutes referring to the unanimous election of the Most Worshipful Grand Master were read and confirmed.

The GRAND DIRECTOR OF CEREMONIES (Bro. A. W. Woods) then proclaimed the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Zetland as the Grand Master for the ensuing year.

The usual honours were then paid to his Lordship in his exalted position.

The M. W. GRAND MASTER then addressed the Grand Lodge in the following terms:—

Brethren,—Before I proceed to appoint the Grand Officers for the year, I must thank you most sincerely for the kind reception you have given me, and for re-electing me, I believe for the twenty-sixth time, to the honourable post of Grand Master of Free and Accepted Masons of England, I can assure you I feel it to be a high honour that you have conferred upon me, and I have to thank you for the invariable kindness I have received at your hands since I was first appointed to this most important trust. An extraordinary event has occurred this year, which I must on this occasion notice, viz:—The Inauguration of the New Hall. I am sure every Brother present at the Inauguration this day fortnight past, must have felt extremely gratified at the manner in which it was conducted. We are deeply indebted, especially indebted, to the Grand Director of Ceremonies, Bro. Albert William Woods, and to the Assistant Grand Director of Ceremonies, Bro. Fenn, for the manner in which they conducted the ceremony of Inauguration, which I think must have been highly gratifying to every Brother who was present. I shall propose a vote of thanks to Brother Woods, and also to Brother Fenn, for the able manner in which they managed that festival. I think they succeeded entirely. There is another point I wish to mention, and I am sure every Brother who was present will agree with me, that the oration, delivered on that occasion by Brother Simpson, Grand Chaplain, deserves the highest praise. (Loud cheers.) And I have without waiting for the sanction of the Grand Lodge, taken upon myself the responsibility of ordering that that address shall be printed. (Hear, hear.) I think every Brother who was present on that occasion, will wish that that course should be taken. I shall now proceed to appoint the Grand Officers for the year.

The M. W. GRAND MASTER appointed his officers as follows:—

Earl DE GREY and RIFON, Deputy Grand Master.
Earl PERCY, Senior Grand Warden.

JOHN G. DODSON, M.P., Junior Grand Warden.

Rev. T. F. T. RAVENSHAW, } Grand Chaplains.

Rev. C. J. MARTYN, }

SAMUEL TOMKINS, Grand Treasurer.

ÆNEAS J. MCINTYRE, Grand Registrar.

JOHN HERVEY, Grand Secretary.

SAMUEL L. TOMKINS, } Senior Grand Deacons.

WILLIAM POWELL, }

E. BRACKSTONE BAKER, } Junior Grand Deacons.

J. COOPER FORSTER, }

F. P. COCKERELL, Grand Superintendent of Works.

ALBERT WILLIAM WOODS, Grand Director of Ceremonies.

CONRAD C. DUMAS, Assistant Grand Director of Ceremonies.

JOSHUA NUNN, Grand Sword Bearer.

JAMES COWARD, Grand Organist.

WILLIAM OUGH, Grand Pursuivant.

JAMES BRETT, Assistant Grand Pursuivant.

CHARLES B. PAYNE, Grand Tyler.

The W. M. GRAND MASTER then accorded permission to Bro. Lewis, Past Grand Pursuivant, to wear the clothing of a grand officer, and take rank as Past Grand Pursuivant. The W. M. Grand Master then appointed, in the following order, the Grand Stewards for the year:—

E. K. Bagley Lodge. 1

J. T. Collins ...	60
H. G. Lapworth ...	91
H. G. Pilcher ...	99
John Gibson ...	239

There being no other business the Grand Lodge was closed with the ceremony usually observed, and the Brethren adjourned to the

which was served in the large dining-hall, where covers were laid for nearly 300. During the procession to the dais, and until the brethren were seated, the ladies remained in the gallery, from which they afterwards retired to the ladies' dining-hall, and were carefully looked after by the Stewards.

When the Banquet had concluded, grace was sung by professional singers:—

"Deum laudate propter beneficia sua
Dominum in excelsis laudate.

Amen."

The M. W. GRAND MASTER proposed the first toast—"The health of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen." He said the brethren would, he had no doubt, all be prepared for the toast he had the honour of giving, and he was sure they would drink it with the same satisfaction they always did. There was no Order in England that would drink it with more satisfaction and good-will than the Freemasons'. (Hear, hear.) They had always been a loyal body, but never more loyal than they had been for Her Most Gracious Majesty. He begged them to join with him in drinking the health of the Queen. (Cheers.)

The solo parts of the National Anthem were sung by Madame Patey and Madame Bodda-Pyne.

The M. W. GRAND MASTER said he was sure they would drink the next toast with the same cordiality as they had the previous one, and was quite sure the other members of the Royal Family would long enjoy the respect they had so deservedly won. With all sincerity he gave them. "The health of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." [The toast was heartily responded to.]

Bro. Spencer, whose abilities as a toast-master and generally courteous conduct are worthy of notice sounded his gavel for silence, and

The R.W., the EARL DE GREY AND RIFON, rose and said:—Officers and Brethren, it is my good fortune, as it has been on many former occasions, to propose the toast that I am now about to ask you to drink, and I am sure that you will do so with as much pleasure as it gives me whenever I have had the good fortune to propose it. I have risen to propose to you the health of the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Masons (cheers). It is with a peculiar feeling of satisfaction that I offer this toast to you this evening, and, if I mistake not, you will receive it with more than ordinary enthusiasm, because we are called upon to-night to drink the health of our Grand Master, who has entered on the twenty-sixth year of his administration of that office. If it were not for his presence, I might be inclined to dilate at length upon his peculiar merits for the high post he occupies, but upon this occasion I can appeal to something better than words, when I ask you to look back at our Masonic history for the past twenty-five years, and consider the progress—the great progress—that has been made in the Craft, how greatly it has been diffused, how greatly it has increased in the number of brethren and in the number of lodges, how steadily and surely it has risen in public estimation. What, I ask, has been the progress of our Masonic Charities and our Charitable Institutions? We had substantial proof of that not long ago in this very hall, when on the occasion of the Boys' School Festival, the largest sum (£12,500), that has ever been collected, was contributed. When we look back at our history for a quarter of a century, and also see the prosperity and well-doing of the Craft which mainly depends upon Him who rules over us, we ought to bear our testimony to the spirit, the ability and the labour with which the M. W. Grand Master has conducted the affairs. Brethren I am confident, that on this most auspicious occasion; in this new building inaugurated by him, you will join with me in wishing health, happiness, and prosperity to the M. W. the Grand Master.

The toast was received in a most worthy manner and with loud applause.

The M. W. GRAND MASTER, who, upon rising, to respond, was greeted with a perfect storm of applause, said: Right Worshipful Sir, Grand Officers, and Brethren, I assure you, and you will believe me when I say so, that I cannot find words to express the feelings of my heart on this occasion. I feel that I am unworthy of the compliments paid me by the Worshipful the Deputy Grand Master, the Earl de Grey and Ripon; but I do feel your kindness very much—the kindness which you have on all occasions shown towards me. It is quite true that this is the 26th time that I have been elected to fill the honourable and high office of Grand Master. I can assure you that I esteem it the highest honour that could be conferred upon me, but it is more than 26 years that I have been associated with you, for before that time I had been Pro. Grand Master, and conducted the principal business relating to the Craft, so that I may say I have ruled the Craft for 30 years. Thirty years is a long time. I assure you I feel very grateful for the kind manner in which I have always been received, and the assistance I have obtained from the brethren in times of difficulty. If I had not had good advisers, and called to my aid counsels from brethren whom I could trust and who gave me their assistance, I should long since have given up so arduous a duty. I thank you, brethren, for the way in which you have drunk my health, and I trust that my name will go down to posterity as one who has taken a deep interest in Freemasonry, and endeavoured to fulfil the duties committed to his care. It is true that I do take an interest in Freemasonry—an interest in the increased number of the Craft and in the extension of our charities. It is always my anxious wish and earnest endeavour to make Freemasonry what it is—a charitable society—and if anyone, whether he is a mason or not, looks back at our charities, he must feel that Freemasonry is setting an example throughout the whole of the world. Brethren, it is difficult for me to find words to convey my feelings, my true feelings, for the kind manner in which you have always received me during the time I have ruled the craft, and on every occasion when I have come amongst you. I feel more than I can express. I thank you deeply, and shall conclude by drinking towards all your good healths (applause).

The W. M. GRAND MASTER: The next toast I have to give, is—"The Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland." It is most gratifying to find now the amicable terms which exist between this Grand Lodge and the Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland. The Grand Master of Scotland did us the honour of paying us a visit on the day of the inauguration, about a fortnight ago, and I regret that he is not with us on the present occasion. The Grand Master of Ireland, on all occasions, has proved a cordial friend to the Grand Lodge of England, and I have often had opportunities of receiving fraternal communications in regard to Freemasonry from the Duke of Leinster, who is a great friend to Masonry; he has sent his representative to this country, and who will return thanks for this toast. The Grand Master of Ireland was present on the occasion of laying the foundation-stone of the new buildings, and he has often honoured us with his presence, and on all occasions acted cordially and fraternally with the Grand Lodge of England. Brethren, I give the toast of—"The Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland," coupling with the toast the name of Colonel Burdett.

The toast was drunk with enthusiasm.

Colonel BURDETT, the representative of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, returned thanks for this toast. He said he was glad to know that there was great cordiality between the Grand Lodges of England and Ireland, and although he came from what some persons had called an "unfortunate country," he had always been received with a fraternal welcome. He thanked them most heartily for the honour conferred upon him. He had always been an Irish Mason, but by the great kindness of the Grand Master he could now take his place in the Grand Lodge of England as one of their fellows, and he felt it an especial pleasure to be not only a Grand Officer of Ireland but one of the Grand Lodge of England. He would do all in his power to promote the prosperity and harmony between the Grand Lodges of the two countries. He did not think the country to which he belonged an unhappy one.

The M.W. GRAND MASTER said: Brethren, I now propose a toast to which I beg your earnest attention, and in which I am sure you will join with the utmost cordiality, it is "The health of the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, the Right Worshipful the Deputy Grand Master of England." I am sure it is a toast which deserves your utmost approbation, and in asking you to unite with me I can assure you that I feel myself personally under the greatest obligation to him, for on every occasion when I have required his assistance he has been most ready to give it to me. He is one who really has the interest and the prosperity of the Craft at heart, and who has undertaken the most arduous duties for years past, and I could not have selected a more worthy brother, or one who has given me more kind and cordial assistance than he has.

This toast was likewise received with much honour.

The R. W. DEPUTY GRAND MASTER rose and said:—Most Worshipful Sir, Grand Officers and Brethren, I beg to return you my hearty thanks for the kind and cordial manner in which you have received the toast; I can assure you I esteem most highly such a proof of your regard. I feel obliged to you for the kind reception you have given me on all occasions, but I am afraid that on a recent occasion you must have looked upon me as a deserter. (Laughter.) If I was not able to be present on the interesting occasion of the inauguration, it was because I had to attend important functions elsewhere. Beyond my duty as a Mason I had another duty as one of Her Majesty's advisers, which stood first and foremost. I can assure you that it is with great pleasure that I find myself amongst you on this occasion. It has been a source of high gratification to me to hear from the lips of the Most Worshipful Grand Master, that I have been even in my humble position able to assist him to some extent, and I highly esteem the confidence placed in me by the Brethren of the Craft. I have endeavoured to discharge my duties, and I am fully rewarded by the confidence you have placed in me, and I trust that it will never be diminished. I can truly say that during the long years I have belonged to this Fraternity I have had great confidence in the principles of the Craft, and my affection for them has increased from day to day, and from hour to hour, for I believe that Masonry is doing a great work in this country, for a good Mason makes a good man and a good citizen, and I believe that in labouring for the prosperity of the Craft, we are labouring for the improvement and advantage of our common country. (Loud applause.)

The M. W. GRAND MASTER said: Brethren, I come to a toast which I am sure you will drink with cordiality. It is—"The Health of the R.W. Grand Wardens and other Grand Officers of the Year," and it is with great pleasure that I unite with this toast the name of a scion of a noble family, who takes a great interest in Freemasonry, and who is also a member of the House of Commons, and who possesses no small amount of influence in that house. In undertaking the office to which he has been appointed he has shown a willingness and a readiness to act in concert, so that the different classes should be included amongst the Grand Officers. It is most desirable that all who belong to Freemasonry should consider themselves on an equality in the Craft. It is, therefore, with great pleasure that I connect with this toast the name of the Senior Grand Warden, Earl Percy. (Hear, hear.)

Earl PERCY, who was warmly received, returned thanks, and spoke very much to the point. He said the Grand Officers would, to the utmost of their ability, do all they could to promote the prosperity of the Craft, and deserve the dignity which the Grand Master had conferred upon them.

Bro. DODSON, J.G.W., M.P. for Sussex, also returned thanks (in answer to a loud call) in appropriate terms.

The M.W. GRAND MASTER proposed, "The Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Masters," and said it was most gratifying to be supported by such influential and worthy members of the Craft, as the Provincial brethren present.

Bro. HALL, the Deputy Grand Master for Cambridgeshire, returned thanks, and said he felt it a high honour to return thanks for the toast of the Provincial Grand Masters, &c.; that he had a personal regard for the M.W. Grand Master to receive that honour from his lordship's hands.

The "Masonic Charities" was the next toast, for which Bro. Patten returned thanks.

The M.W. GRAND MASTER proposed the health of the "Grand Stewards," of whom the following is a complete list:—

Br. J. Ebenezer Saunders (No. 1) President; Br. William J. Vian (21) Treasurer; Br. John B. Monckton (197) Hon. Secretary; Brs. W. Hedgman (2), John H. Challis (4), Charles G. Hale (6), Chas. F. Millett (6), Swinford Francis (8), Frank Richardson (14), John H. Stedwell (23), Marston C. Buszard (26), Edmund Bainbridge (29), William Henry Kingsford (46), William J. Franklin (58), Henry Young (60), John T. Swainston (91), Frederick Powell (99), Julius Kaltenthaler (259).

He was sure they would drink the toast most cordially. He coupled with it the name of Br. J. Ebenezer Saunders, the President.

Br. J. EBENEZER SAUNDERS returned thanks, and expressed his gratification that the labours of the Grand Stewards had given so much satisfaction. Their work had been a simple one in providing for the creature comforts, and if what they had done was approved of they were well repaid.

The M.W. Grand Master proposed the last toast, "The Ladies," which met with applause from the brethren.

The company then adjourned to the Grand Hall, where the rest of the programme was gone through, and a happy evening brought to a close.

We are much indebted to the urbanity and great courtesy of Bro. Monckton, the Hon. Sec. of the Board of Grand Stewards in giving our representative every facility for the performance of his duties.

The professional singers, &c., engaged were:—Madame Bodda-Pyne, Madame Patey, Miss Banks, Bros. W. Coward, Barnby, Carter, Edward Murray, and Lawler; Grand Pianoforte—Bros. James Coward and W. F. Taylor, P.P.G.O., Bristol; Director of the Music—W. Bro. James Coward, Grand Organist, P.M., 905, &c.

A MASONIC SONG,

Written for his Initiation Banquet by Bro. ATHELSTON HARVEY BOYS, W.M. Union Lodge (127), Margate.

Come, now our lodge is over,
Let's pass the bowl around,
And show how work and pleasure
Are in their places found;
For, meeting on the Level,
And acting on the Square
Exhibit how inviolate
Masonic precepts are.

Then, at our festive gathering,
Say, who would not be gay
When feelings all fraternal
Among us hold their sway.

The outer world may wonder
At all our Mystic arts,
But let them also ponder
On what our craft imparts.
Equality our Standard,
While merit finds its place,
And Love, Relief, and sacred Truth,
Our lodge proceedings grace.

Then, at our festive gathering, &c.

We find the humble classes
Associate with the Peer,
For, as our precepts tell us,
We equal are all here;
Yet, with us, full Obedience
To all our laws is found,
Fidelity and Secrecy
In all our craft abound.

Then, at our festive gathering, &c.

The Masters and his Wardens,
They rule the lodge by love,
And dictates from the sacred Laws
Of him who reigns above;
While 'mongst our poorer brethren
Our worldly gifts we share,
And may Masonic Charities
Be long our constant care.

Then, at our festive gathering, &c.

Then pass the brimming goblet,
And let us drink a toast
With hearts and minds in union,
As all our lodge can boast;
Here's a health to all good Masons,
May they ever "good" remain,
Then when next we meet together
We'll drink their health again.

Then, at our festive gathering, &c.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

University Lodge, No. 1118.—A Lodge of Emergency was held on Monday last, April 26th, at Freemason's Hall (Bro. Philip A. Latham, Past Prov. G. Registrar, Oxon W.M., in the chair), for the purpose of initiating Mr. Lionel Henry Shirley, and Mr. Leon Merlin. Mr. Shirley is a nephew of the Representative of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, Bro. Colonel Burdett, P.G.W., who was present as a visitor on the occasion. At the same time, Bros. Gordon Tomkins (a son of the G. Treas.), H. S. Trower, and J. H. Webb, were raised. This new lodge continues to progress in the most satisfactory manner; the ordinary meetings are insufficient for the work, and at the Grand Festival one of its members, Bro. S. Leith Tomkins, was appointed Senior Grand Deacon.

PROVINCIAL.

WINCHESTER.—Lodge of Economy, No. 76.—The regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held on Wednesday, April 28, when there were present during the evening, Bros. Harris, W.M.; Everett, P.M., as S.W.; Sheppard, P.M., as J.W.; Sherry, P.M., Treas.; Stopher, Sec.; Whale, S.D.; Penton, as J.D.; Priddis, I.G.; Oakstat, P.M.; Warner, Barratt, Lumsden, Pyle, Sealey, Elliott, Blackmore, and a visitor, Bro. Henry Warren, of Domestic Lodge, No. 177. The minutes of the previous lodge having been read and confirmed, the secretary read a notice which had been received from the Grand Secretary, Bro. J. Hervey, calling attention of brethren of lodges to Bro. Clabon's scheme for disposing of a portion of the money of the Fund of Benevolence, and which scheme would have to be discussed at the next meeting of Grand Lodge, to be held on June 2nd. Some introductory conversation took place on the subject, and Bro. Sherry expressed a desire that the brethren should read themselves up in the matter, and then gave the following notice of motion: "That the scheme proposed by Bro. Clabon, for appropriating a portion of the Fund of Benevolence to other than the purposes for which it was created, be taken into consideration and discussed at our next monthly meeting, on May 26th." —Proposed by Bro. Stopher, P.M., and seconded by Bro. Sheppard, P.M., "That suppers be held at the regular lodge meetings in February, May, August, and November, instead of every month as at present." Carried unanimously. Bro. Sherry solicited the votes for the Benevolent Institution on behalf of Bro. Charles Fletcher, No. 18 on the list, and for Mary Guy, No. 5 on the Widow's List, intimating his intention of being present at the election on May 21st, and would feel obliged by any brethren sending him their votes. The ceremonies of the lodge were then proceeded with, and Bro. F. Isaac Warner, having served his time as an entered apprentice, proved his proficiency, was passed to the degree of a Fellow Craft. Bro. Henry Pyle, also having proved himself worthy, was entrusted, prepared, resumed and raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason. The lodge was from the third to the second, and second to first degrees, and finally closed at a quarter past nine.

WARRINGTON.—Lodge of Lights, No. 148.—The regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held on Monday night last, under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. D. W. Finney. The W.M. was supported by Bros. W. Mossop, S.W.; W. Richardson, J.W.; John Bowes, P.M. &c.; H. B. White, P.M. &c.; W. S. Hawkins, S.D.; M. S. Domville, I.G.; W. Woods, Ralph Johnson, Horatio Syred, W. Fletcher-Wood, George Bailey, Jos. Cassidy, Jno. Laithwaite, Jos. Maxfield, P.M., Geo. Woolf, Rev. W. Whitelegge, Jas. Johnson, (Tyler), James Hannah, visitors, Bros. P. J. Edleston and James Parry, (No. 1134). The lodge was opened in form and the minutes read and confirmed. The ballot having been taken for the Rev. William Whitelegge, as a candidate for the mysteries, and it proving unanimously in his favour he was duly initiated by the W.M. Bro. George Bailey was passed, and Bro. W. Fletcher-Wood was raised by Bro. John Bowes, P.M. &c. After some routine business had been transacted, the lodge was closed with the usual solemnities.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Northern Counties' Lodge, No. 406.—The members of this lodge held their annual meeting on Wednesday, the 21st April, at Freemasons' Hall, Bell's-court, Newgate-street, for the installation of Bro. John Frederick Frölich, elected as W.M. at the monthly meeting, April 7th. The brethren met at three o'clock, p.m., when the lodge was opened by Bro. John Ridsdale, W.M., assisted by his officers, viz., Bro. J. F. Frölich, S.W., W.M. elect; Bro. J. G. Youll, J.W.; Bro. Wm. Punshon, P.M., P.Z., P.P.G.S.W. of Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed, Treas.; Bro. J. Cooke, Sec.; Bro. J. Jensen, P.M. 406 and 48, P.Z. and P.P.G.S.B. of Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed; Bro. H. G. Ludwig, P.M. and P.Z., P.P.G.R. of Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed; and several other members of the lodge. Among the visitors present were Bro. White, Emulation lodge, London; Bro. A. C. Mott, Lieut. R.N.R., 148, 241, 1013, 1086, P.M., P.Z., P.G.S.D. and P.G.S.N. of West Lancashire; Bro. Thos. Anderson, P.M. 541, P.G.J.W. Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed; Bro. Anthony Clapham, P.M. 24, 48, P.Z. 48, 406, P.P.G.J.W. Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed, P.P.G.R. Durham; Bro. T. T. Strachan, 24, 685, P.M. P.Z. 406, P.P.G.J.D. Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed; and Bro. Thomas Smith, P.M. 424, 541, P.P.G.S.D. Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed. After the minutes had been read and confirmed, and the ballot taken for two candidates, who were duly elected, Bro. A. C. Mott, at the request of Bro. J. Ridsdale, W.M., took the chair and Bro. J. F. Frölich, W.M. elect, was presented by Bros. Ridsdale, P.M., and J. Jensen, P.M., to a board of Installed Masters, and received at the hands of Bro. A. C. Mott, P.M., &c., the benefit of Installation. The ceremony was performed by this distinguished Bro. in a most impressive and solemn manner, which has already made him so renowned in his own province as an Installing Master. The great attention of the brethren proved how much interested they were in the ceremony, and all expressed themselves highly delighted with it and, at the conclusion, their satisfaction found vent in a hearty burst of applause to Bro. Mott. The W.M. appointed and invested his officers as follows:—Bros. J. Ridsdale, I.P.M.; J. G. Youll, S.W.; R. Ross, J.W.; W. Punshon, P.M., Treas.; J. Gjenare, Sec.; J. Jensen, P.M., D.C.; W. English, S.D.; Thomas Wilson, J.D., S.S.; G. L. de Poitiers, I.G.; W. S. Hughes, J. Steward; J. S. Trotter, Tyler. Before the lodge was closed a vote of thanks was recorded to Bro. White for the pains and trouble he had taken in obtaining votes to get a daughter of a deceased member of the lodge into the girls' school. After the lodge was closed, the brethren dined together at Bro. Miller's, Queen's Head Hotel, Pilgrim-street, and passed a very pleasant evening, which was enlivened by songs from several brothers, and separated at ten o'clock.

HAWORTH.—Lodge of Three Graces, No. 408.—The monthly meeting of this lodge was held on Monday, the 26th, in the private rooms in the occupation of the lodge, when there was a good attendance of members and visitors, the latter of whom partook of an excellent tea, previous to the opening of the lodge at six o'clock. The business of the evening was the raising of Bro. John Leach, which ceremony was ably performed by Bro. E. Taylor, W.M. An interesting feature of the evening, was the introduction of an harmonium, at which Bro. W. Hemingway (448) presided, who added greatly to the beauty of the sublime ceremony by the performance of music, and the responses to the prayers. A new code of by-laws having been read the first time, and a printed copy ordered to be sent to every member for approval or otherwise, the lodge was closed in harmony in the usual manner. The brethren then adjourned to spend an hour or two in conviviality, when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to. "The Visitors" was replied to by Bros. T. G. Knowles, (W.M. 1055), W. Cook, (P.M. 448), and Fred Scholefield, (Edinburgh.)

STOKESLEY.—Cleveland Lodge, No. 543.—The monthly meeting of this lodge was held in the lodge-room, at the Golden Lion Hotel, on Monday evening last. Present: Bros. Stephen Hunter, P.M., W.M.; Henry Fawcett, B.A., S.W.; George Markham Tweddell, F.S.A. Scot., in the absence of his son, as J.W.; J. H. Handyside, P.M., as S.D.; John Rontree, as J.D.; and William Weatherill, as I.G. The lodge being duly opened and the minutes of the preceding meeting confirmed, three candidates, who had been balloted for on the previous lodge-night, were initiated into the mysteries of Ancient Freemasonry, and retired; after which, the lodge being opened in the third degree, Bro. the Rev. Spencer Cubitt, curate of Stokesley, was raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The lodge was then properly closed, and the brethren departed in peace and harmony.

CONSECRATION OF THE GROSVENOR LODGE (No. 1257), PIMLICO.

It is now some years since a lodge was located in this district, the last being the Leigh Lodge, No. 957, which removed to Freemasons' Hall, there being at that time no fitting place to hold a lodge in Pimlico. The Metropolitan District Railway Station lately opened there having been selected as a suitable place for the purpose, not only for the Brethren in the immediate locality, but from its accessibility to all parts of the metropolis and S.W. suburbs, a petition was presented to the M.W. Grand Master, praying for a warrant, which his lordship has been pleased to grant, on condition that the lodge should not be removed from Pimlico. The name selected not only serves to hand down the name of an illustrious member of our noble Craft, but also to connect the lodge with its local habitation. It was hoped that the V.W. Grand Sec. would consecrate the lodge, but other engagements obliged him to decline, when the M.W. Grand Master was pleased to appoint Bro. Terry, P.M. 225, and P.Z. 975, to perform that ceremony, and the 24th April was fixed for that purpose.

The brethren met at 4 o'clock, and were duly marshalled by the Director of Ceremonies, Bro. Davis, P.M. 228, and entered the room in procession. The S.W. chair was filled by Bro. Tamfield, P.A. Grand Sec., and that of the J.W. by Bro. Mason, P.G.S.B. The lodge was duly opened by the consecrating Master, and the petition warrant having been read, he delivered an oration; the anthem, "Behold how good and joyful," was then sung by Bros. Montem, Smith, Lawler, and Distin. Brother Jekyl presiding at the harmonium. The solemn ceremony of consecration was then proceeded with by Bro. Terry, assisted by Bro. Hosgood and several other Past Masters, and the lodge was dedicated to Masonry, Virtue, and Universal Benevolence, and was declared duly consecrated, and dedicated according to ancient form. The anthem, "Glory to God on High," was then sung. The W.M. designate, Bro. Cotteburne, P.M., 733 and 759, was then duly installed into the chair by Bro. Terry. The following brethren were appointed officers of the new lodge: Bros. Moginie, 172, S.W.; Gee, 145, J.W.; Williams, 145, S.D.; Dr. Ward, 453, J.D.; Swallow, 382, D.C.; Bethell, 30 and 186, W.S. Bro. Parker, 172, was then duly elected Treasurer, Bro. Coulton was chosen Secretary, and Woodstock, Tyler. Several brethren were proposed as joining members. We must say that we never witnessed the consecration of a lodge where the proceedings went off with more éclat than on this occasion—the addresses and oration delivered being faultless; and to show the high appreciation of Bro. Terry's kindness and ability, the members elected him an honorary member, and expressed a hope that they should often have the pleasure of seeing him amongst them. The musical parts were also well arranged by Bro. Carter, P.M., 382, and beautifully rendered. After the lodge was closed the brethren adjourned to a sumptuous banquet, provided by Bro. Fisher, who so admirably caters for the refreshment department in this station; the wines were of excellent quality. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and duly responded to, and during the course of the evening the musical brethren evinced their talent by some capital songs, with accompaniment on the piano. Among the visitors were Bros. Farnfield, P.G.A.S.; Mason, P.G.S.B.; W. Ough, Asst. G.P.; Hosgood, P.M., 192; Meredith, 87; Cockerell, P.M. 957; and Dodd, J.W. 1194.

FREEMASONRY AND POLITICS.

The following letter appeared lately in the Cork Constitution:—

"Sir,—In the Craftsman and British American Masonic Record, Hamilton, Ontario, the following article may be read. It is copied into the Craftsman from the Square and Compass. You may also read in pages 33 and 34 an account of the noble conduct of the Emir Abd-el-Kader, when a horde of fanatical and rebellious Mussulmen rushed into his palace in 1860 to butcher the Christians who sought his protection. It is thus told:—'In the midst of those scenes of bloodshed and murder stood Abd-el-Kader, unarmed and accompanied by only a few of his faithful followers, but determined to save the enemies of his faith from the clutches of that bloodthirsty mob. "The Christians! the Christians!" cried these enraged men; "Deliver up to us the Christians, you infidel, or else you will share the same fate with them; we will destroy you altogether with your new brothers." "The Christians!" replied Abd-el-Kader, whose eyes sparkled with anger, "so long as one of these brave soldiers around me stands on his legs I will not deliver them up to you, for they are my guests. Ye murderers of women and children! only attempt to take out of my house those Christians to whom I have given refuge, and you will experience how the warriors of Abd-el-Kader understood to give language to powder." This war-cry ended the strife, and 12,000 Christians were saved. The Lodge Henry IV. of Paris, was the first that congratulated the Emir on the courage he displayed during these frightful occurrences, and on the 18th of June, 1861, he was admitted into Masonry into the Lodge of the Pyramids. Abd-el-Kader viewed Freemasonry as the first institution in the world. According to his opinion, every man was imperfect who did not confess the Masonic principles. He hoped that Freemasonry would some day spread over the globe; so soon as that had taken place all the peoples would live together in peace and fraternity. Such were the sentiments of the Mussulman who calls Allah his God, and Mahomet his prophet.'

I am, Mr. Editor, yours truly,
W. H. S., Master Mason, Cork.

PAISLEY FREE LIBRARY & MUSEUM.

MEMORIAL STONE PROCEEDINGS.

On the afternoon of Tuesday, the 27th April, the memorial stone of a building which is to contain a Free Library and Museum for the use of the community of Paisley, was laid with full Masonic honours by the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, K.T., Grand Master of Masons in Scotland.

The history of this institution is so creditable, and so well worthy of imitation by the affluent in other towns, that we shall indicate it briefly before narrating the proceedings of Tuesday. Some years ago the Rev. William Fraser brought under the notice of the Philosophical Society of Paisley a scheme for the establishment of a library and museum, to which the public should have free access. He had calculated that an expenditure of about £3000 would erect a building amply suited to the purpose, and he proposed that an endeavour should be made to get ten gentlemen to raise that amount by subscriptions of £300 each. The scheme was favourably received, and some progress was made in obtaining subscribers, but as time went on interest in the matter decreased, and in all probability no practical result would have been gained had not a gentleman of more than ordinary public spirit and munificence come to the rescue. All the world nearly has heard of the house of J. and P. Coats, in connection with the manufacture of threads, and now another and higher species of fame connects itself with the partners of that firm. Twelve months ago we noticed the gift to Paisley by Mr. Thomas Coats of Ferguslie, of the magnificent park known as the Fountain Gardens, and to-day we record with equal pleasure that Mr. Peter Coats, of Woodside, anxious, like his brother, to serve the best interests of his fellow townsmen, and taking up the library and museum scheme of Mr. Fraser, has at a cost, it is said, of something like £12,000, procured the establishment of an institution, which, when completed, will stand first of its kind in Scotland. The site is in High street—the main thoroughfare of Paisley—and the building, now far advanced towards completion, is designed in the Ionic style of Grecian architecture. The principal feature of the facade is a portico over the main entrance door, measuring 48 feet in height to the top of the pediment. An imposing flight of steps, extending across the whole width of the portico, leads up to the door. On entering, one finds on the right an apartment appropriated as a reading room in connection with the library. In front is the museum, and on the left a lecture hall, 50 feet long by 35 feet in width. Communicating with this hall, but at the same time having an entrance at the west end of the building, are a large committee room and retiring rooms. At the east end is a handsome porch giving access to the lending-out department of the library, as also to a department designed for the reception of specifications. The principal room of the museum, on the ground floor, has a length of 45 feet, and a width of 30 feet; while above there is a gallery measuring 102 feet by 30 feet, to which access is provided by a spacious staircase. The latter apartment will be lighted from the roof. The work is being carried out from the designs, and under the supervision of Mr. John Honeyman, L.A., of Glasgow.

Paisley held high holiday yesterday in honour of so interesting an occasion. With few exceptions business was suspended in the town and immediate neighbourhood, and the community, young and old alike, concerned themselves solely with the event of the day. In the matter of decoration the grey old town presented quite a festive appearance. In the leading thoroughfares almost no house but displayed from its windows drapings of lively hue, and even in out-of-the-way streets there were numerous indications that the inhabitants regarded the day as one worthy of being particularised in this manner. Fronts of large buildings were hidden with foliage, flags waved from every available pinnacle, and triumphal arches spanned the streets at various points. Here and there a householder with the Paisley tendency to poetry, had announced to passers-by that "With Coats's thread we go ahead," or that "recorded in historic pages" the names of the donor of the Fountain Gardens and the Free Library would "glow in future ages," while some one, humorously given, asked the question, "What would the Seestubodies do without their Coats?" The weather, fortunately, was of the most brilliant kind, and the effect of the decorations was very fine.

The business of the day began at one o'clock, when the Grand Lodge of Scotland met and was constituted in the County Hall. The Worshipful Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, K.T., occupied the throne, and was supported by Colonel Campbell of Blythwood, Acting Deputy Grand Master; Sir M. R. S. Stewart, Bart., Acting Substitute Grand Master; William Mann, Senior Grand Warden; William Officer, Junior Grand Warden; Rev. V. G. Faithful, Grand Chaplain; Daniel Robertson, Grand Bible Bearer; Alex. Hay, Grand Jeweller; Owen Gough, President of Grand Stewards; J. W. McCulloch, Vice-President of G. Stewards; William L. Laurie, G. Secretary; A. J. Stewart, Grand Clerk; John Coghill, Chief Grand Mareschal; and John Laurie, Grand Mareschal. While the Grand Lodge was being opened, the general body of processionists formed in County-square and the adjoining streets, and shortly after two o'clock started in the following order:—Farmers, carters, &c., on horseback; Rifle Volunteers; Captain Ingram, Grand Marshal; Ferguslie Workers; Tinplate Workers; Knight of Malta Lodge; Weavers; Plasterers; Bricklayers; Plumbers; Blacksmiths; Oddfellows; Clothlappers; Boilermakers; Amalgamated Engineers; Order of Foresters; Operative Bakers; Amalgamated Tailors; Joiners; Dyers; United Operative Masons; Amalgamated Slaters; Royal St. Crispin Lodge; Independent Slaters; Glenfield Workers; Burgh Officials; the Sheriff and M.P. for the Burgh; the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council; the Justices of the Peace, Clergy, Physicians, and Writers; the Incorporated Societies in their order; University Students; the Philosophical Society and Curators of Paisley Library; the Architect and Builder of the Library; Guard of Honour; the Provincial and Local Lodges in their order; the Grand Lodge; the Earl of Dalhousie, W.G.M.; Guard of Honour.

The following Masonic Lodges were represented:—Provincial Grand Lodge of Glasgow; Provincial Grand Lodge of Renfrewshire, West; Provincial Grand Lodge of Renfrewshire, East; Mother Kilwinning; 3, St. John, Glasgow; 4, Glasgow Kilwinning; 7, Hamilton Kilwinning; 8, Journeymen, Edinburgh; 9, Dunblane; 12, Greenock Kilwinning; 18, Dumbarton Kilwinning; 20, St. John, Desmahagow; 21, Old St. John, Lanark; 22, St. John Kilwinning, Kilmarnock; 27, St. Mungo, Glasgow; 28, St. John Kilwinning, Kirkintilloch; 31, St. Mary, Coltness; 39, St. John, Kilsyth; 46, St. John, Auchterarder; 47, Operative, Dundee; 51, London Kilwinning, Newmilns; 57, St. John Kilwinning, Haddington; 68, Doric Kilwinning, Port Glasgow; 69, Alloa; 73, Thistle and Rose, Glasgow; 86, Navigation, Troon; 87, Thistle, Glasgow; 88, Montrose, New Monkland; 103, Union and Crown, Glasgow; 109, St. Marnock, Kilmarnock; 117, St. Mary, Partick; 122, Royal Arch, Perth; 126, St. Andrew, Kilmarnock; 127, Thistle, Stewarton; 128, St. John, Shettleston; 129, St. Mirrin, Paisley; 147, Cadder, Argyle; 149, St. Andrew, Irvine; 156, Royal Arch, Pollokshaws; 156, St. Barchan, Kilbarchan; 157, St. John, Beith; 160, Roman Eagle, Edinburgh; 169, Thistle and Rose, Stevenston; 170, St. John, Leven; 171, St. James, Doune; 175, St. John, Greenock; 177, St. James, Old Monkland; 178, Scotia, Glasgow; 179, St. Mungo, Mauchline; 187, St. John, Carluke; 201, St. Thomas, Muirkirk; 202, St. Clement, Riccarton; 204, St. Paul, Ayr; 205, Garthland, St. Winnoch; 215, St. Andrew, Strathaven; 219, Star, Glasgow; 230, St. Barnabas, Old Comnock; 233, Hamilton; 242, Houston St. Johnstone; 244, Union, Stonehouse; 250, Union, Dunfermline; 252, St. John, Thornhill; 272, St. John, Mid-Calder; 275, Shamrock and Thistle, Glasgow; 290, Blair, Dalry; 291, Celtic, Edinburgh and Leith; 292, St. John, Rothesay; 306, St. Thomas, Larkhall; 320, St. John Kilwinning, Ardrossan; 321, St. Andrew, Alexandria; 332, Union, Glasgow; 335, Argyle, Dunoon; 347, St. John, Rutherglen; 354, Caledonian Railway, Glasgow; 360, Commercial, Glasgow; 362, St. Clair, Glasgow; 370, Renfrew Co. Kilwinning, Paisley; 384, Athole, Kirkintilloch; 392, Caledonian, Edinburgh; 399, Royal Blues, Kilbirnie; 408, Clyde, Glasgow; 413, Athole, Glasgow; 419, Neptune, Glasgow; 426, Prince of Wales, Renfrew; 427, St. Clair, Cambusnethan; 437, Govandale, Govan; 441, Glasgow, Glasgow; 442, Neptune, Ardrossan; 458, St. John, Busby; 466, St. Andrew, Glasgow. The foregoing are all the Lodges we are enabled to particularise. There were, however, several others represented. The entire number of lodges, we understand, was 109, and the total number of brethren 4300.

The route of procession was through Love Street, Wallace Street, New Sneddon, Gilmour Street, Old Bridge, Gauze Street, Thread Street, Bridge Street, Orchard Street, Causeyside, George Street, Broomlands, and Wellmeadow to the new building. As it turned out, this route was over long, and owing to the crowded state of the streets the main body of the processionists did not reach High Street until about 4 o'clock. The arrangements at the new building were entirely satisfactory to all concerned. The memorial stone was laid in the facade, to the right and left of which accommodation had been provided for a considerable number of ladies and gentlemen. The Grand Lodge took up position close to the stone, the Provost and Magistrates, Sheriff Fraser, Mr. Crum Ewing, M.P., and others, being in the immediate neighbourhood. The proceedings were opened by Mr. Peter Coats presenting a handsome silver trowel to the Worshipful Grand Master.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE, in reply, said—Mr. Coats, I have had the honour of laying the foundation stones of various public buildings, both in Scotland and in England, but on the present occasion I feel particularly gratified at being invited, as Grand Master Mason of Scotland, to lay the memorial stone of a building which will convey to this town so many important benefits, and which, I am proud to say, has been presented by one whose generosity is respected wherever it is known by all. (Applause.) I am proud, Sir, that I have received this presentation at your hands. Be assured your gifts will be held amongst my best regarded treasures, and that so long as I am spared I shall remember the pleasure and the honour which has been conferred upon me this day. (Applause.)

The Grand Chaplain then offered up prayer; after which the Grand Master directed the treasurer, secretary, and clerk to place the coins, &c., in the cavity of the stone, and the architect to bring forward the necessary workmen. These duties having been performed, the stone was lowered to its bed, and the proper officers applied the plumb, level, and square, and certified that the work had been executed according to the rules of Masonry. Thereupon the Grand Master, giving the stone three knocks, said—"May the Almighty Architect of the Universe look down with benignity upon our present undertaking, and crown the edifice, of which we have now laid a memorial stone, with every success." The cornucopia was then delivered to the Substitute Grand Master, the vase with wine to the Senior Grand Warden, and the vase with oil to the Junior Grand Warden, and the contents of each thrown on the newly-laid stone by the Grand Master. The ceremony closed with prayer.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE then spoke as follows:—

Provost Macfarlane, Mr. Coats, ladies and gentlemen, and brethren all—I have now to make to you the formal announcement that, in compliance with the wish of the Provost of this burgh, I have laid the memorial stone of this building, which, I trust, under the providence of the Almighty, may speedily be finished without accident to limb or life, and may long remain an ornament to your town. But, Mr. Provost, the mere outward aspect of this building is trifling in comparison with what will, I trust, be seen within. In the first place it is the gift, the munificent gift, of a townsman to the town in which he was born. In the next place, it is dedicated to the noblest of all purposes—not for the original and primary education of the people, but, being educated, to carry them on in the march of intellect; and it is a roof under which they will find the means of cultivating that knowledge which will raise them from the class in which they began life, it may be to the highest class in this great country. It is necessary for me to dilate upon the benefits which an institution like this is enabled and has power to confer upon any community. Here the industrious will find leisure to cultivate their understandings, and here, I trust, the idle may be induced to come, first, perhaps, from curiosity, and secondly from having seen the benefits which may be derived from the use of that Free Library which is to be established in this place. There is to be here a Free Library in which you may read of the glories of the past; not simply and only of the glories of war, but of the far higher glories of peace and industry and intelligence, and of the secrets and of the growth of that religion which has made this country what it is. (Applause.) Here too, you will find that which is not the least of all useful knowledge—a constant supply of the literature of the day. It will keep you informed of what is going on, of the laws which are made, and of the encouragement which is given to those who obey the laws; and it will keep you informed also of the course pursued by those by whom we are governed, and of that Parliament whose directions it is our duty to follow. Under this roof also you will find a public Museum, in which, I have no doubt, there will be accumulated treasures of every description from all parts of the world. You will have the opportunity of studying the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms, and you will also have it in your power to trace that which many have wasted their days without succeeding in tracing—viz., the combination of those arts and sciences which have placed this country in the high position in which it stands. Mr. Provost, and ladies and gentlemen, I cannot conclude this short address without expressing to the brethren who have attended here to-day my thanks for the honour which they have done the Grand Lodge in turning out in such large numbers. Brethren, you have witnessed a great and glorious sight, and it has been your privilege to assist in putting the memorial-stone upon a great and glorious work. Evidences such as this, of the generosity of those who rise to wealth and affluence, are but too rarely seen, though I am proud to say they have been frequently witnessed in our own country; and I am sure I cannot conclude this day's work more to your satisfaction, and certainly not more to my own, than by proposing that we give three cheers for that generous man to whose large heartedness we are indebted for the work we have just been engaged in. (Loud cheers.)

PROVOST MACFARLANE—My Lord, in behalf of the inhabitants of Paisley I have to tender you our most grateful thanks for your condescension and kindness of coming here to-day, for the very important work that you have performed, and for the large representation of the Grand Lodge and of the other lodges throughout Scotland that has attended on this occasion. We are gratified beyond measure at the very successful carrying through of this day's ceremony. (Applause.)

The Earl of DALHOUSIE then called for three cheers for Her Majesty the Queen; and a similar compliment having been paid his Lordship and the ladies present, the procession reassembled and returned to County Square. In closing the Grand Lodge, the noble Earl conveyed through the masters and wardens present his thanks to the various lodges represented for the admirable manner in which they had adhered to the prescribed arrangements. We may add to this that the authorities and inhabitants of Paisley deserve great credit for the orderly way in which the day's proceedings were conducted.

BANQUET IN THE DRILL HALL.

The memorial-stone ceremonial was followed by a public banquet, which took place in the Drill Hall. The hall was tastefully decorated for the occasion with flags and evergreens. At one end the chairman's platform was erected, while the general company were seated at five tables, which extended along the whole length of the spacious hall. In all, there were probably about 400 persons present. The chair was occupied by Provost Macfarlane; while the duties of croupiers were discharged by Bailies Masson, Watson, Eaglesim, and Caldwell, and Treasurer Russell. The Chairman was supported on the right by the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, K.T.; Sir M. S. Stewart, Bart.; Mr. H. E. Crum Ewing, M.P.; Mr. Thos. Coats, of Ferguslie; Mr. Wm. M'Ewen, Lord Dean of Guild, Glasgow; Capt. Smyth, Mr. James Arthur, of Barshaw; Rev. Mr. Faithful, Edinburgh; and on the left by Mr. Peter Coats, of Woodside; Sheriff Cowen, Col. Campbell, of Blythswood; Major Holms, Captain Carlisle, R.R.V.; the Rev. James Brown, Mr. A. Galbraith, Glasgow; Mr. P. Comyn Macgregor, of Brediland; Mr. David M'Cubbin, Glasgow; Mr. James Mr. James Moncrieff, Glasgow; Mr. D. G. Sharp, and R. D. Robertson.

The Rev. Mr. DUNCAN, Middle Parish Church, having asked a blessing, dinner was partaken of, thanks being returned by the Rev. Mr. France.

The CHAIRMAN afterwards said apologies for absence had been received from a number of gentlemen, amongst others from Mr. Speir, Convener of the County, who very much regretted that on account of a severe bereavement in his family, he was prevented from being present. An apology for absence had also been received from the Rev. Dr. Burns of Toronto, who was unable to be present in consequence of the death of a very near relative. Colonel Mure, also, who was in the south, had expressed regret at his inability to attend. It was further intimated that Sheriff Fraser required to leave for Edinburgh immediately after the foundation stone ceremony.

Thereafter the ordinary loyal toasts were given from the chair, and heartily responded to. The toast of "The Army and Navy, and the Volunteers" was afterwards given by Bailie Masson, the name of Captain Smyth being coupled with the Army, and that of Major Holms with the Volunteers. These gentlemen replied for the respective branches of the services.

Mr. H. E. CRUM EWING, M.P., afterwards said—The toast which has been committed to my hands is "The Health of Her Majesty's Ministers." But, before proceeding to give that toast I may be allowed in the fullness of my heart, to allude in a single word to the munificence of my excellent friend Mr. Peter Coats, which has been the means of calling us together this day; and I must say that a more suitable gift could not have been given to the town of Paisley than that which he has this day bestowed. (Applause.) That instance of private liberality is almost unequalled, except by that of his esteemed brother Mr. Thomas Coats, and it is a rare case when two such brothers exist in any one community. (Applause.) But I do not wish to trench upon what is the province of whoever may be giving the health of our esteemed friend Mr. Peter Coats, and I shall therefore proceed to give the toast which has been put into my hands. Since I have been your member, now for a considerable number of years, I have sat sometimes on one side of the House and sometimes on the other—sometimes on the right hand of the Speaker, at others on the shady side of the Opposition. But my observation has been, that whoever have been in the government of this country have been men of consummate ability, of the most inflexible integrity, and men who have had only one end in view, namely, the good of their country. (Applause.) I beg to propose "Her Majesty's Ministers."

The CHAIRMAN next gave "The Lord Lieutenant." He said,—In this country we have had the privilege of having as the representative of her Majesty amongst us a nobleman who resided in our immediate neighbourhood, and who was very highly respected and esteemed by all with whom he came in contact. (Applause.) He has lately been removed from amongst us by death, and I am sure that in consequence of that event a very general feeling of regret was cherished by this entire community, and of sympathy for his bereaved partner in life. He was taken from us in mature years, after he had long resided in our neighbourhood, and was respected and esteemed by us all (applause), and in introducing the next toast, I feel that I ought in a single word to express my own feeling, and I doubt not I may say the feeling of this large assembly, of regret for the death of our late Lord Lieutenant, the Earl of Glasgow. It is, however, fortunate for the county that his lordship is succeeded by one who is universally known and esteemed—(loud applause)—and on this, I may say, his first public appearance in the capacity of Lord Lieutenant of this county, I do require to say that you will give him a hearty welcome. (Loud applause.) Sir Michael Shaw Stewart has been long known and respected by this community. He has long taken an active part in the public business of this county, and he is known to take a deep interest in everything that relates to the welfare and prosperity of its inhabitants. (Applause.) I have very great pleasure in proposing to you the health of Sir Michael Robert Shaw Stewart, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Renfrew. (Applause.)

The LORD LIEUTENANT, who was very cordially received, said—The Provost, in so kindly proposing my health, has truly said that this is my first public appearance as Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Renfrew. (Applause.) I have often had the honour of returning thanks for my health being drunk in the good old town of Paisley, and I may say that I have appeared in a good many characters, so to speak, in this Drill Hall—(hear, hear)—but it certainly is a very novel sensation for me to return thanks to you as Lord-Lieutenant of the county. (Applause.) I may say at once that I am not going to follow my honourable friend Mr. Crum Ewing into the higher regions. (Laughter and loud applause.) The sun, the moon, and the stars are very magnificent, but I think I shall feel much safer, for the present at any rate, on this platform. (Laughter and applause.) In returning thanks for the very kind way in which you have received my name, I feel that I should be wanting in proper feeling if I thought only of my own position. I could not have done so after the very proper remarks made by your Chairman in proposing this toast, but I should be unfeeling and ungrateful if I did not at this moment reflect upon the circumstances which have led to a new appointment of a Lord-Lieutenant in this county. This is not the occasion on which to enlarge on the merits and good qualities of the late Earl of Glasgow, more particularly as these have been so gracefully alluded to by the Provost, but I may say that in him I have lost a true and a kind friend. (Hear, hear and applause.) I had perhaps as frequent opportunities as any one in this assembly of knowing the manner in which Lord Glasgow discharged the public duties pertaining to his office, and those who had to do with his Lordship in his public capacity know very well the prompt and ready attention he always gave to public business, and the sound judgment and good heart which he displayed in all his actions. (Applause.) I am sure of this, that the present generation in the town of Paisley will not cease to remember, and those who follow them will learn and cherish, the great munificence—the noble-hearted, noble-handed charity of the Earl of Glasgow in times of distress in this community. (Applause.) I can only say for myself that it will be my earnest endeavour to discharge the duties which devolve upon me in a business-like manner, and let me say that on this, my first public appearance, I receive as very kind on your part the cordial reception which you have given to this toast, and I assure you it will be an encouragement to me that I have received from so large an assembly so fair a start. (Applause.) Allow me to add that it is a great pleasure to me to have taken part in the proceedings to-day, so ably conducted by the Right Worshipful Grand Master Mason of Scotland, on the occasion of, I cannot say the first, but the latest munificent action on the part of the Messrs. Coats of Paisley—(applause)—whose great munificence and genuine simplicity of character are proverbial in the West of Scotland.

THE CHAIRMAN afterwards said—I have now the honour of proposing the toast of the evening, "The Grand Lodge of Scotland and the Most Worshipful the Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie." I am sure I speak the sentiments of my townsmen when I say that we feel very highly honoured indeed to be permitted to entertain his lordship this evening. (Applause.) As Grand Master of the ancient brethren of the masonic craft, he has at considerable personal inconvenience come to our old town to-day to perform a very important duty. Surrounded by an assembly of the brethren to the number of upwards of 4000, he has laid the memorial stone of the Free Library and Museum of Paisley—a memorial stone that may tell to some future age the story of that building—may tell how a patriotic nobleman summoned not his clansmen from the hills, although he might have done so, and thousands would have responded to his call, but summoned the brethren of the mystic tie, a more ancient order than that of the clans, and from all quarters they come, not singly but in battalions—may tell also of the giver of that building to his townsmen, and the purpose to which he intends that it should be dedicated. (Applause.)

The toast was pledged amidst loud applause.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE replied in a most earnest and eloquent speech, concluding thus: My acquaintances and my affections, although they rest upon the Lord-Lieutenant, are more dearly and more closely associated with those who went before him. I numbered amongst my intimate friends his father, his uncle Patrick, whom you all new and loved, and I think I can number among my living friends that roaring, excellent blade Houston, than whom a merrier man or a truer friend never existed in this world. (Applause.) It has given me sincere satisfaction to see the Stewards of Ardgowan placed at the head of the county of Renfrew. We have a Stewart—the descendant of a Stewart, at least—the Baron of Renfrew; and now we have a Stewart, a legitimate and long descended Steward, Lord Lieutenant of the county. (Applause.) There are pleasant things to look upon. The time is drawing near when I may look upon fewer pleasant things than I have, and therefore every one that I do see is more stamped upon my imagination, and I rejoice in it the more. (Applause.) Gentlemen, I thank you cordially for the manner in which you have expressed your opinion with regard to the turn-out of the Grand Lodge this day. I shall make a special statement at the next meeting at Grand Lodge of the reception with which you have honoured us, and all I can say is, that if on any other occasion you have buildings to erect—(prolonged applause)—and if you have on this occasion found us to be “bonny lads” you may bid us “aye come back again.” (Laughter and applause.)

The Earl of DALHOUSIE afterwards said—I am extremely sorry to be obliged to be guilty of what may appear somewhat indecorous contradiction of our excellent Chairman, the Provost. He stated to you just now that he rose to propose the toast of the day. Now I dispute that position with him entirely. (Laughter and applause.) I think that the honour of proposing the toast of the day has, whether intentionally or unintentionally, been devolved upon my shoulders. I wish it had fallen on the shoulders of the Provost, because whilst I was considering how I should introduce the subject of the toast of the day, first of all a gallant volunteer got up and took the wind out of my main-sail—(laughter)—and then the Member for the burgh got up and he took the wind out of the other sails—(renewed laughter)—so I found after all that the best thing I could do was to follow modern invention, and to try and do a little by steam. (Laughter and prolonged applause.) I am sure, gentlemen, you will have anticipated me when I say that the toast to which I shall ask you to drink is the health of Mr. Peter Coats, the donor of the building of which we have this day laid the foundation-stone. (Loud applause, the company rising and waving their handkerchiefs.) Well may you rise, gentlemen, with these signs of approbation. A townsman of that cast is not to be lightly valued. He has given to his native town an institution in which is to be cherished the love of science, the love of letters, the pursuit of knowledge of all descriptions—knowledge which tends to soften the savage mind, and to bring the infant minds of the rising and the minds of the present generation into harmony with the civilisation, advancing as it is, of the day. Gentlemen, we have all of us seen, in these money-making days, men advancing in the accumulation of wealth, and we have seen that wealth turned only to selfish purposes or to self-indulgence. I say, perish such wealth in the using. (Applause.) But men founding their own fortune, rising upon that foundation, as these two brothers have done, to eminence in their own locality and gathering the lawful gains of their industry, not to spend them in self-indulgence, but to make them the means of pouring blessings upon those among whom they live—all honour, I say, to such wealth—(applause)—all honour to the industry and activity of those who have accumulated it. (Applause.) Gentlemen, I trust that Providence may long spare these two brothers to see fruit from their handiwork—the one to see the fruit which is to be derived from those fields which he has laid out for the healthful recreation of the community; the other to see fruit arise within the building which he has founded to enoble the minds of his fellow townspeople, and to teach them those lessons which will make them examples to every manufacturing town in the country. (Applause.) I cannot conclude these observations without saying how much gratification I derived from the conduct of the inhabitants of the town this day. (Applause.) The Sheriff has said that he has painful duties to perform in his locality. I should imagine they were far less painful than in that locality from which I myself come. When I contrast the behaviour of the inhabitants of Paisley this day with that of any other large town in which I have seen similar exhibitions. I can only say this, that not seeing a policeman, except with the magistrates—(laughter and applause)—throughout the whole of this day, I did not observe either the most remote approach to a breach of the peace, nor even an act of incivility on the part of any of the townspeople. (Applause.) I have derived great pleasure from my visit here; but the greatest I have derived is that of shaking hands left and right with two such brothers as Peter and Thomas Coats. (Applause.) I now ask you to give what I think I have almost proved to be the toast of the evening, the health of Mr. Peter Coats. (Applause.)

Mr. COATS, who, on rising to reply, was received with loud applause, said: I rise, I assure you, with very trying feelings to respond to the toast of my health, which has been proposed by his lordship in flattering terms of which I consider that I am altogether unworthy, and responded to by this large assembly with such cordiality. (Applause.) I regret very much that I cannot adequately thank you for your kindness. My friend, Provost Macfarlane, knows very well that my wish was that the ceremony of this day should be conducted in a much more private manner than has proved the case—(hear, hear)—but I yielded to the solicitations of my friend, knowing that his intention was so good. It was my intention to have said something to-night in regard to the institution of which the foundation-stone has been laid to-day, but I have learned from my friend the Provost that that our speeches are to be brief, and I am thankful that he has given me such a hint. You will perhaps think it excusable that the events of to-day have tended to embarrass and excite me, and I shall therefore content myself with acknowledging, as I do with heartfelt gratitude, the flattering manner in which my health has been proposed and responded to. (Loud applause.)

The remaining toasts were “The Clergy,” “The M.P. for the Burgh,” “The M.P. for the County,” and “The Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council.” In the course of the evening, several capital songs were sung by members of the company, and music appropriate to the toasts were rendered by an instrumental band in attendance. The proceedings were very pleasant and successful.

LODGE OF PRUDENT BRETHREN.

PRESENTATION TO BR. G. S. STATES, SECRETARY.

On Tuesday evening last a meeting of this numerous and influential Lodge was held at the Freemason's Hall, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields. Br. H. Phipps Allender, W.M., occupied the Chair of K.S., and was ably supported by the following officers:—Thomas Moore, S.W.; W. J. Walter, J.W.; J. Boyd, Treasurer; George S. States, P.M. Grand Steward's Lodge 172, 166, P.G.S., &c., &c.; W. J. Brown, S.D.; Cambridge, J.D.; George Wood, Director of Ceremonies; George Pitt, I.G., the ever-agreeable William Watson, Wine Steward; J. G. Brown, Assistant Secretary; Hoare, P.G.S., Tyler, &c. Amongst the Past Masters were Brs. George Sharpe, R. A. Brown, and William Carter. The visitors were, Brs. Morris (P.M. Phoenix, 173), Platt (Globe, 23) E. Massey, S.W. (Beadon, 619), Reid, P.M. (Westbourne 733), J. B. Reid, (J.D. Strawberry Hill, 946), Bibb, (United Strength, 223), Peirce (Belgrave, 749), Rance, (Industry, 186), Vaughan (Confidence, 193), Fyfe (Philanthropic), C. Ireland (Eleusis, Boston, U.S.A.), Charles Sloman (45, &c.), and Charles E. Thompson (1158 & 177).

The Lodge was opened in due form, and with solemn prayer, and the minutes of the previous meeting read and confirmed.

The only Masonic business done was rendered in an exemplary manner by the W.M. Br. Phipps Allender, and elicited the warmest approval from the brethren, and consisted of one passing and one raising.

The Lodge was then called off, and the brethren adjourned to an excellent dinner served under the management of (as usual) of Br. C. Gosden, and which gave universal satisfaction. The office of wine steward, (on such an occasion no sinecure), was ably filled by the veteran in Freemasonry, Br. W. Watson.

After the cloth had been drawn,

BR. ALLENDER, W.M., (who, we understood, had attended, although suffering from indisposition, in order to be present on this unusual occasion) rose, and proposed the first toast. He said, amongst Masons the Queen was always first in their thoughts, and to render it a Masonic toast, he coupled with it the “Craft.” Her most gracious Majesty the Queen was so much respected and admired that anything like eulogy on his part would almost amount to impertinence. He therefore called upon them to drink to the “Queen and the Craft.”

The national anthem was then sung, the solo parts being given by Brs. Carter and Theodore Distin.

The Worshipful MASTER then proposed the health of the Sovereign in Freemasonry, the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Masons, who for twenty-five years had presided over them with so much honour. It was almost needless to say anything about the universal courtesy with which he treated the brethren with whom he came in contact (hear, hear), nor was it worth while to say anything about his Masonic talents. (Cheers.)

The toast it is almost unnecessary to say, was received with applause, and a really good fire given.

The Worshipful MASTER proposed the health of the Earl de Grey and Ripon, the Deputy Grand Master, and said, all who were in the habit of attending Grand Lodge are aware of his abilities, and when the time should come when he would be Grand Master he was quite sure he would give the same satisfaction as he did in his present position. (Cheers.)

Br. Carter, “Teach me, Mary, how to woo thee.”

BR. SHARP, I.P.M., proposed the health of Br. Allender, the W.M. He said, for the very able and efficient manner in which he had discharged his duties he was entitled to their respect and warmest approval. He had only been a member of the Prudent Brethren Lodge for a few years, and yet he had arrived at the honourable position he then filled. His progress in the Craft would, he trusted, act as an incentive to his younger brethren to work with the same diligence. He thought they were very much indebted to him for presiding over them, and trusted they would drink to his good health, long life, and prosperity, in bumpers.

The toast was well received.

Br. THEODORE DISTIN sang “Savourneen Deelish,” which was applauded.

The Worshipful MASTER said, Br. Sharp. Past Masters, Wardens, and Brethren, it is with diffidence that I rise to return thanks for the kind manner in which you have proposed and responded to the toast. I feel that our Br. Sharp has given me more credit than I deserve, although it is quite true I am but a young member of this Lodge. I should not have been in this position had it not been for the kind instruction I have received from our brother Past Masters, it would be invidious to particularise, but I will venture to mention our Brs. States, Sharp, Browning, and Carter, (hear, hear), and I cannot help saying that I feel bound to do my best for the Lodge, so that I may not bring discredit upon them. If my efforts have met with your approbation I can assure you I am amply repaid. (Cheers.)

The next toast was the health of the ever-genial kind-hearted Bro. States the Sec., and in speaking of him the W.M. said he was an excellent and worthy Mason, and he wished him long life and happiness. He (W.M.) then, by the power invested in him, resumed the lodge from refreshment to labour, for the purpose of presenting to Bro. G. S. States, the Secretary of the lodge, a very handsome testimonial, consisting of an engrossing in a handsome frame surmounted by the Masonic emblems and the number of the lodge.

The engrossing, which was elaborately got up was as follows:—

Testimonial, from the Lodge of Prudent Brethren, No. 145, to BRO. GEORGE STATES.

Dear Sir and Brother,—We beg sincerely to testify to you our high esteem and best thanks for the very able manner in which you performed the duties of the secretary of this lodge for the last four years, and hope that this Testimonial will be a convincing proof that where true Masonic feeling and ability are displayed, the brethren will never fail to award their approbation.

With kind regards towards yourself, as well as our best wishes for your health, happiness, and prosperity, we subscribe ourselves, on behalf of the brethren, yours fraternally and faithfully,

JOHN BOYD, President.

GEORGE JOSEPH SHARPE, Vice-President.

GEORGE WOOD, Treasurer and Secretary.

27th April, 1869.

This was accompanied by a handsome “Centre-piece,” which was made of solid silver, weighing about 90 ozs. and of the value of about £100, upon which was the following inscription:—

“Presented by the Members of the Lodge of Prudent Brethren, No. 145, to Bro. Geo. S. States, as an acknowledgment of his services as Secretary.—27th April, 1869.”

The Worshipful Master said it was his most pleasing duty to be the medium by which the brethren wished in begging his acceptance of the handsome testimonial before him, to express the good feeling they entertained for him. He had conducted himself in a more than usually excellent manner in the discharge of his duties as secretary of the lodge for the last four years. After reading the Inscriptions the Worshipful Master, amidst loud applause, presented the Testimonial to Bro. States, and said he hoped Bro. States would allow him to add his quota—his individual quota—of respect and good feeling entertained for him. There was an old saying that “good wine needs no bush,” and that he thought applied to Bro. States, and he need only say that he hoped he would long continue a member of the Prudent Brethren Lodge, to enjoy that esteem in which he was held.

BRO. STATES, who upon rising was received with unbounded marks of approbation, said that if he had the capability of one of the first statesmen of the realm in expressing his ideas, he could not express himself in sufficiently adequate language to thank them for the honour they had done him. It was the first,—his maiden, presentation—that he had ever had in the whole course of his life, and he should always look upon it with feelings of gratitude; and for the very kind presentation he begged most sincerely to return to the brethren,—more particularly those who had subscribed to it, his kindest acknowledgments for the unmerited honour they had done him. He had not words to thank them sufficiently for their kindness,—little did he think when he succeeded one whom he trusted had gone to a better home; (he alluded to his dear departed friend Bro. Blackburn), that he should meet with such treatment at their hands. During the time he had been their secretary he trusted he had done his duty, and as long as he lived he would look upon that handsome present with heartfelt gratitude. He begged them to accept his thanks, and would simply say, "God bless them all, was the sincere wish of George States." Several other toasts, including "visitors," to which Bro. Morris responded, the "Past Masters" &c. were given; and a most pleasant evening brought to a close, at an early hour.

GREAT MASONIC ASSEMBLY AT WHITEHAVEN.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AND BANQUET.

Wednesday last was a Red-letter Day among the Brethren of the Craft in the Masonic Province of Cumberland and Westmorland, the occasion being the holden of a Provincial Grand Lodge, after which, as usual, the brethren dined together.

Under ordinary circumstances the meeting would have been one of an important character, but in this instance special interest attached to it owing to the fact of this being the first Provincial Grand Lodge held at Whitehaven under the presidency of Lord Kenlis since the appointment of his lordship to the distinguished position of Grand Master of the Province. It was on this account that there was a more than ordinarily large muster of the brethren of the Craft—not only of those resident in the town but also those living at a distance.

The proceedings commenced at noon, at the Freemason's Hall, College-street, the Lodge being opened by Br. Spittal, W.M. 872, assisted by Brs. E. Fearon as Senior, and R. Foster as Junior Warden, Brs. Ellis and Brindle, S.D. and J.D., T. C. Windross, I.G., and P. Quinn, Tyler.

After the opening, the R.W.P.G.M. Lord Kenlis, and other Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge, were announced, and received in due form, Br. Cooper, P. Pr. Grand Organist, performing a voluntary on a new harmonium recently purchased by the Whitehaven Lodge, and used in the musical parts of Masonic ceremonial for the first time on the present auspicious occasion. The Provincial Grand Master, who wore, in addition to the gorgeous Masonic clothing pertaining to his high office, a massive gold chain, was preceded by Banner, Sword Bearer, &c., who escorted him to the Throne, where he received the salutes of the Brethren.

Lord Kenlis then opened the Grand Provincial Lodge, Bro. W. B. Gibson, Whitehaven, officiating as Deputy Provincial Grand Master, (in the absence of Bro. Whitwell, M.P., who was engaged in London with his parliamentary duties,) Bro. the Rev. T. R. Holme, Pr. G. Chaplain; Bro. Busher, Pr. G.S.W.; Bro. Morton, Pr. G.J.W.; Bro. J. Mc.Kelvie, Pr. G.S.D.; Bro. J. Slack, Pr. G.J.D.; W. H. Tickle, Pr. G.P., and Bro. E. G. Hughes, Pr. G.T., Bros. the Rev. J. Simpson, Pr. G.S., and J. Lemon, Pr. G.T., were also present, and discharged in their respective offices.

Among other Office-bearers and brethren present at the lodge or dinner afterwards were the following, viz., Bro. Joseph Iredale, S.P.D. Pr. G.M.; Major Spencer, P.M., P.P.G.S.W.; S. Gawith, Pr. G.M.C.; W. Pearson, P.P.G.S.W.; E. W. Henry, P.G.S.; W. Jones, P.G.S.; J. Wilson, P.G.S.; G. W. Kenworthy, P.M. and P.P.G.J.D.; J. Mayson, P.J.W., P.G.S.; J. Barr, P.M. and P.P.G.S.; H. Fleming P.M. 412, and P.P.G.A.D.C.; Joseph Nicholson, P.P.G.J.W.; J. R. Tickle, W.M. 371, and P.G.P.; Hugh Carr, P.P.G.S.; W. Johnstone, W.M. 310, Carlisle, J. Pearson, W.M., 962; Workington; J. H. Weedon, W.M., 715, London; A. Woodhouse, P.M., 412; T. Maude, J.D., 371; J. Hutton, S.W., 339; W. Sandwith, J.W., 119; J. Wood, J.W., 1073; E. E. Hincks, 1073; J. Robertson, D. Robertson, W. Hastwell, E. Chapman (Egremont), W. B. Renwick, J. Cook, J. Bethwaite, N. Topping, W. Paitson, J. Tyson, Dr. Jones (Aspatria), W. Wardhaugh, J. Welsh, Atter, Horan, Harwood, Mills, J. Anderson, Cragg, Bewley, Jos. Morton, J. Bragg, C. Fitzgerald, R. Twentyman, &c., &c.

The business of the lodge embraced the confirmation of the minutes of the last Provincial Grand Lodge, holden at Penrith in October last; the receipts of fees, dues, and donations to the Provincial Fund of Benevolence, and to make grants from the same; the re-election of Bro. Lemon to the office of Provincial Grand Treasurer for the ensuing year; and other matters, including the fixing of the place where the Provincial Grand Lodge shall be held in the ensuing autumn. Maryport was desirous of the honour, and it was decided that the next lodge should be there held.

The Lodge was closed in due form a little after two o'clock, and at three o'clock the brethren repaired to the banquet-room for dinner, which was furnished by Mrs. Todhunter, of the Albion Hotel, in her well-known bounteous and in every respect admirable style of excellence. The dishes embraced every delicacy of the season, and the dessert and wines were also of first-class character. Covers were laid for between 70 and 80, and every seat was occupied. Lord Kenlis, presided, having on his right and left Bros. Holme, Iredale, Gibson, Mc.Kelvie, Lemon, Spencer, Morton, Kenworthy, Spittal, Barr, &c. Bros. E. Fearon, S.W. 119, and W. Whittle, S.W., 872 occupied the vice-chairs. S. Gawith officiated as master of the ceremonies, and the Rev. T. R. Holme officiated as chaplain. Bro. Cooper presided at the pianoforte, and in the course of the evening Bros. Jones, Brunton, Hughes, Windross, Iredale, Fearon, Heatley and others, sang several songs, glees, &c., in capital style.

Br. the Rev. J. Simpson, P.G.S., in proposing the toast, "D.G.M. Earl de Grey and Ripon and the rest of the Officers of the Grand Lodge," said,—Most worshipful as was their G.M. in every relation of life, social and individual, there was nothing that had commanded the reverence and received the respect and esteem of Masons more than his judgment and discretion in the selection of his Grand Officers. (Applause). Absolute and autocratic as was their government it had ever been the pleasure of the Grand Masters of Masonry to gather around them men of skill and knowledge to assist them in the execution of their work, even as the wisest ruler of the Craft called to his counsels, and associated with himself, him who was the prince of architects and the most learned and accomplished of Masons. (Great applause). And it was because their own Grand Master had well discriminated in his choice of those whose duty and privilege it was to assist him in his work, that he felt confident they would extend to the Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers, that kindly feeling and regard they had recently manifested towards him by whom they had been selected, and at whose hands they had received their distinguished honours. (Hear, hear). He had not the honour of a personal acquaintance with Earl de Grey and Ripon, but from all he had heard he believed him to be second to none in his earnestness and zeal, and hearty good wishes for the welfare and prosperity of the Order. (Hear and applause). Not only did he discharge his duties, as the right hand man of the Grand Master, discreetly and well, but he was a thorough Mason, not only in name and by profession not merely in the working details of the Craft, but in his possession and appreciation of those great principles upon which their Order was founded, and the practice of which reflects upon Freemasonry its greatest glory and brightest lustre. (Applause). With respect to the other officers of Grand Lodge, it was gratifying to know that they were chosen out of the brethren, and appointed to distinguished offices, as he trusted all officers were in this province and every individual Lodge, not merely because they occupied a high position, not because they were blessed with this world's wealth, not because of favour or affection, but because of their Masonic merits; because they had in their hearts the true principles of the Craft—brotherly love, and a sincere wish to benefit their fellowmen; and were ever contending against selfishness, and striving after that which was true and just and good. (Applause). He need not remind them that to become an officer of Grand Lodge was exceedingly difficult. It was an object of legitimate ambition to masons; but the honour had not often been attained by brethren belonging to this remote northern province. (Hear, hear). They had, however, amongst them on that occasion one worthy brother upon whom the rank of grand officer had been conferred. (Hear, hear). Some of them might perhaps imagine that Bro. Busher owed his preferment to his fine physique, which would add dignity to the most imposing procession—(hear and laughter),—but he could assure them that the honour was well deserved. Bro. Busher was a good Mason, who understood and practised the great principles of their Order, and had been specially active in the cause of charity. (Hear, hear.) He begged to couple his name with the toast, and hoped he would long live to enjoy the honourable position he had gained in the Craft.

Brother E. BUSHER, Past Grand Sword-bearer of England, briefly responded to the last toast, observing that so many kind things had been said of himself that he really dared not venture to say a word upon the subject more than to thank Brother Simpson and the Brethren generally very sincerely for the honour they had done him and also the Earl de Grey and Ripon and the other Officers of Grand Lodge. (Applause.)

Brother Major SPENCER said he had been deputed to perform the pleasing task of proposing the health of the R.W.P.G.M. Lord Kenlis, (Loud and prolonged cheering.) He was quite sure that he expressed the sentiments of all the brethren in West Cumberland when he assured the noble lord of the great gratification it afforded them to see him among them on this occasion, and of their earnest desire to extend towards him the hand of cordial fellowship and good will. (Cheers.) Lord Kenlis had taken a position in Masonry which had been previously occupied by senior members of the Craft, and with great success; but as younger men had joined the order, from time to time, it became desirable to have a younger man at their head, and he was quite satisfied, and believed every one else was, that they had found the right man and put him in the right place. (Cheers). This was the first time they had the honour of meeting Lord Kenlis as Provincial Grand Master for Cumberland and Westmoreland in these parts, and he must say—and he knew they would all endorse it—that they had never seen the Lodge conducted in a better manner than it had been that day. (Hear, hear). Far be it from him to detract from the good qualities of older men who sat in the chair of the Provincial Grand Master; but he must give honour where honour was due, and he would say that all had been well done and quickly. (Applause). He invited the brethren to drink the health of Lord Kenlis in a bumper, and with cheers which would afford his lordship a kind of guarantee that when they again met him they would accord to him the same hearty welcome as on the present occasion. (Cheers.)

The noble CHAIRMAN rose to respond and was saluted with renewed cheering. His lordship said he felt great difficulty in finding language adequately to express his gratitude to them for the kind way in which his health had been proposed and drunk. He thanked them very sincerely for the hearty reception he had met with on this occasion—the first opportunity he had met with on this occasion—the first opportunity he had had of meeting them in Grand Lodge in this part of the province, and assured them that on his departure he should carry away with him most pleasant reminiscences of his visit to Whitehaven and of the kind manner in which he had been treated by every brother that day. (Loud applause.)

Several other toasts and songs followed:—The Tyler's Toast—"All Poor and Distressed Masons,"—as usual, closed the banquet, and the company separated, every one apparently greatly delighted with the whole day's proceedings.

CHAPTER I.

THE TWO FRIENDS AND SOCIETY.

"SURELY you are wrong, Frank. I do think you are. I don't see how Society can help itself in such a case. What right as a fellow like Forester to make such an ass of himself?"

"Well but, Madge, you know you never were immaculate yourself, and it's all very well, now you are married, to change your views of things—but you must not expect me to be quite so ready to back you in your opinions."

"Well take my advice, and drop him; that all. Why should you choose to cultivate a fellow who makes such an ass of himself? Why it was only last week Robertson told me that out of kindness he asked Forester up to his rooms to spend the evening. He swears he left him at half-past ten quite sober, and the next morn he was found in the coal-hole up at the Bank, fast asleep with his hair in curl papers."

"Nonsense!"

"Fact, I assure you. Some fellow told me that at the last place he was at, somewhere on the east coast, he used to get out to sea in the middle of the night in one of the steamers, and would insist in taking a dive off the paddle-box at one o'clock in the morning, just to try his nerves, as he said."

"Well, but you must admit he's a good natured fellow."

"A good natured fool if you like."

The speakers are two friends, Frank Ashburn and Madge Raymond, and the subject discussed is the conduct of one Marmaduke Forester, better known by the youth of Marton-on-the-Hill as "Miss Fanny."

Frank was but two years the senior of Madge; but, having been earlier thrown on his own resources, having spent two or three vacations abroad, he had acquired a manner far in advance of his years; and people gave him credit for being thirty-five or thirty-six at the date of my story, when, in truth, he was still on the pleasant side of thirty.

It is a winter's evening in the early part of the year of grace, 1866, and Frank Ashburn is sitting in his friend's smoking-room, Mrs. Raymond having retired for the night. Madge has hardly been married a year, yet he already assumes the air of an old Benedick, and lays down the law to his bachelor friend with great unction, much to Frank's amusement.

"The fact is," Frank is saying, "That adage is true, no doubt, which says, 'A rake makes the best husband,' (here an indifferent hearer might imagined a slightly satirical tone in his—the speaker's—voice) but I am quite sure of this, that you fellows who have been a little fast your yourselves, directly you get married, become ridiculously suspicious and painfully moral."

"Now, Frank, you are talking bosh."

"I am not talking bosh, and you know it. Forester is a muff, every one knows that; but instead of giving him a helping hand, and trying to keep him out of mischief by inviting him to your houses occasionally you and the other married people of your acquaintance cut him, because he made a fool of himself the other day and took the barmaid of the Vulture out for a walk down the High-street in broad daylight. You know the Vulture is the best hotel in the town; you know that Miss Robertson is a pretty and well-informed girl, far above her station; and you can't say you have heard a word against her character."

"Pon my word, Ashburn, I shall think you spooney on the girl yourself, if you go on in this way; but seriously, tell me why you take up the cudgels for "Miss Fanny." You can't care much about him. He is very much younger than you are; you must admit he's about as soft a piece of goods as you could come across; and I know very well that you wouldn't care to introduce any fellow to your sisters, if you had any, who was always loafing about billiard-rooms, and trying his fascinations on barmaids and milliners."

"I don't say I should, and I don't take Forester's part because I approve of his conduct—far from it; but, because he's down, every one kicks him, and I think it's a confounded shame. I think men ought to be satisfied with the society of those in their own class of life. But I know very well that in many cases they are driven to seek that of those beneath them, because Society, forsooth, doesn't choose to admit them to its charmed circle."

"Well, what would you have?"

"Never mind what I would have. But I will tell you what I think: if ever Forester goes to the bad, Society, will be as much to blame as he himself."

There is silence for a few minutes, while Frank pulls steadily from a curiously carved meerschum pipe, and stares gloomily into the fire. Frank is great in pipes.

NOTES BY A NOVICE.

THE EPHEMERAL AND THE ETERNAL.

We have often wondered that no attempt has been made to collect information respecting those quaint and, in many cases, absurd parodies on Freemasonry, which flourished, like the insects of a day, towards the latter part of the eighteenth century.

These societies rejoiced in various names; some extremely high-sounding and awe-inspiring, and others of a more plebeian character; but in all, the element of buffoonery ran riot. We happen to possess several bound volumes of "E. Johnson's British Gazette and Sunday Monitor," ranging from 1788 to 1799, in which several notices of meetings of these societies appear, and, stimulated by curiosity, we have left no stone unturned to find out their secret modus operandi, but as few records or rituals of these free-and-easy fungi exist, our success has been only partial. Such as it is, however, it may interest our Masonic readers as a striking illustration of the fact that Freemasonry, built upon the solid rock of eternal truth, has survived and will survive, all such ephemeral associations, erected upon the shifting sands of folly and deceit.

We will first take the "Holy Order of Nails," and our mode of procedure will be to allow the initiate (if we may so term him) to describe the mushroom "mysteries" in propria persona.

"Step forward, Mr. Gabriel Greenhorn, and tell us all you know about the 'Nails.'"

"In the beginning of the year 1788, I was an apprentice in the shop of Mr. Mead, the peruke-maker in Newington Causeway. He had a large business among the gentry who lived at Newington, Walworth, and Camberwell, and was held in high repute by Sir Edward Walton, High Bailiff of Southwark, and many other great dignitaries, who always entrusted their headpieces to his care. I had a fellow-apprentice named Richard Jaques, one of the wildest wigmakers I ever knew, for they are generally a quiet, harmless set of men, as grave as judges and quite as wise. However, Dick was nothing of the sort, and was never better pleased than when he was seated at the Pheasant Inn, in Stangate, with a rousing bowl of punch before him, and a jolly set of companions to chink glasses and sing merry staves. One night, Dick came home, as usual, late (Mr. Mead, I must say, knew nothing of his little pranks), and, as usual, ascended to his room, which was also mine, by means of a rope ladder suspended from the window. He was generally quiet enough when he got in, but on this occasion nothing would do but he must shout—

"I'm a Nail! I'm a Nail!"

"What do you mean," I cried, 'you'll alarm the house, and Mr. Mead will soon put a stop to your freedom of ingress and egress.'

"Oh, Greenhorn," he cried, 'you need not wonder I feel so merry. I have been made a Nail this evening!'

"A what?" I replied contemptuously.

"A member of the Holy Order of Nails," he rejoined; 'and if you keep quiet for a month or two, perhaps I may get you initiated.'

"Go to bed, Dick—do," I answered; 'you have had too many runners of malt this evening.'

"So, with a little more persuasion, I induced him to undress and seek what I believe Shakspeare calls 'sweet sleep.' However, the next morning he explained to me that he had not spoken in jest, as he had really and truly been admitted into the famous Order of Nails, which was destined to eclipse the Freemasons, the Constitutional Sols, and every other secret society of the day. Its objects, he said, were grand, and its ceremonies imposing, and, moreover, he had been initiated in the 'Grand Lodge.' All this sounded very fine, and aroused my curiosity to such an extent, that in the course of a few weeks I begged Dick to propose me, which he accordingly did, and I received the following summons to attend:—

"Grand Lodge of the Holy Order of Nails.

"Held at the Pheasant, Stangate, Lambeth. The Brothers of this Lodge are desired to take notice that their next meeting night will be on Tuesday, 15th of July, 1788, at eight o'clock in the evening; then to be opened in the first degree, and to continue so for the future, every Tuesday evening alternately for each degree.

"By Order of the Grand Master, Officers, &c.,

(Signed) "JAMES BAYTHORN, Secretary."

"On the all important evening of July 15th, I set out with Jaques for the 'Pheasant,' on arriving at which I was remitted to the parlour, as the 'Holy Order' met in rooms upstairs; and Dick said they would send for me when all was prepared for my reception. Meanwhile I sat in trembling expectation, half-inclined to run away, for I had heard that the ordeal was a very painful one, when one of the brothers entered the room and desired me to follow him. This I did cheerfully, as nothing can be more oppressive than suspense. He led me to an upper chamber, which apparently was an ante-room to the place of meeting, and ordered me to strip and array myself in a dirty old sheepskin jerkin. This 'looks promising,' quoth I to myself—for my guide enjoined perfect silence—'what next, I wonder?' However I obeyed, and he then fastened a black mask over my face, which left merely a space for breathing through. Thus enveloped in darkness, he led me to the door and gave a terribly loud knock thereon with a hammer which I had previously observed in his hand. The door was opened and a voice cried, 'Wretched Amalekite, wherefore comest thou?' And my guide answered in solemn tones, 'O Issachar, I have brought thee a victim—yes, even one who will give thee of his goods and his chattels, and hesitate not to lay down his life for the cause.' 'The deuce he will,' I half ejaculated, but my guide sternly enjoined silence, and the strange voice replied 'It is well; await the Grand Master's orders,' and so saying he slammed the door in our faces. In a minute or two he returned, and said, 'Enter, the Nails are sharpened, and a goodly reception awaits the Amalekite.' I was then led forward into the room, when a sepulchral voice cried, 'Let the Amalekite drink,' and before I could say 'Jack Robinson' my arms were seized from behind and my wrists encircled with manacles, while a copious stream of icy water came down on my head like a shower bath. I naturally roared at this chilling reception, when the unearthly voice again uttered in deep tones, 'The Amalekite speaks—he has broken our rules—upon him ye Philistines!' In another moment I was thrown down by a rush of men, some of whom seized my legs and others my shoulders, and in this manner I was carried round the room amidst the most discordant noises. At last they laid me upon a table or bench, and for some minutes there was profound silence, during which I recovered my breath but hardly my composure, and began to wish I was well out of it.

"But my troubles were by no means at an end."

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWO GRAND LODGES OF ENGLAND IN RATIFICATION OF THE UNION, 1813.

Grand Assembly of Freemasons, for the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England, on St. John's Day, 27th December, 1813.

The Act of Union was then read by the Director of the Ceremonies.

The Rev. Dr. Coghlan, Grand Chaplain to the Fraternity under the Duke of Sussex, proclaimed aloud, after the sound of trumpet:—"Hear ye: This is the Act of Union, engrossed, in confirmation of Articles solemnly concluded between the two Grand Lodges of Free and Accepted Masons of England, signed, sealed, and ratified by the two Grand Lodges respectively; by which they are to be hereafter and for ever known and acknowledged by the style and title of THE UNITED GRAND LODGE OF ANCIENT FREEMASONS OF ENGLAND. How say you, Brothers, Representatives of the two Fraternities? Do you accept of, ratify, and confirm the same?" To which the Assembly answered—"We do accept, ratify, and confirm the same." The Grand Chaplain then said: "And may the Great Architect of the Universe make the Union perpetual?" To which all the Assembly replied, "So mote it be."

The two Grand Masters and six Commissioners signed the Instruments, and the two Grand Masters then affixed the Great Seals of their respective Grand Lodges to the same.

Dr. Barry, after sound of trumpet, then proclaimed:—"Be it known to all Men, that the Act of Union between the two Grand Lodges of Free and Accepted Masons of England, is solemnly signed, sealed, ratified, and confirmed, and the two Fraternities are one, to be from henceforth known and acknowledged by the style and title of 'The United Grand Lodge of Ancient Freemasons of England,' and may the Great Architect of the Universe make their Union eternal!" And the Assembly said, "Amen."

The two Grand Masters, with their respective Deputies and Wardens, then advanced to the Ark of the Masonic Covenant, prepared, under the direction of the W. Brother John Soane, Grand Superintendent of the Works, for the edifice of the Union, and in all time to come to be placed before the Throne. The Grand Masters standing in the East, with their Deputies on the right and left; the Grand Wardens in the West and South. The square, the plumb, the level, and the mallet, were successively delivered to the Deputy Grand Masters, and by them presented to the two Grand Masters, who severally applied the square to that part of the said Ark which is square, the plumb to the sides of the same, and the level above it in three positions; and lastly, they gave it three knocks with the mallet; saying, "May the Great Architect of the Universe enable us to uphold the Grand Edifice of Union, of which this Ark of the Covenant is the symbol, which shall contain within it the instrument of our brotherly love, and bear upon it the Holy Bible, square, and compass, as the light of our faith and the rule of our works. May he dispose our hearts to make it perpetual!" And the Brethren said, "So mote it be."

The two Grand Masters placed the said Act of Union in the interior of the said Ark.

SPECIMENS FROM A MASONIC QUARRY.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 181 TRURO,

SPECIMEN No. 1.—OPERATIVE MASONIC LODGES.

ST. JOHN'S, BANFF, SCOTLAND.

In summarizing the Records of Banff, we may state that before the new ritual of Freemasonry, founded by Bros. Desaguliers and Anderson had been promulgated, the Masons of Banff appear to have practised a simple rite of one degree. Craftsmen being those who served their time as Apprentices, Master Masons meaning such brethren who were able to employ a number of the Craft to work in any locality. There were thus four classes, consisting of Apprentices, Craftsmen, Master Masons, and aristocratic Patrons. So far as we know, the minutes of other lodges of same date or earlier where precisely of the same nature.

At Banff no mention of the Royal Arch occurs until A.D. 1764, and the laws for that degree have been printed in the number of THE FREEMASON for March 20th, enacted on St. John's Day, A.D. 1765.

We have thus transcribed and made known the earliest by-laws of the Royal Arch yet published. There does not seem to have been any restriction in these rules, as to Masons "passing the chair" before exaltation A.D. 1765. The degrees of Mark Mason, and Mark Master Mason, were worked as early as A.D. 1778, but the Templar and Malta degrees are nowhere recorded before A.D. 1790. The "Suph. Excellent," however, was known sometime before that date. "The St. James Lodge," McDuff, received the degrees of R.A., K.T., and M., from the St. John's Lodge, Banff, November 1794. "St. Stephen's," Portsey, was formed from the latter lodge, A.D. 1795, and obtained the high degrees for one pound. The "Fraserburgh," erected by St. John's, A.D. 1796, received a similar distinction for double the sum, and individual brethren seem to have been exalted for the fee of half-a-crown, and "dubbed" Knight Templar, and Knight of Malta for the large sum of twelve pence!! and if their means were not such as to warrant so great an outlay, they were either admitted for a smaller amount, or received gratuitously.

As we believe the only way to know in what ancient Masonry really consisted is to examine and study the constitutions and records of the Craft anterior to revival of Freemasonry, A.D. 1717, we have been at some little trouble to present some excerpts from the Minute Books of the lodges at Banff, before and since the revival. We think so far as regards their nature as operative records, there will not be noticed any deviation from the ordinary character of the Craft. All purely operative fraternities of Craftsmen preceding the last century, wherever located, evidently were formed on a very simple basis, and supported mainly, in some cases exclusively, to preserve the secrets of the science and art of Masonry. Hence, Freemasonry of the eighteenth century was built upon the exclusive foundation of an association of builders, which, though once a necessity, had become well-nigh extinct in the first decade of the eighteenth century. Gentlemen were admitted members of the operative body long before 1717, as the records testify. (Notwithstanding, it is declared by several distinguished Masons that at the first meeting of the revived society the members decided "that the privileges of Masonry should not be limited to architects and operative masons." Bro. Lyon, and other well-informed writers of late, have shown the error of such a statement.) Still, the real aim of the fraternity was a selfish one, and quite justified by the usages of the trades for centuries. It must be remembered that the Masons were not the only society that professed to have mysteries or secrets. All had them, and the members were termed Craftsmen, whether they were called Masons or not. "Deacons" were also appointed for the various Crafts. We find that as early as March 12th, 1424 (during the reign of James I. of Scotland), it was provided that, "like Craft sould have ane Deaken," so that there is no evidence to lead us to suppose the Masons of those days possessed more "secrets" than the other trades. The only thing was, that Operative Masonry presented more features that were susceptible of symbolism than any other Craft; and hence it gradually acquired a superiority that caused it finally to be adopted by the world as the chief of all trade organizations, and, subsequently, a few members of "drooping lodges," in London, determined to still preserve its proud distinction by altering "landmarks," so as to make it purely "a system of morality veiled in allegory, and illustrated by symbols." In this century Freemasonry has multiplied so rapidly over the globe, and has become so vast an institution, that its history cannot be written, or its extent known.

We cannot better conclude the first specimen from our "Masonic Quarry," than by quoting the grand conclusion to the article entitled "Lessons of Prosperity," in THE FREEMASON (No. 7): "Sustained by the allegiance of true men, symbolised by deeds of benevolence and affection, and robed in the imperishable vestments of truth, Freemasonry shall yet acquire greater renown, and wider empire over the hearts of men; standing forth to all ages as a teacher of faith in the Great Architect of the Universe, of hope in immortal salvation, and of charity towards all mankind."

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

The ancient Druids had a most profound veneration for oak-trees, and the Gauls are said to have worshipped Jupiter, under the figure of a lofty oak:

"The sacred oaks,
Whose awful shades among the Druids strayed
To cut the hallowed mistletoe, and hold High converse with their gods."

Sir Humphrey Davy.

The oak is an appropriate emblem of strength.—COSMOS.

Joppa.—According to Pliny, it was at Joppa in Judea that Andromeda was tied on a rock, to be exposed to the sea-monster. And in St. Jerome's time, namely, about the year 40J, were still shewn marks of the chain by which she was said to have been fastened. Joppa is frequently mentioned in the scriptures, particularly in 2 Chronicles, ii., 16; Acts ix., 36, 38, x., 5. It is now called Jaffa, and is celebrated as the scene of a fearful slaughter of prisoners by the French in 1799.—COSMOS.

Triangulum.—There are two constellations known by the name of triangle—one in the Northern hemisphere called Triangulum Cælesti, the other in the Southern hemisphere denominated Triangulum Australis. This figure is used in various Masonic degrees with different significations.—ANTIQUARIUS.

The Ancient and Accepted Rite.—I must object to Brother Yarker passing over my remarks with scarcely a notice. If the readers of THE FREEMASON will examine the friendly correspondence between us, they will see of what I complain. I have tried to answer all Bro. Yarker's objections to my views, but although he has written much in his notes of interest to Masons generally I do not consider it has been in reply to my arguments: e.g., (a) The Baldwyn Encampment's claim to antiquity, which I disputed, he does not clear up at all, but merely states what the members say of it. (b) The Belgian Craft Constitution of 1722, said to refer to Knight Kadosh, &c., is not alluded to in his reply, although I defy any one to produce the Book! (c) Then, as to the "Ancients" and their pretensions to "York" authority, we hear no more of that either. Were it worth while I could say much more on the subject, but will content myself with disposing of the presumed antiquity of the Baldwyn Encampment, by quoting an authority that Bro. Yarker will likely admit as better than either his or mine. The much-respected and esteemed Bro. Dr. Henry Beaumont Leeson has declared that the Baldwyn Encampment at Bristol was founded by French Masons, who had brought it from Canada, towards the close of the last century, a fact of which he was certain as the original books were in his own possession. (Freemason's Magazine, August 2, 1862.) I look upon Br. Yarker as an enthusiastic Mason, who would do well to take his authorities first-hand, instead of through Dr. Anderson's questionable medium. For proof of this I would refer him to his quotation from the Harleian MS. which Bro. Hughan corrected him in.—ROSE CROIX.

In closing the present correspondence, on my part, relative to some disputed points in Freemasonry, I would respectfully desire the readers of THE FREEMASON to again refer to the whole of the correspondence that has passed between us, and consider for themselves, and decide according to the evidence given. "Lathomus" does not support the antiquity of the "Knight Templar Priest," neither does he agree with the so-called quotation from the "Annual Assembly," given by Bro. Yarker in THE FREEMASON (April 3, p. 6); although, certainly, he supports the interpretation about which we differ. I am of opinion that "Lathomus" is likely to object to all masonry, excepting the Craft, including the Royal Arch; of course I am not sure, but the style of his letter reminds me of a most accomplished Mason, with whom I have the pleasure of corresponding, and reckon such acquaintances are of the most fortunate friendships I have made through the happy medium of Freemasonry. I cannot close my note without expressing my high opinion of the very friendly and gentlemanly manner in which all Bro. Yarker's communications are made. I will write to his address relative to the "Cross-legged Masons."—WILLIAM JAMES HUGHAN.

THE MASONIC CHARITIES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As a Mason interested in the welfare of the Masonic Charities, and moreover, as one who has especially worked hard for the Boys' School, I desire to ask a few plain questions:—

1. Is it true, as stated in the Era newspaper, that the "governors" of the Boys' Institution have awarded Bro. Binckes, the secretary, a salary and gratuity of £400 a year?

2. Is it true that in future he is to have a carte blanche for travelling expenses, in addition to his salary, which has thus been increased from £150 and commission, to £400?

3. Is it true that Bro. Binckes receives £500 commission this year on the sums announced at the last Festival?

4. Is it true that Bro. Binckes is not required to devote the whole of his time to the secretarial duties of the Boy's Institution, and is also permitted to hold another appointment?

5. Is it true that he is to be allowed £100 per annum for a clerk?

6. Is it the fact that the secretaries of the other charities are now placed in a disadvantageous position in comparison with Bro. Binckes?

7. Is there any valid reason why the other secretaries should not receive £400 or £500 a year; have a clerk each at £100, with three collectors, as at present, on commission, averaging £160 to £200 each per annum?

Lastly. Are the Freemasons of England expected to contribute their guineas in order to support the widows and orphans of their brethren, or merely the officials of the Masonic institutions?

Commending these queries to the attention of your readers, "I pause for a reply."

Yours fraternally,
QUIDNUNC.

MASONIC MANUSCRIPTS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Were THE FREEMASON carefully to copy word for word, from the originals, and publish in its columns, some of the ancient, or supposed ancient, Masonic manuscripts lying in the British Museum, it would confer a great boon on its readers. At the same time mentioning the date when each particular MS. was first deposited in the museum, and from whom it was obtained; in short, giving, so far as possible, a reliable history of each one, so far as is known, and so far as the existence of each can, truly and reliably, be traced back. A beginning might be made with some of the shorter ones first, and I would hope that the great interest of the subject would repay the trouble.

I am, yours fraternally,
LEO.

CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In your issue of the 17th inst. I notice a letter, signed "Anmi," on this subject.

Your correspondent is quite right so far, as I believe that St. John's Masonry is the three degrees only; but "Leo" is quite right also, as the fact is there are few lodges in Scotland in which the chair degree is not given with St. John's Masonry. The Grand Lodge of Scotland's instructions are quite distinct on the subject, viz., it recognises only three degrees of St. John's Masonry, and I believe if the Grand Lodge were either to recall or suspend lodge charters when members were defaulters in this matter, she would have a small family around her.

I was myself chaired when made, but of course did not at that time know it was wrong. So soon as I found out my error I objected to the performance of it, and universally leave if such a degree is to be given under a St. John's charter.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,
Your obedient servant,
WILL. SNODGRASS, Sec. 153, R.A.
5, Greenbank-terrace, Pollokshaw,
22nd April, 1869.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR AND BROTHER,—Will you please say, in your "Masonic Jurisprudence" column, by what authority a Provincial Grand Standard-bearer wears a purple apron with the badge of a standard within the ordinary double circle of Prov. G.O.'s, and whether it would not be infra-dig. for a W.M. to accept that office when at the same time other brethren who had not attained to the chair were put over his head?

I am, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
A P.M.

ORATION

Delivered by the V.W. the Grand Chaplain, Bro. R. J. SIMPSON, on the occasion of the Inauguration Festival, held at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 14th April.

Most Worshipful Grand Master, Grand Officers, and Brethren,—It is recorded in the volume of the Sacred Law that gold, silver, and precious jewels were willingly offered by the Israelitish people towards the erection of the glorious temple which King Solomon afterwards reared to the honour of Jehovah, and that when these freewill offerings were laid before King David, he blessed the Lord before all the congregation in these words:—"Blessed be Thou, Lord God of Israel. Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, for all that is in the heaven and the earth is Thine: both riches and honour come of Thee, and Thou reignest over all; and in Thine hand is power and might and to give strength to all. Now, therefore, our God, we thank Thee and praise Thy glorious name." Let this, brethren, be the keynote of our song of praise to-day, assembled on this auspicious occasion; and catching the spirit of the King of Israel, let us ascribe unto the Great Architect of the Universe all honour and praise for the bounty thus vouchsafed us, for putting it into the hearts of the brethren to erect these noble buildings now opened by our Grand Master, for giving us power to carry out this design, and for sparing us to rejoice at its completion; but, not least, are we bound to praise Him for His merciful kindness in protecting the builders in life and limb, so that no death, no bone broken, no drop of blood, no cry of pain, has interrupted or marred the progress of a work of considerable extent, and occupying a period of five years, reminding us of that notable description of the peaceful growth of the great Temple—

"Like some tall palm the noiseless fabric sprung."

It is, in truth, at once a most happy augury and a most characteristic feature in this case, that this great centre of English Freemasonry, from which is to emanate all that is to soothe distress, relieve suffering, and rejoice the heart, should not only be begun in faith and hope, but be completed in perfect love and joy and safety. And joy, as it must be to us all, how much more to those true and trusty brethren to whose judgment, zeal, and ability were entrusted the direction and superintendence of this great undertaking, and who must feel how entirely the result has justified the confidence reposed in them. No trifling amount of time and thought and labour must they have devoted to this work, and no ordinary amount of responsibility must they have incurred, and I am sure I am only echoing the sentiments of every Mason, not only in this Grand Lodge, but throughout the land, when I thus give marked expression to the grateful sense we entertain of the benefits they have conferred upon the Craft, and to the unqualified admiration with which we regard the manner in which they have carried out the work which our architect so wisely and beautifully designed.

To possess a magnificent building which should include within its walls good offices for our charities, a handsome board-room for our meetings, convenient lodge-rooms for our lodges, a grand banqueting-hall for our social gatherings, and a restored temple more worthy of our sacred rites; this, Most Worshipful Sir, was an object grand in its design, and, as we can testify to-day, admirable in its execution; and, when in future days our brethren view with satisfaction this noble group of buildings, the names of Havers, Evans, Hervey, Savage, Plucknett, Stebbing, Grissell, Cockerell, and last, not least, our late Bro. Gray Clarke shall not be forgotten.

Nay; shall it not be recorded of them as of our illustrious Masonic forefather who erected the grandest fabric that adorns this great city—"Si monumentum queras circumspecte." And if our children, in time to come, inquire under whose auspices these works were done, it shall be told with just pride and grateful memory, that on the foundation-stone, on the topstone, and on the keystone of the arch, is engraved in characters that time cannot efface, the honoured name of Zetland; and, more than this, that the building which our Grand Master has opened this day was the crowning act of that quarter of a century during which he has, with so much dignity, usefulness, and ability, presided over the Masons of England. How his reign has illustrated our Masonic annals, and how Masonry has flourished during that eventful period, I will not stop to tell, nor anticipate an occasion not less interesting than the present, on which such recollections may be more appropriately recorded. Brethren, it is a subject of great congratulation that we are honoured on this occasion with the presence of the Grand Master of Scotland, and the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland. We hail them with a hearty Masonic welcome, and we rejoice that they are present on an occasion which may testify to them, and to our brethren of Scotland and Ireland, that the Masons of England are builders in every sense of the term, and that they regard their own Grand Master with respect and affection.

On Thursday, May 23rd, 1776, this hall was dedicated in solemn form, and handed down to us by our brethren of that day as a rich inheritance. And here we stand, at the distance of nearly a century, to renew and enlarge this building in a manner worthy of this later age, and more suited to our increased numbers and requirements. They worked not only for themselves but for us. We, in our turn, work for ourselves, but also for those who shall succeed us when we have fallen asleep, and who shall rejoice in this noble edifice as the central home of English Masonry. A home—a sacred home—where our holy rites may be duly performed in the solemn repose of a temple and of lodges set apart for such high purposes; a home which shall be a type and model for the lodges of England, and which, while in no way preventing the happy social intercourse that I trust may ever mark our festive gatherings in their proper place, shall secure a sacred enclosure for those most solemn and beautiful ceremonies which have regard to that Grand Master on high, whom Jacob adored at Bethel, and Solomon worshipped on the Hill of Zion.

And as in the material, so in the moral and intellectual world, we hope to do our part in our generation. It has been well observed by an eminent writer, that "subject to certain cycles of partial revolution, every generation of man is a labourer for that which succeeds it, and makes an addition to that great sum total of achieved results which may, in commercial phrase, be called the capital of the race." Every generation of men as they traverse the vale of life, are bound to accumulate new treasures for the race, and thus leave the world (as far as they are concerned, at least) richer than they found it. Of the mental portion of this treasure, no small part is stored. The Greeks, perhaps, had the largest ideas upon the training of man, and produced samples of our race with gifts unsurpassed. But the nature of man, such as they knew it, was scarcely at all developed; nay, it was maimed in its supreme capacity in its relations to the Great Architect of the Universe—to the Father of Spirits. Hence, as in the visions of the Prophet, so upon the roll of history, the imposing fabrics of ancient civilization have never endured. Greece has bequeathed to us her ever-living tongue, and the undying labours of her intellect. Rome made ready for a later age the germs of policy and law; but the bright collection of endowments which goes to form civilization, having no root in itself, could not weather the storms of time and change. But there is a community that has weathered all these storms; taking its rise in the earliest ages, founded on the purest principles of piety and virtue, it has pursued an onward course from age to age, a three-thousand years' tale not yet full. But there is light along all its course; a light to those who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death, guiding their feet into the way of peace, and pointing the pathway to a happier land.

Yes, brethren, Freemasonry can boast, not only a most remote origin, but a most glorious career; like a golden thread in some texture of beauty, it has run through the varying fabric of human thought, and, like the great river of Egypt, it has wound its devious way through many a land, overflowing and fertilizing the nations in its course, meeting with various forms of religious belief and civil government, it has allied itself to all in proportion as each system was disciplined by order, practised in virtue, and founded on truth. Breaking through the fetters of mere human systems, it has ever boldly proclaimed those great cardinal truths which cherish virtue and point to Heaven. Salted with perpetual life, it has passed through the terrors of heathen darkness, mediæval corruptions, and modern Atheism. It has kindled—

"That freedom of mind which no vulgar dominion,

Can turn from the path a pure conscience approves;
Which, with hope in the heart and no chain on the pinion,
Holds upwards its course to the light that it loves."

Hence it is that Freemasonry has had to encounter many formidable foes; hence, especially, has our Order been denounced by superstition and been persecuted by intolerance; but, like the granite promontory, it stands unmoved amid the wild ravings of fanaticism which surge around it only to be hurled back into their native foam. Unhappy is he who in his morose, bigoted self-sufficiency can see nothing but evil in the history of humanity, and who overlooks all those conceptions of truth and of good—all those kind and beautiful affections which God has interwoven with our frame, and which throw almost a divine glory over the most clouded features of the history of our kind; or who beholds only in that varied and wonderful history the traces of a ruined being, and to pray as its noblest consummation, that all its future pages may exhibit the aspiring faculties of human genius, bound down under one narrow system of contracted thought and the natural flow of human affections creeping on in one dull and artificial channel. Nor does the blood of the natural man freeze in the veins when the sublime principles of faith are impressed upon the soul, but continues to flow as before through their multiplied windings; neither is it meant that these principles of a higher character should impede one rush of genuine affection—one legitimate employment of our intellectual powers—or even one innocent play of fancy—but that they should guide them all to right ends, and guard them with the shield of their own peculiar sanctity.

Freemasonry rejoices in these principles, it addresses itself to every description of men, and hides the poor under the shadow of its wings from the ills and injuries of life. It is equally suited to the north, the south, the east, the west—all are interested in its beautiful lessons of brotherly love, and all treasure its contemplations of immortal life.

Ours is indeed a glorious fabric! founded in strength, ordered by wisdom, and adorned with beauty! For, say, brethren, what institution can have a firmer foundation than the volume of God's sacred law? And why is this so, independent of its own claim? Because it sanctions all that experience teaches us respecting the natural powers of the mind. It leads us up in grateful thoughts to Him who bestowed the principles of life at the first, and who continues to impart it through successive generations. It enhances its value by asserting and proving its immortality. It renders the man useful to society by cherishing the love of goodness and encouraging hatred to vice, by unveiling the future destination of the spirit to eternal happiness as the reward of piety, or to eternal misery as the just judgment of sin, and thus affords a more powerful guard of virtue and barrier against vice than all the laws society could impose. He, then, that is an enemy to sacred truth is an enemy to himself. He is extinguishing so far as he can, the light which is sent to guide him home and to absorb the feeble rays of reason and of nature, and he is refusing the only cup of consolation which is a true antidote to the bitterness of sorrow. But he is an enemy to mankind, for he is robbing society of the cement which holds it together; of the source of its intelligence, its happiness, its glory. And he who is the enemy of man is the enemy of God; for He is the Parent as well as the Architect of the Universe—He stamped human nature with His image, and He loves it still. Yes! brethren, this sacred volume is our foundation-stone, which, while it records a thousand blessings for the present, points out to every wandering child of Adam, "the path of life." And if Truth lies at the foundation, Wisdom has raised the superstructure of our house. No one of thoughtful mind and who has studied Freemasonry to any extent can have failed to "observe the connection of our whole system as well as the relative dependence of its several parts," the great objects brought out in the various implements of art, the lessons taught by our traditional histories, the significance of every ornament that adorns our lodges, all these are striking emblems of blessed verities—outer things mutely symbolising the highest duties of social life and the deepest truths connected with our inner life. Never can we witness a brother raised to the degree of a Master Mason without feeling a divine call to a higher life—without at least being deeply moved by the solemnities of a ceremony which for impressiveness and instruction is second to none in this lower world.

And is not our house not only strongly founded and wisely built, but beautifully adorned? Are not purity of thought, integrity of life, benignity of manner, and above all, sweet charity, the beautiful garments with which a true Mason is invested? Oh! how lovely is this Charity! It constitutes the highest dignity of human nature—it elevates and refines our feelings—it calms the storms of passion—it causes men to look with kindness on each other and to view no one as a stranger whose joys we can heighten, whose wants we can supply, or whose sorrows we can soothe. No distinction of rank will affect its operation—it will consider no object as beneath its notice that can be benefited by its exertions, and no task to be mean by which it can promote human happiness. Where would be the boasted dignity or reason if employed only to promote narrow selfish views? Where the glory of that knowledge which never of itself advised or comforted another? And where the honour of that power which never promoted indigent merit or wiped a tear from the mourner's eye? A fiend may possess a higher degree of reason, more knowledge and more power, than the wisest and best of men—destitute of charity, he is the more to be dreaded—not revered. Who would esteem the man of rank whose haughty selfish spirit could never smile on modest worth? Of what avail is wealth imprisoned in the rusty coffers of the miser or wantonly squandered away in the dissipation of the prodigal? Who would value our influence, if never employed in promoting the prosperity of others? If such gifts are made subservient to personal advantage, they only show that we want the spirit and inclination to enjoy that greatest of all luxuries, the luxury of doing good. And do not the tenets of our venerable Order ever point in this direction? Are not our glorious charities practical illustrations of these truths? Yes!

Brethren, to bind up the broken-hearted, to extricate the industrious from misfortune, to rescue the helpless and the orphan from the prospect of want or ruin, to comfort the widow in affliction's hour, and to afford a peaceful home to the aged and deserving in the evening of their days—these are objects worthy of the regard of every Mason who values the delight of blessing others, the respect due to himself, the honour of the Craft, and, above all, the approbation of God. And as the child is father to the man, let us as Masons give special diligence to foster education in its highest sense, and while storing the mind and exercising the intellect, ever remember as men—as Englishmen, or as Masons—that there are weapons and an armour still more necessary for the battle of life. It is not so much in what we have as in what we are that our greatness consists.

Let us educate the child, that when, in future days, he feels himself alone among the crowd, when he is for a moment disheartened by that difficulty which is the rude rocking cradle of all excellence, when he is conscious of the pinch of poverty and self-denial, he should be conscious, too, that a sleepless eye is watching him from above; that his honest efforts are assisted; that his prayers are heard; that all things are working together for his good. Is not this the life of faith, of hope, of duty, which lights up for us the cheerless world, and transfigures all that we encounter (whatever be its outer form) with hues brought down from heaven, and finally leads us through the valley of dark shadow "to shine as the stars for ever and ever."

If thus, brethren, we hold to the great principles of our order, "adding to our faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, to temperance brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity," then shall we hand down something in our generation to bless and enrich our Craft, our country, and our kind. Systems may change; customs may vary; nay, empires may rise or fall, we shall still, keeping in view the ancient landmarks and "the bright and morning star," go on our way rejoicing—rejoicing in the spread of truth, of virtue, of charity—rejoicing in the diffusion of that peace and goodwill which shall really conduce to the brotherhood of nations—rejoicing in the mitigation of human suffering, in the alleviation of human sorrow, in the elevation of human thought—then, having passed through the apprenticeship of human discipline, having had fellowship in the work of restoration—having mastered the lower passions and affections of human nature—having, in fact, finished the work given to us to do, we shall exchange these lodges or tents we now inhabit for eternal mansions not made with hands, which the Great Architect has prepared—and we shall enter on the possession of that promised land, where the good and faithful workman shall rejoice the companions of his former toils, shall rest from his labours, and shall receive his "great reward."—Freemason's Magazine, April 24.

DRUMBO CHURCH ERECTION FUND, ONTARIO, CANADA.

AN examination of the official papers set forth below will sufficiently explain, and, I venture to think, justify, my bringing to the notice of my fellow-churchmen the object which I have at heart in visiting England at this time.

The Mission of which I have the charge, situated at Princeton, in the diocese of Huron, covers a very large area, and is, at present, provided with but one church—a provision utterly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of the district.

This church, a very small one (being but 30 by 60), I was enabled to build by the proceeds obtained from lectures delivered by me, and appeals made by sermons and other agencies, supplemented by free gifts of sand, stone, and other material, most liberally contributed by the members of the mission, who gave, in addition, their personal services, both in digging the foundations and bringing to the site the whole of the material required—a distance, in some cases, of twelve miles.

Before leaving Princeton I had the great consolation of seeing this church (St. Paul's) free from debt, and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

My present object is to provide a second church for Drumbo, the northern portion of my mission, distant about seven miles from St. Paul's Church, Princeton.

In this district are many settlers, mostly emigrants from Great Britain, who are very anxious to have the great blessing of a place of worship in their midst, and who, although too poor to help much financially, are both ready and willing to contribute, as their neighbours in Princeton have done, in labour and material.

The amount required for this good end is but trifling, £1,200 to £1,500 being amply sufficient (with the labour and material given) to provide a suitable church and mission-house; and I appeal with all confidence to God's stewards of wealth in England who are happy in the full enjoyment of all Christian privileges, to extend to their fellow churchmen for whom I plead, the blessings so liberally poured out upon themselves.

BRO. HENRY BARTLETT,

(Incumbent Princeton, Canada), Senior Curate (pro tem),
 St. George the Martyr, Southwark.

March 17th, 1869.

From His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

"I have examined the papers of the Rev. Mr. Bartlett which seem to me to be quite correct.

(Signed) "A. C. CANTUAR.

"Lambeth Palace, February 27th, 1869."

From the Lord Bishop of Huron.

"The Rev. Henry Bartlett has been, since his ordination, Missionary at Princeton, in the Diocese of Huron. Within the limits of his extensive Mission, the village of Drumbo is situated. Mr. Bartlett is desirous to erect a church in this village, and, the people being very poor, he is under the necessity of seeking assistance from Christian friends for that object. He is going to England to visit his friends, and he hopes to be able to interest some of those to whom the Lord has committed the stewardship of the goods of this world, to aid him in the good work which he has in hand. I would recommend this cause to the liberal assistance of members of the church.

(Signed) "BENJAMIN HURON.

"See House, London, Canada, July 10th, 1868."

From the Ven. Archdeacon Utterton, Commissary of the Diocese of Winchester.

"The Rev. H. Bartlett, of Princeton, Upper Canada, appears to be well accredited, and I shall rejoice to hear that he has been successful in his endeavours to raise funds for the erection of a church at Drumbo.

(Signed) "J. S. UTTERTON, Archdeacon of Surrey.

"Farnham, August 21st, 1868."

The "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge,"

At its Monthly Meeting, held December 1st, 1868, made, at the suggestion of the Standing Committee, a grant of £25 towards the above object, on the condition that the residue be raised.

The undermentioned gentlemen have kindly consented to receive contributions towards the "Drumbo Church Erection Fund," and an acknowledgement of all subscriptions received will be forwarded to the Times, by the Lord Bishop of Huron, immediately after my return to Canada (D.V.) in June next:—

Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler, & Co., Bankers, 50, Cornhill;
 Br. John M. Clabon, P.G.D., P.M., 235, Z., 2, 21, Great George Street, Westminster; and Br. Edward Bullock Watts, 412, Rolls Chambers, 89, Chancery Lane.

[Br. Henry Bartlett, G. Orator of Canada, stands well with the Order there, comes fully accredited, and highly recommended, therefore, the object of appeal being a very deserving one, we hope the brethren will support the Rev. Brother with liberal contributions.—Ed. F.]

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.
BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]
In the Royal Arch degree we are taught the knowledge of the Sacred Name and word of the Most High—to reverence His holy law—to bend with humility and repentance before the throne of grace—to pour out our supplications and thanksgivings to the Father of mercies—to place our whole trust and confidence in His boundless goodness—to look up to Him alone for support in the hour of trial, for comfort under affliction, and for protection against danger. We are led to contemplate those periods in the ancient history of the world when the Almighty visited the sons of men, and spake with them face to face; when the patriarchs of old were favoured with special tokens of the Divine Presence, and with visible manifestations of the Divine will. Of these it will be necessary to specify a few instances, as illustrative of the origin of some of our ceremonial observances.
One of the earliest and most remarkable of these supernatural events was the appearance of the angel of the Lord, robed in a flame of fire, when he addressed the astonished shepherd, Moses, from the centre of the burning bush:—"I am the God of thy fathers—the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Moses, we are told, hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon God, whose awful presence hallowed the earth around; and the chosen servant of Jehovah was accordingly directed by a celestial voice to "put off his shoes from off his feet," and not approach too near the consuming Shechinah of flame, in which sat enthroned the majesty of God. The spot, therefore, became sacred to Moses, as the temple of his Eternal Master, and throughout the East, to this day, all worshippers on entering a house of prayer divest themselves of their sandals, lest any pollution adhering thereto should defile the pure abode of Deity. In reference to this custom, from a Masonic point of view, the learned Hutchinson states:—"As Moses and Joshua were commanded to put their shoes from off their feet because the ground whereon they trod was sanctified by the presence of the Divinity, so the Mason should be divested of every degree of arrogance, and advance in the naked paths of Truth, with steps of innocence, humility, and virtue, to challenge the ensigns of an Order whose institutions arise on the most solemn and sacred principles of religion."

The next Divine appearance, which illustrates a circumstance alluded to in the preceding remarks, was vouchsafed to Joshua, and is recorded in the 5th chapter:—"And it came to pass when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes, and behold there stood a man over against him with his sword drawn in his hand; and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him, 'Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?' and he said, 'Nay, but as captain of the host of the Lord am I now come,' and he said unto Joshua, 'Loose thy shoe from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy.'" But the grandest and most awful manifestation of the Divine Majesty shone forth from Mount Sinai, when the Sacred Law was promulgated. This consecrated mountain was originally called Horeb, from its dryness and sterility, and afterwards Sinai, from the miracle of the burning bush. Stupendous as was the code of legal institutions there delivered to Moses, not less stupendous and awe-inspiring were the wonders under which it was unfolded. The glory and grandeur of the Logos in this appearance are beyond description, and evidently announces the descent of the Deity Himself. It is expressly and sublimely said that Jehovah descended in fire upon Mount Sinai, and while the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, He answered Moses in a voice which struck terror through all the camp of the Israelites. It was on Sinai that the future Messiah revealed himself in all the radiance of his own unapproachable brightness—the mountain tottering on its base, and convulsed to its very centre; the tremendous and incessant thunders, that rent the air in peals that seemed to indicate the return of chaos; and the glare of those impetuous lightnings, at once magnificent and terrible, that darted in every direction from the recumbent SHECHINAH—all these marvels evinced the presence of the true and living God, and the whole scene was so inexpressibly glorious that Moses, the favoured servant of the Most High, tremblingly veiled his face from the insupportable splendour of the Divine Majesty.

Obituary.
BR. GEORGE CRAMP, S.W. UNION LODGE, MARGATE.
"Defunct sic flos in tempore verno."
We have to record the decease of Bro. George Cramp, late S.W. of the Union Lodge, Margate (No. 127), who expired at the early age of thirty-six, a victim to that fell disease, "consumption," which has been long remarked as peculiarly fatal to the finest specimens of the Anglo-Saxon race.
The deceased gentleman was in the early summer of his days, of fine proportions, noble countenance, and of courteous and generous manners. From his cultivated mind and close attention to Masonry, he was deemed a young Mason of great promise, when the disease, which has laid low so many of the strongest and fairest of Britain's sons and daughters, showed itself; and, despite the skill and unremitting attention of the most talented physicians, it was but too apparent that the "fiat" had gone forth.
"Yet such the destiny of all on earth,
So flourishes and fades majestic man;
Fair is the bud his vernal morn brings forth,
And fostering gales awhile the nursing fan;"
until death (the ruthless destroyer of both strong and weak amongst mortals) steps in, and cuts short his brief career.
Bro. George Cramp (one of the sons of Robert Cramp, Esq., of Cannon Brewery, Ramsgate, and brother to the W.M. of the Royal Navy Lodge, Ramsgate, No 429) was interred in the family vault in the cemetery of St. John's, Margate, on Saturday last, May 1st, when (in addition to his relatives, who were in mourning coaches) he was followed to the grave by a mournful procession of thirty gentlemen, attired in deep mourning, with all the solemn trappings of woe (but without collar, badge, or emblem)—sorrow depicted in every face. That solemn band of mourners formed on either side of the entrance or avenue to the church whilst the chief mourners passed, and then followed into the sacred edifice. An idle spectator inquired who they were. Our readers will recognise in them the bereaved brethren of his lodge.
Peace to his manes. May he have ascended to the summit of his profession, and reached "Those blessed mansions not built by mortal hands, but eternally in the heavens."

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Royal Jubilee Lodge, No. 72.—This lodge, so celebrated for its excellent working, met on Monday last, at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street. The W.M., Bro. George Oxford, was in the chair. The minutes of the previous lodge were read and confirmed. A ballot was taken for the admission of Mr. G. D. Legge, who was proposed by Br. J. Johnson and seconded by the W.M., and on its proving unanimous in his favour, he was duly initiated into the mysteries of the Order by the W.M. in a very excellent manner. Brothers Manning and Foster having answered the usual questions satisfactorily, were, by particular desire, raised to the sublime degree of M.M. by Bro. Joshua Nunn, P.M. The lodge being closed, the brethren adjourned to a very excellent banquet, provided by Bro. Clemmo and superintended by Bro. Smith. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly honoured, and the W.M. then proposed the health of the newly-initiated Bro. Legge, who in an eloquent reply said he felt a deep regret for not having been initiated many years ago, but hoped his future career in Masonry would prove to the brethren the pleasure he had in being initiated by so old and valued a friend and brother as the W.M.—Bro. Nunn then proposed the health of the W.M., saying that he and the brethren had to congratulate themselves in the selection of the W.M., who had for two successive years occupied that proud position, giving satisfaction to every one, not only by his excellent working and able presidency, but by his unceasing efforts to see the duties of the chair carried out. He (Bro. Nunn) considered that the success of the lodge was attributable to the exertions of its worthy W.M.—The W.M., in appropriate terms, returned thanks, and said he hoped to meet the brethren of the lodge at a summer banquet, when the ladies would be present. (Applause.) He then proposed "The Visitors," who were Bros. T. White, J.W. 22; J. Green, 663; J. Collis, P.P.G. S.D. of Hants, P.M. 130; J. Thomas, P.M. 507; H. M. Levy, P.M. 188; Taylor, P.M. 22; Rudderforth, late 195; Child, 1158; and Long, W.M. 435. Bros. Collis and Thomas returned thanks in able speeches. The harmony of the evening was enlivened with some excellent singing by the W.M. and Bros. Marsden, Widdowson, Dodson, H. M. Levy, Webb, Nunn, and Rudderforth. Altogether a most agreeable evening was spent, and the brethren separated at an early hour.

Lodge of Joppa, No. 188.—The above lodge met on Monday, the 3rd inst., at the Albion Hotel, Aldersgate-street. Bro. M. Vandipenheuer, the J.P.M., having taken the chair (in the absence of the W.M., Bro. Ralph, through indisposition), the minutes of the former lodge were read and confirmed. A ballot was then taken for the admission of Mr. H. Hartog, who was unanimously elected and duly initiated into the Order. Bro. J. Grieve, of Lodge 153, was balloted for and accepted as a joining member. Bros. Montague Barnett, C. Nathan, and J. Susman having answered the usual questions in a satisfactory manner, were raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The lodge being closed, the brethren adjourned to a slight repast, the usual toasts being given and responded to. The visitors were Bros. N. Defries, P.M. Tranquillity; and Wolfe. Some good singing by Bros. Hartog, Parker, Nathan and Hunt enhanced the pleasures of a very agreeable evening.

Southern Star Lodge, No. 1158.—A meeting of this lodge was held on Monday evening last, at Bro. Allatt's, the Montpelier Tavern, Walworth, Brother Thomas H. Pulsford, W.M., presiding; H. Thompson, I.P.M., Bro. Goldsbond, P.M., acting as Senior Warden, D. Scott Bayfield, Junior Warden, Charles E. Thompson, Secretary and Senior Deacon, Towers, Inner Guard, and Bros. Shepherd, Page, Harris, Stevenson, Anstey, Wright, Huddleston, Lewin (of the Domatic 177), Allatt, Potter (P.M. of several Lodges), Shaunessy (of an Irish Lodge), Hammond, and Walker. The Lodge was opened in due form and with solemn prayer, and afterwards raised to the third degree, when Bros. Stevenson, Anstey, Varnham, and Lewin, of the Domatic Lodge 177, were admitted, entrusted, and afterwards raised to the sublime degree of M.M.'s, the W.M. giving with due effect the traditional history, to which the brethren paid great attention. A description of the tracing board followed. The Lodge was lowered to the second degree, when Bros. Pearson and Jaques were passed to the degree of a F.C. The entered apprentice degree was then assumed, when Messrs. W. Gibbs, J. Warne, and William Davis, were duly initiated into the mysteries and privileges of ancient, free, and accepted Masonry. A light supper was provided, after which the toast of the "Initiates" was given, to which Bro. Gibbs responded, and said he felt very proud indeed in being admitted a member of the Grand Order of Freemasons, and trusted he might do all in his power befitting a good and true member. Bro. Thompson, P.M., proposed the health of the W.M., and said as it was about the last time he would preside over them he did not think they ought to pass over it without paying him a compliment, for the unusually excellent manner in which he had performed his duties. The toast was received with cheers, and the brethren separated, pleased with their evening's entertainment.

Urban Lodge, No. 1196.—This lodge met on the 27th ult. at the Old Jerusalem Tavern, St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell. The W.M., Brother R. Marsh (Henry Marston) in the chair. The lodge being opened and the minutes of former lodge read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for the admission of Messrs. John Crawford Wilson and Wm. Creswick (the eminent tragedian). Bro. James Henderson (1221) was passed to the degree of F.C., the ceremony being worked in a manner worthy of imitation by every brother who aspires to so high an honour as that of W.M. The brethren then sat down to a very excellent banquet, provided in Bro. Wicken's best style. The usual loyal and masonic toasts were given and responded to. The W.M., in proposing the health of the newly-initiated brethren, said it was the proudest moment of his life to have had the pleasure of initiating two such distinguished brethren, one of whom he had been professionally connected with for so many years, and whose high moral and intellectual character was so well known as to need no further eulogium on his part. Bro. Wilson was known as one whom to know was to respect as a great writer and a sincere and warm-hearted friend. He (the W.M.) had therefore had the pleasure and honour this evening of initiating a great actor and a great poet.—Bro. Creswick, in returning thanks, said that it had been his wish for years to receive this honour, but his professional avocations had hitherto prevented it. Yet, he had always been a Brother in heart, sympathy, and feeling. He was now a Brother in reality. It was a hope long deferred, but his greatest wish had now been gratified, namely, that of having had the very high honour of being initiated by one whom he so much esteemed.—Bro. Wilson, in a very happy and humorous speech, also returned thanks.—Bro. Wilson responded for the country visitors, and Bro. H. M. Levy for the town.—The visitors were Bros. Wilson (P.P.G.S.D. South Wales), Creswick (son of the newly-initiated brother), Nelson (W.M. 1221), Buller (9), Le Miere (9), Henderson (1221), H. M. Levy (P.M. 188), and Field (P.M. 624).—Bro. Dr. J. Carpenter, I.P.M., then proposed the health of the W.M. in very eloquent terms, congratulating the brethren on having selected one so well qualified to perform the Masonic ritual, and so perfect when presiding over the banquet table.—The W.M. returned thanks in a suitable speech; and it was remarked that few lodges could have a more excellent Master.—Bro. Sawyer, in returning thanks for the junior officers, said the lodge had originated from the Urban Club, composed chiefly of literary gentlemen.—In the course of the evening some capital singing was given by Bros. E. L. Blanchard (who, in a song of his own composition, created roars of laughter), Creswick, jun., Carpenter, H. Williams, H. M. Levy, and Field.—Great credit is due to Bro. Jas. Terry, the indefatigable secretary, who not only in his official capacity looked after the interests of the lodge, but also to the comfort of the brethren and visitors. After passing a delightful evening the brethren separated at an early hour.

PROVINCIAL.

Villiers Lodge, No. 1194.—A regular meeting of the lodge was held on the 1st inst., at the Northumberland Arms Hotel, Isleworth, Middlesex, and was one of the most successful ever held. Bro. E. Clark, I.P.M., occupied the chair, (the W.M. being abroad), and was supported by Bros. J. Trickett, S.W.; H. Allman, S.D. as J.W.; R. Gurney, Treas.; R. Wentworth Little, P.M. Sec.; E. T. Osbaldeston, J.D.; T. Small, D.C.; W. Harvey, F. Walters, P.M.; R. A. Steel, J. Jones, Major H. W. Palmer, E. J. Bailey, W. B. Tustin, E. H. Dalby, Geo. Kenning, and J. G. Marsh. The only visitor was Bro. Boddy of 945. Messrs. Benjamin Glover, C.E., and Lewis Ackworth, were duly initiated during the evening, and Bro. Palmer was raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned to a sumptuous banquet, admirably served, and comprising all the delicacies of the season. The usual toasts were given and responded to, especial honour being rendered to the two "initiates," Bros. Glover and Ackworth, with whose names those of the two joining members, Bros. J. G. Marsh, P.M. 192, and Geo. Kenning 192, were coupled by the W.M. We anticipate a very prosperous future for this young lodge, as the management of affairs is evidently entrusted to experienced heads in the Order. Apologies for non-attendance were received from Bros. W. Dodd, J.W.; F. J. Lancaster, I.G.; A. Avery, P.M., and G. Cattell, P.M., &c.

IRELAND.

BANDON.—The Ancient Boyne Lodge, No. 84.—The brethren of this old fraternity assembled in full force at their Lodge Rooms, Downshire Arms Hotel, on Friday evening, April 23rd, at seven, p.m., on an Emergency Summons, to initiate Lord Bernard, of Castle-Bernard, only son and heir of the Right Hon. the Earl of Bandon, R. Wheeler Doherty, Esq., of Mount Prospect, and Eyre Maunsell Eyre, Esq., of Downdanial Castle. A great number of the brethren of "old 84" attended. In fact, since this Lodge was first opened, which was on the 29th of May, 1738, and it is now approaching its hundred and thirty-first anniversary, the books do not record so large a gathering. There were present,—Steward R. Tresilian, W.M., G. Williams French, P.M. S.W., Robert Sutton, J.W., R. Seargent Topham, S.D., Carroll Dawson, J.D., Matthew Lee, I.G., George Bennett, Secretary and Treasurer, William Belcher, R. N. Wolfe, Thomas Peters, Wingfield Corley, Samuel Cotterall, Samuel Strahan, William Joyce, Joseph Morris, William Sillifant, Alexander Appleby, Edward Olliffe, Charles Greaves, Edward Toole, William Fuller, Ryder Nash, Edward Stanley, George Hagarty, William Topham, Robert Payne, Walter Bullen, Thomas Ruddock, Frederick Cornwall, Zachariah Hawks, P.M., Richard Bright, Jas. Martin, James Chatterton, 70th Regiment No. 2, Rev. J. Meldon, Apollo, Oxford, William Holland Kingston, Edward Alexander Appleby, Lord Bernard, R. Wheeler Doherty, Eyre Maunsell Eyre, Edward Lysson, Tyler. Upon the conclusion of the usual ceremonies the brethren adjourned to their supper room, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion with flags and banners of a loyal and Masonic character, and after doing ample justice to the good things placed before them by Bro. Lavne, they were entertained with several good songs. Amongst the rest "The Entered Apprentice" was given by Bro. Hawks, with all that sweetness and brilliancy for which that eminent member of the Craft is distinguished. Then followed a number of songs by Bros. Cornwall, Lee, Peters, Payne, &c., after which the brethren departed, having spent a delightful evening.

Trales Lodge, No. 379.—This lodge which boasts of being one of the largest provincial lodges in Ireland, met as usual on Monday evening 3rd inst. Bro. R. H. Walpole, W.M., in the chair. Lodge opened in first degree, and called up to second, when Bro. B. O'Connor was passed to F.C. by the Treas., Bro. D. W. Gillycaddy, junr., in his usual impressive and efficient manner. Bro. John Gray, who since his admission has shown a spirit thoroughly imbued with a desire to serve the best interests of the lodge, gave notice of his intention to move a complete revision of the rules. Some other business having been transacted lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment, a visitor, Bro. J. Gordon, of 93 Dublin, largely contributing to the evening's amusement. The emergency meetings were held during the past month, and so great is the amount of business on hand, that another is called for this week, when Bro. Newbold will be raised to the sublime degree of M.M. It is gratifying to add, that notwithstanding the severe and pointed opposition Masonry has experienced in this in town, the Craft continues to progress most satisfactorily, and although fiercely attacked by the Ultramontane party in every issue of their local journal, it recommends itself to the favour of every well-thinking mind as evidenced by the increased anxiety to gain a true and clear knowledge of the Order.

MARK MASONRY.

St. Mark's Lodge, No. 24.—A meeting of this lodge was held at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, on the 3rd inst., when the chair was occupied by Bro. H. C. Levander, G.D.C., W. Master, supported by the following officers: Bros. T. Wescombe, G. Steward, S.W.; J. G. Marsh, J.W.; R. W. Little, P.M., Sec.; Rev. W. B. Church, Chaplain and M.O.; T. Cubitt, S.O.; and H. Parker, Organist. During the evening the election of officers for the ensuing year was held, with the undermentioned result: Bros. T. Wescombe, W.M., and T. Cubitt, Treasurer; the election of the Tyler was deferred, in consequence of his unaccountable non-attendance. A banquet followed the proceedings in the lodge, and a most agreeable evening was enjoyed by the brethren.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

Joppa Chapter, No. 188.—A convocation of this excellent chapter took place on Monday, 26th inst., at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street. Comps. J. Lazarus, M.E.Z.; Littauer, H.; S. V. Abrahams, J.; and Pollitzer, first soj., the ceremony being worked in a perfect manner, and a ballot was taken for the following brethren, viz.: Bros. H. M. Levy, P.M., 188; Hemsworth, W.M., 190; Rowsell, 205; Faulkner, 188; Worrell, J.W., 795. The chapter being closed, the company adjourned to a very splendid banquet, superintended by Bros. Jennings and Keeping. The usual toasts were given. The newly exalted companions severally returned thanks. The visitors were Bros. Reed, 733, and Crappell, who were then regularly exalted into Royal Arch Masonry.

SUPREME GRAND CHAPTER OF ENGLAND.

The Quarterly Convocation of this body was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, on Wednesday the 3th inst. M.E. Comp. the Rev. J. Huyshe, M.A., 3rd Grand Principal, and P.G. Supt. for Devonshire, filled the chair of Z., with Comp. J. Fawcett, P.G. Supt. for Durham as H.; and Comp. H. Murray, D.G. Superintendent for China as J. Among others present we noticed Comps. J. Hervey, E.; Æ. J. McIntyre, Registrar; E. S. Snell, J. Smith, J. Nunn, F. Walters, H. G. Buss, J. M. Clabon, J. Brett, R. W. Little, F. Rennoch, W. Platt, W. Watson, T. J. Sabine, R. Spencer, E. B. Baker, R. J. Spiers, Dr. T. H. J. Goldsboro', G. S. States, C. T. Dorey, H. Browne, C. C. Dumas, H. Muggeridge S.B., J. Thomas D.C., B. Head, G. W. K. Potter, N. Bradford, W. A. F. Powell, A. Holman, W. Ough, J. Caldwell, T. J. Sabine, R. Grey, C. Thorne, W. M. Bywater, J. K. Stevens, J. H. Cox, Rev. R. J. F., and Thomas.

Upon the minutes being put for confirmation a division ensued upon that portion relating to the change of the hour of Meeting, from 8 to 7 o'clock, when the alteration to the latter time was confirmed by a majority of one.

The following Report was, upon motion duly made and seconded, taken as read:—

The Report of the Committee of General Purposes.
To the Supreme Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of England.

The Committee of General purposes beg to Report that they have examined the Accounts from the 20th January, 1869, to the 20th April, 1869, both inclusive, which they find to be as follows:—

To Balance 20th January	£357	4	10
To Subsequent Receipts	251	0	6
	£608	5	4
By Disbursements during the Quarter	£122	19	8
Applied from Unappropriated Account	6	4	0
By Balance	479	1	8

which Balance is in the hands of Messrs. Willis, Percival and Co., Bankers of the Grand Treasurer.

The Committee have also to report that a Complaint has been laid before them by the British Chapter, No. 334, Cape Town, South Africa, against Comp. William Rufus Ellis, for having represented that he had a Grand Chapter Certificate, when in fact he had none. The summary of the Complaint is that, in 1863, Comp. W. R. Ellis visited the Chapter, No. 334, and produced a Certificate from the Volubian Chapter, Falmouth, No. 89 (now 75), that he had been exalted in that Chapter in 1846, which Certificate was then (in 1863) indorsed by Scribe E. of Chapter, No. 334. That in the early part of 1868, he had been admitted as a joining Member of No. 334, on the proposition of Comp. King (the complainant). That he was then asked by the Scribe E. of the Chapter, No. 334, for the fee for registration in the Supreme Grand Chapter;—that he replied, that being already registered, it was not necessary to remit it to the Supreme Grand Chapter, and that he had occupied the Chair of J., in the Volubian Chapter. That his name was nevertheless transmitted to the Grand Scribe E. in England, for registration in the books of the Supreme Grand Chapter. That in July, 1868, he was elected to and installed in the chair of H., in the Chapter, No. 334. That in consequence of some question having been raised (after the installation had taken place) as to his eligibility to fill the Chair by reason of communication from the Grand Scribe E., dated 28th March, 1868, to the effect that the name of Comp. Ellis did not appear on the Registry of the Supreme Grand Chapter as a Comp. of the Volubian Chapter. Comp. Ellis was called upon for an explanation, when he attributed the omission to the negligence of the then Grand Scribe E. (Comp. William Henry White). That the Chapter, No. 334, accepted the explanation, but wrote again to the Grand Scribe E., and received in due course a letter dated 28th July, 1868, repeating that the name of Comp. Ellis had never been returned for registration by the Volubian

Chapter. That Comp. Ellis was, at the next Convocation, on the 20th October, 1868, called upon for further explanation; when he stated that the Supreme Grand Chapter was not in the habit of granting any Certificate other than the one he had produced by him (that of the Volubian Chapter) during the time that he was connected with the Volubian Chapter. That this explanation was at once rejected by the Chapter 334, as incorrect, whereupon Comp. Ellis expressed his desire to retire from the Chapter pending a reference to the Supreme Grand Chapter, which was unanimously agreed to by the Chapter, No. 334; and which Resolution was confirmed at the next Convocation, on the 11th January, 1869. That after the Chapter of the 20th October, 1868, was closed, Comp. Ellis admitted that he knew his Certificate was not a Grand Chapter Certificate, and that he knew his name had never been returned to Grand Chapter for registration. That a notice was thereupon sent to the other chapters in the neighbourhood, and a Resolution was passed:—"That Comp. Ellis had been irregularly admitted to the Chapter, No. 334, and to the office of H., and that he having withdrawn, his Chair be declared vacant, and another Comp. was thereupon elected to fill the Chair."

Companion Ellis addressed a communication to the Grand Scribe E., dated the 20th February, 1869, wherein he states that he was exalted in the Volubian Chapter, in 1846, by his father John Ellis, who was then M.E.Z. of the Chapter, and received the Certificate of that Chapter, which he had produced to the Chapter, No. 334. He virtually admits the statements contained in the Complaint, but attempts to explain his remarks at the Convocation in October, 1868, by stating that he "could only account for his not being in possession of a Grand Chapter Certificate, if his memory served him rightly, that he had an idea that some years ago (probably 15 or more) the question as to Private Chapters granting Certificates was brought before the Grand Chapter, and it was then decided that those Companions who had Certificates under such Chapters should be allowed to retain them, but that afterwards no Private Chapter should be allowed to issue Certificates."

The Committee have fully investigated and carefully considered this Complaint, and they regret that they can come to no other conclusion than that Comp. Ellis deliberately and wilfully deceived the Chapter, No. 334, by making the representation that he was in possession of a Certificate from the Supreme Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, and the "British Chapter, No. 334, Cape Town," have made out their statement and complaint.

The Committee, therefore, in pursuance of their duty to the Supreme Grand Chapter, respectfully recommend that Companion William Rufus Ellis, be suspended from his functions and privileges as a Royal Arch Mason during the pleasure of the Supreme Grand Chapter.

The Committee have likewise to report that they have received the following Petitions; viz:

1st. From Companions Francis George Irwin as Z., William Augustus Scott as H., Frederick Vizard as J., and six others, for a Chapter to be attached to the St. Kew Lodge, No. 1222, Weston-super-Mare, to be called the "Inkerman Chapter," and to meet at the Masonic Rooms, Regent-street, Weston-super-Mare, in the County of Somerset, on the third Monday of January, April, July and October.

2ndly. From Companions John Boyd as Z., George I. Sharpe as H., William Carter as J., and eleven others, for a Chapter to be attached to the Lodge of Prudent Brethren, No. 145, London, to be called the "Chapter of Prudent Brethren," and to meet at Freemasons' Hall, London, on the first Tuesday in the months of February, April and December.

3rdly. From Companions Richard Hall as Z., Thomas Heffernan as H., Henry Cotton as J., and six others, for a Chapter to be attached to the Witham Lodge, No. 297, Lincoln, to be called the "Chapter of Concord," and to meet at the Masonic Hall, Lincoln, on the first Tuesday in each month.

4thly. From Companions Edward James Morris as Z., Philip Henry Rowland as H., Peter Donaldson as J., and six others, for a Chapter to be attached to the Cambrian Lodge, No. 364, Neath, to be called the "St. David's Chapter," and to meet at the Masonic Hall, Neath, Glamorganshire, on the second Monday in each month.

5thly. From Companions Richard de Mulinfeldt Lawson as Z., Samuel Wittey as H., and Charles Raikes Davy as J., and six others for a Chapter to be attached to the Lodge of Concord, No. 632, Trowbridge, to be called the "Chapter of Harmony," and to meet at the Masonic Hall, Trowbridge, Wiltshire, on the third Wednesday in the months of January, March, May, September and November.

6thly. From Companions John Morton as Z., William Archer as H., John Lunt as J., and seven others, for a Chapter to be attached to the Walton Lodge, No. 1086, Kirkdale, to be called the "Walton Chapter," and to meet at the Queen's Arms hotel, Kirkdale on the first Friday in each month.

7thly. From Companions William Langley as Z., Frederick P. Newcombe as H., William Kelly as J., and seven others, for a Chapter to be attached to the Rutland Lodge, No. 1130, Melton Mowbray, to be called the "De Mowbray Chapter," and to meet at the George Hotel, Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire, twice in every year:

The foregoing Petitions being in all respects regular, the Committee recommend that the prayers thereof be respectively granted.

The Committee have also received a Petition from Companions George Fead Lambert as Z., Thomas Francis Dallin as H., Charles W. Spencer Stanhope as J., and seven others, for a Chapter to be attached to the "Aposlo University Lodge, 357, Oxford, to be called the "Apollo University Chapter," and to meet at the University Masonic Hall, Oxford, on the last Thursday of February, May and November.

This Petition is recommended by the Provincial Grand Superintendent, but requires the consent of the Lodge to which it is to be attached, and the registration of two of the Petitioners. Subject to these requisites being supplied before the Meeting of the Grand Chapter, the Committee recommend the prayer of the Petition to be granted.

(Signed) W. PULTENEY SCOTT,
President,

FREEMASONS' HALL, LONDON, W.C.,
21st April, 1869

Comp. W. R. Ellis was, pursuant to the recommendation of the Committee, suspended from his functions as a Royal Arch Mason, and all the Chapters applied for were granted, including the Apollo University Chapter, at Oxford. The M.E.Z., in the chair, then announced the appointments for the year as hereunder stated:—The Earl of Zetland, Z.; The Earl de Grey and Ripon, H.; The Rev. J. Huyshe, M.A., J.; John Hervey, E.; John M. Clabon, N.; S. Leith Tomkins, P.S.; Wm. A. F. Powell, 1st A. Soj.; E. Brackstone Baker, 2nd A. Soj.; Samuel Tomkins, Treasurer; Æneas J. McIntyre, Registrar; Henry Empson, Sword Bearer; Conrad C. Dumas, Standard Bearer; Joshua Nunn, Director of Ceremonies; Charles B. Payne, G. Janitor.

The Committee for the ensuing year will be as follows:—Comp. W. Pulteney Scott, President; B. Head, and E. J. Fraser, nominated by the M.E.Z.; and Comps. J. Smith, E. B. Baker, J. Nunn, J. Brett, F. Bennoch, and J. Savage, elected by Grand Chapter. We regret much to find that Comp. F. Walters, an indefatigable worker in the cause, and a constant attendant at every Masonic duty, was not re-elected a member of the Committee, but the extraordinary popularity of the companions above-named will account for this. The Grand Chapter was then closed.

We beg to remind Royal Arch Masons, especially those residing in the southern districts of the metropolis, that the Domestic Chapter of Instruction will be formally re opened at the Horns Tavern, Kennington Park, at 7 p.m., on Saturday, the 15th inst. At a preliminary meeting held recently, Comp. R. Wentworth Little, M.E.Z., of the parent chapter, and P.Z. 975, was unanimously elected Preceptor, and he will preside as Z. on the 15th inst., assisted by Companions J. Stevens, P.Z. 720 as H.; and H. Webb, M.E.Z. 72 as J. A numerous attendance is expected, and Companion Brett, President of Metropolitan Chapter of Instruction, will lend his efficient aid.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.—We beg to remind the brethren that the 81st Anniversary Festival of this excellent Institution will be held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, under the presidency of Lord Leigh, Provincial Grand Master of Warwickshire, on Wednesday, the 12th inst., when we hope to see a large gathering of the supporters of our Masonic Charities. We can testify unequivocally that the school is admirably managed, and in every respect reflects the greatest credit upon all who are officially connected with the Institution.

IMPORTANT.

PERMANENT ENLARGEMENT OF "THE FREEMASON."

We have determined to permanently enlarge "The Freemason" from next week, to 12 pages, thus making it the largest Masonic Journal in the world. We are induced to take this step not only by reason of the great circulation which "The Freemason" has already secured, but in order to find space for the many interesting articles on Freemasonry which we have now on hand. Thoroughly assured of the support of many leading members of the Order in the United Kingdom, we now appeal to the Craft Universal to aid in extending the circulation of our Journal; and if each subscriber will only introduce "The Freemason" to his friends we shall soon attain to a weekly circulation of Ten Thousand copies.

A full account of the Consecration of the Golden Rule Lodge will be given in our next.

The Freemason,

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1869.

THE FREEMASON is published on Saturday Mornings in time for the early trains. The price of THE FREEMASON is Twopence per week; quarterly subscription (including postage) 3s. 3d. Annual Subscription, 12s. Subscriptions payable in advance. All communications, letters, &c., to be addressed to the Editor, 3 & 4, Little Britain, E.C. The Editor will pay careful attention to all MSS. entrusted to him, but cannot undertake to return them unless accompanied by postage stamps.

THE NEW GRAND OFFICERS.

THE task of selection, when the aspirants are numerous and the appointments few, is one at all times attended with difficulties, but in the choice of Grand Lodge officers for 1868-69, such a wise discrimination and sound judgment have been exercised as to call for our unqualified admiration.

In the R.W. Brother EARL PERCY, who has been advanced to the dignity of Senior Grand Warden, we recognise a young and zealous craftsman, who now wields the hiram of power in the Churchill Lodge, at Oxford, and whose earnest devotion to the interests of Freemasonry bespeaks the approbation of every member of the Order.

Bro. Dodson, the Junior Grand Warden, has been a member of the Royal Clarence Lodge, at Brighton, for about eleven years, and is much respected by the Craft in Sussex. His ability as the Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons is so well known as to render comment superfluous.

Bro. the Rev. C. J. MARTYN, our new Grand Chaplain, hails from the Foundation Lodge, at Cheltenham, and is a highly worthy member of his sacred profession, as well as of our ancient institution.

Bro. SAMUEL LEITH TOMKINS, S.G.D., is a Past Grand Steward, a P.M. of the Lodge of Antiquity (No. 2), and a member of the University Lodge, No. 1118. Bro. Tomkins not only possesses strong hereditary claims as the son of our esteemed Grand Treasurer, and the nephew of that ever-genial Mason, Bro. J. Newton Tomkins, but is also an eminent Craftsman himself, having filled with distinction the post of Vice-President of the Board of General Purposes during the past year.

Bro. WILLIAM A. F. POWELL, S.G.D., is the popular Deputy Prov. Grand Master for Bristol, where his name is a household word in Freemasonry, and we can say without hesitation that Bro. Powell's promotion to the dais is a source of satisfaction and delight to our brethren in the West of England.

Bro. J. COOPER FORSTER, J.G.D., is a P.M. of the Lodge of Unity, No. 69. He is a highly-respected brother, and has borne his fair share in the work of Masonic boards and committees.

Bro. E. BRACKSTONE BAKER, Past Grand Steward, and P.M. of the Lodge of Emulation, No. 21, is a most zealous and efficient Mason, and has likewise served with great credit on the various boards and committees of the Craft. Our readers will not have forgotten the services of Bro. Baker as a mediator between the Grand Lodges of England and Canada, when certain difficulties affecting the St. Lawrence Lodge, at Montreal, were adjusted through his able and kindly interposition. In recognition of his effective aid, the Grand Lodge of Canada, we believe, at the period to which we refer, conferred upon Bro. Baker the rank of a Past Senior Grand Warden.

To Bro. CONRAD C. DUMAS, A.G. Director of Ceremonies, most of the observations made upon the preceding names apply in every respect. He is a Past Grand Steward, a P.M., and a Past Vice President of the Board of General Purposes. In greeting Bro. Dumas's appointment, we cannot however witness the retirement of his predecessor, Bro. Fenn, without expressing our sense of the rare ability and uniform urbanity with which he conducted the duties of his important post, more especially during the recent ceremonial at the Inauguration of the New Buildings.

The Sword of State could not have been confided to better hands than those of Bro. JOSHUA NUNN, who has evinced throughout the whole of his Masonic career, a thorough love for the Order, and unquestionable energy in promoting its prosperity. Bro. Nunn is a P.M. of the Caledonian and Lily Lodges, and the present W.M. of the Eclectic Lodge, No. 1201. He is also a regular attendant at the meetings of the Boards of General Purposes and Benevolence, where his practical experience renders him a pre-eminently useful member.

The appointment of Bro. JAMES BRETT, P.M. 177, as Assistant Grand Pursuivant, has been hailed with unbounded gratification by all who know his worth—that is to say, by the whole metropolitan Craft, and by many in other parts of the country. If untiring perseverance in the pursuit of Masonic knowledge, ability in acquiring it, and inexhaustible good-humour in imparting it, are just claims to the honours of Grand Lodge, no living Mason in England can prefer stronger ones than Brother James Brett. He, and we believe all, the new Grand Officers are distinguished for their support of the charities, and of every good work in connection with the Order.

We therefore heartily congratulate the Craft, as well as the brethren in question, upon the accession of such worthy Masons to the honours and dignities of the Grand Lodge.

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

The Ancient and Accepted Rite.—“Rose Croix” may perhaps learn something about the Belgian Constitution, quoted by Bro. Dr. Leeson, on applying to Bro. Rd. Spencer, of London; it mentions several high grades besides the Kligh Kadosh. I am acquainted with everything of importance that has been written in reference to the Ancients and the Moderns, and believe, with the former, that their system was the older one of the two, both being the outgrowth of the Operative Guilds. I look upon the statement of Bro. Dr. Leeson, as to the Baldwin Camp of Bristol, to refer to the Rose Croix and other degrees, and as made to advance his own rite. That camp was certainly reinforced by French Knights, after a long previous existence. If Bro. Dr. Leeson has any documents, referring to the original establishment of the Bristol Templar Camp, let them be produced. The Rose Croix was formerly considered, in England, the Templar ne plus ultra—a fact in itself sufficient to show that it was of more recent establishment in this country than the Templar. The closing remark of “Rose Croix” about second-hand quotations, is mere assumption; I made no quotations, and was quite aware of the difference in reading to which he alludes. I have written upon ordinary evidence, accessible to any well-informed Mason, and were I to go over all the Masonic literature of 150 years in support of my views, I should require a dozen of your double numbers.—JOHN YARKER.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

FULHAM.—The W.M. must serve for twelve months to be entitled to rank as a P.M.

IOTA.—If you apply to the Provincial Grand Master, through the Provincial Grand Secretary, you will doubtless obtain the information desired. With reference to the status of P.M.'s in a lodge, there can be no objection to allowing brethren who have not passed the chair in that particular lodge, to sit with the P.M.'s at the social board; it is an act of courtesy which is pleasing to the brethren concerned, and does no harm to anyone.

SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

On Tuesday, the 4th instant, the ceremony of laying the foundation stones of the new offices of this society was performed by Miss Burdett Coutts. The site of the new buildings, which is situated in Jermyn-street, St. James's, and is valued at nearly £4000, was presented a short time ago by a member of the committee, Mr. G. Wood, and the erection of the offices was immediately commenced. The works are now in an advanced state, and it is intended that they shall be completed before the end of July next. Miss Burdett Coutts, accompanied by the Earl of Harrowby, President of the Society; the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, Mr. Wood, and other members of the Committee, entered the building on Tuesday shortly before four o'clock, and after the 100th Psalm had been chanted, the Secretary, Mr. John Colam, read the statistical report of the proceedings and development of the society since its commencement in 1824. Another Psalm was then chanted, after which the noble President addressed the assembly. He pointed out the magnitude of the work undertaken by the society, and showed how easy it would be for every one to assist them, by instilling into the minds of children the duty of kindness to dumb animals. He also referred to the numerous Acts of Parliament passed mainly through the exertions of this society, and appealed for funds to defray the cost of the building.

Miss Burdett Coutts then laid the foundation-stone with the assistance of Bro. Edward Clark, P.M. 1194, one of the architects. The trowel used on the occasion, and manufactured by Mr. J. W. Benson, of 25, Old Bond-street, was of silver, handsomely engraved, and bore a suitable inscription. The square, level, plumb-rule, and maul were supplied by Bro. Geo. Kenning, Little Britain, London. The 104th psalm having been sung, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol said a prayer and pronounced the benediction. The National Anthem was next sung and the proceedings closed. Amongst those present were the Earl of Romney, Field Marshal Sir J. F. Burgoyne, the Dowager Countess of Essex, the Countess Beauchamp, &c. The architects of the new building are Messrs. Pain and Clark, and the estimated cost £3,500. Several donations were promised by ladies and gentlemen present at the ceremony.

We have seen a drawing of the intended building, which will be in the Italian style, with the elevation in Portland stone, and polished granite.

THE FIFTY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF STABILITY LODGE OF INSTRUCTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

On Friday, the 30th ult., a large number of influential brethren in the Craft assembled at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, to celebrate the Fifty-second Anniversary of the Stability Lodge of Instruction.

This is a treat seldom missed by lovers of the working—the proper working—of the interesting ritual of the Craft. Bro. Henry Muggeridge, P.M. (192), was the W.M. and as his name is well known in the Craft as one of the most able Preceptors, it need scarcely be said there was a large attendance of the Brethren, amongst whom we noticed the following:—

Bros. A. Pratt (22), Strickland Muggeridge (192), Dr. Goldsboro (998), Owen Wainwright (261), J. Hart (22), H. Birdseye (715), Cargill (403), Pendred (92), Tattersall (13), Allwright (140), Capt. Egles Fitzroy, Purdy (861), Legg (861), Gardiner (861), Meanwell (861), Haywood (127), Colls (1), Partridge (22), Townend (715), Hems-worth (190), Jacob (92), Pratt (217), Bryant (12), W. R. Bryant (12), Brodey (217), A. Partridge (22), T. G. Browning (18), Nicholas (890), Thos. Meggy (98), Schultz (21), Worrup (217), Thorpe (217), Gover (1), Miles (49), Stevens (49), J. T. Lacy (49), James (217), Wyche (715), G. H. Lambert (548), G. Newington (49), Keighley (49), Parsons (22), Venn (49), Dinsdale (715), Atkins (427), Coles (18), Wych, Thorn (49), Crouch (12), Lindwell (1083), Bryant (49), Trott (192), Willie (171), Copestake (869), R. C. Mansfield (7), Beatie (410), J. White (61), Hubback (58), Lowenstarke (49), Bresbane (715), Palmer (715), Truscott (217), Hughes (217), Cox (19), Hart (217), Scriven (5), W. Birdseye (715), Robson (715), Cubitt (157), Crossfield (715), Docket (101), Wolpert (720), McIntyre (G.O.), Goodyear (192), Wallrond (18), Weedon (715), Laurie (12), Stoner (715), Gale (715), Massey, Beadon, and Hogg (58), Evans, Day (22), M. Lowenstarke (49), Hilyard (715), Harris, Theobald, Gray (2), Keble (715), Dyer (715), Peacock (49), Garuico (49), Webber (25), Wintle (933), R. Stewart (12), McKernam (122), Mansfield (21), Yeoman (715), Paddle (715), Dumas (99), Tipton (49), Clemen (715), C. F. Lilley (12), A. H. Lilley (12), Scott (22), C. C. Dumas (G.L.), Stevens (18), Kenning (192), Jepson (715), Marsh (192), Emmens (G.L.), Cogan (12), Hervey (Grand Sec.), Steib (49), Kerr (241), Rawles, T. Snelgrove (12), Collett, G. S. Snelgrove (12), Dudley Rolls (12), Chas. E. Thompson (1, 158 and 177.)

The lodge was opened in the first and second degrees, and the sections worked in a most exemplary manner by the brethren, as follows:—

Sec. 1	Bro. A. Bryant, P.M., 192, & S.D. ...	12
" 2	" H. Birdseye ...	715
" 3	" J. H. Townend, J.W. ...	715
" 4	" Thos. Cargill { Lodge }	49
" 5	" { Board }

Too much praise cannot be given to those brethren for the correct and the painstaking manner in which they went through their work, and, without wishing to be invidious, we would particularize Bro. Cargill, who, at the conclusion of the fifth section, was loudly applauded.

Bro. AENEAS J. MCINTYRE, Grand Registrar, congratulated the brethren upon the flourishing condition of the lodge, and said: I am empowered to move that £25 be given to the charities (applause), viz., £15 to the Old Men's Annuity Fund; £5 to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, St. John's Hill, Battersea Rise, S.W., which is for the purpose of maintaining, clothing, and educating the daughters of decayed Freemasons, and about which the following information may not be out of place:—This charity is supported by voluntary contributions from the nobility, &c., and many lodges, as well as by donations from the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter. Every donor of five guineas (lodges, chapter, and societies included) shall be a life subscriber, with the privilege of one vote at each election of children, and every subscriber of one guinea is entitled to one vote at each of the two succeeding elections. The other £5, he moved, be given to the Boys' School, which has equal, if not greater, claims upon the charitably disposed. This institution, which is situate at Wood Green, Middlesex, is, like the former, supported by voluntary contributions. Children of all religious denominations are admitted at the age of seven years, and are clothed and educated until the age of fifteen. A donation of fifty guineas in one payment, or in payments of not less than five guineas each, constitutes a vice-president with ten votes at all elections of children. Other sums entitle the donors to privileges according to the amount. Subscribers of a guinea annually are eligible for election on the general committee.

The several sums were put seriatim and unanimously voted.

Bro. JOHN LLEWELLYN EVANS, President of the Board of General Purposes, said it was his pleasing duty to move that the best thanks of the lodge be given to Bro. Henry Muggeridge for the very able manner in which he had conducted the business of the evening. He was sure that every mason who had had the good fortune to hear those beautiful sections worked, would agree with him that they reflected much credit upon the knowledge and ability of Bro. Muggeridge. It was not for him to dilate upon Bro. Muggeridge's excellencies; and he would, therefore, move that the best thanks of the lodge were justly due, and were given to Bro. Muggeridge, for the manner in which he had managed the business of the evening. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. POTTER, Past Grand Deacon, had much pleasure in seconding the motion, and bore his testimony to the ability and zeal displayed by Bro. Muggeridge on all occasions in matters Masonic.

Bro. MCINTYRE then formally put the resolution that a vote of thanks be given to Bro. Muggeridge, and that the same be recorded on the minutes of the lodge.

The motion was carried nem. con.

Bro. HENRY MUGGERIDGE suitably acknowledged the compliment paid to him.

Bro. JOHN HERVEY, the Grand Secretary, who, when he entered the lodge in the earlier part of the evening, was greeted with warm applause, now rose, and said he also had much pleasure in proposing a vote of thanks to the "working brethren," for the great ability with which they had discharged their duties. It was well to have a good preceptor, but to make things go well they must have good pupils, and from what he had seen that evening they had discharged their part with great credit to themselves, and satisfaction to the whole of the brethren. (Hear, hear.) He had, therefore, very great pleasure in moving that a vote of thanks be given to those brethren who had rendered such valuable assistance to Bro. Muggeridge in the working of the business of the evening. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. RAYNHAM W. STEWART, P.M., seconded the proposition.

Upon the question being put by the president, it was carried unanimously.

Bro. MCINTYRE said he could hardly hope that every brother of the large number present was a member of the Stability Lodge of Instruction, but he might hope that every brother who was not would join before he left that evening, and he trusted those brethren who were their friends would at once give their names to the secretary.

Bro. JUNIOR WARDEN publicly stated that the visiting fee was one shilling each evening, or by subscription of 10s. 6d.

Amongst the names of brethren who were elected members were Bros. Keely, White, Owen, Thorpe, Dumas, Colls, Parsons, Scott, Peety, Shoals, Hillyer, Pike. The other names our reporter did not catch. The Lodge, which previous to the elections and resolutions had been lowered to the first degree, was then closed in the usual manner, and the meeting adjourned by the Junior Warden to the Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street, City, until the first Friday evening in the month of September.

From the Lodge the brethren went to the large dining room, where a frugal but substantial meal was provided, but whether to call it a dinner or a supper we do not know. We are in doubt as to which would be the most proper appellation. In such a matter it makes little difference what you call it if it is, as this was, a really good repast, and one which generally gave satisfaction.

The cloth was removed, and the musical brethren, Bros. T. Young (director), Frank Elmore, Edwin Ransford, Past Grand Organist; and George Tedder, of the Concert Hall, Junction Road, Holloway, who we were glad to see, sang the grace by Hobbs:

To Thee, O God, the Mighty Lord, most high,
Who dost our wants with liberal hand supply,
Our grateful hearts and voices now we raise;
To heaven's high throne we chant our hymn of praise.
We bless, we praise, we magnify Thy name,
Now and henceforth, for evermore.—Amen.

The CHAIRMAN said he had pleasure in proposing the first toast of the evening,—a toast which was always received among Freemasons with very great pleasure and satisfaction. They were very fortunate in having so good a Sovereign to reign over them. She was an example to their wives, their sisters, and their daughters. He had very great pleasure in proposing the health of the Queen, and he hoped they would give it with all due and proper honour, and to make the toast a Masonic one, he coupled with it the Craft; the toast, therefore, was "The Queen and the Craft." [The toast was well received.]

The national anthem was sung, the brethren keeping excellent time in the chorus.

The CHAIRMAN said the next toast to which he had the honour of calling their attention, was one which Masons received with peculiar pleasure at the present time, for the Most Worshipful Grand Master had just completed a quarter of a century in office, and as he has just been re-elected it showed most clearly that he enjoyed the confidence of the brethren. (Hear, hear.) The Most Worshipful Grand Master had lately told them, at Grand Lodge (a full report of which appeared in our last week's number), that it was for more than twenty-five years he had ruled over them, for for five years prior to his election as M.W.G. Master he ruled and governed the Craft as Pro. Grand Master. (Cheers.) For the admirable way in which he had presided over the Craft, the extreme urbanity he had always shown to younger brethren, he stood pre-eminent—pre-eminent to uphold the dignity of the Craft; and to do honour to him they would drink with the greatest pleasure the toast, which was the health of the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Zetland, K.T., Most Worshipful Grand Master of Masons, who had so long possessed and so long deserved their confidence. He trusted he would always enjoy a proper feeling in the breast of every Mason whom he now presided over. (Cheers.)

More than ordinary enthusiasm followed the drinking of this toast, and every glass was drained.

The CHAIRMAN said the next toast brought him nearer home to himself, because for the two toasts which had already been proposed there had been no one present to respond; but there was in the one he was about to propose. It was the health of a brother for whom he and they all had a great respect; the toast was the health of the Rt. Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers. In mentioning the name of the Earl de Grey, he mentioned a name which might be an example to all Masons. They had seen him as Principal Secretary of State, they had seen him as Lord President of the Council, and they had seen him as the Deputy Grand Master of Masons, and in all positions he had won the great regard of everyone. There was always great pleasure in doing honour to whom honour was due, and the brethren would accord to him his just meed of praise. (Cheers.) The Earl de Grey was supported by Grand Officers of worth, and although one of them was but a young man, yet he had determined to make himself a good and true Mason—hear, hear—he alluded to Earl Percy, Senior Grand Warden. Then they had Bro. Dodson, the Chairman of the Committees of the House of Commons, who also showed that public functions did not debar him, nor any other man, from attending Masonic associations. (Hear, hear.) He could also mention Bros. Forster Cooper, and Brackstone Baker, who were unfortunately absent, but they had present five or six Grand Officers who were well-known in the Craft—hear, hear—well-known to them all. Four or five old Grand Officers and one recruit. (A laugh.) When he mentioned the President of the Board of General Purposes (Bro. Llewellyn Evans), who had so nobly won and worn his honours in the Craft (cheers); when he mentioned Bro. Hervey, Grand Secretary—(renewed cheering)—well-known for his excellent "working;" Bro. Potter and others, he could not be surprised that the Craft flourished so well. He would also mention Bro. John Emmens, Past Grand Pursuivant, and Bro. Dumas whom he had called a recruit, but who intended to do honour to the body. He trusted the Brethren would consider them as the five points of fellowship of Stability Lodge of Instruction. He had very great pleasure in proposing their healths, and as it was customary for the officers highest in rank to respond, he would call upon Bro. Evans to say a few words—Bro. Evans, with whom he had fought in Grand Lodge in the same spirit as he had met him that evening. With all sincerity he gave them "The health of the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Grand Master of England, and the rest of the Grand Officers," coupled with the name of Bro. John Llewellyn Evans, the President of the Board of General Purposes.

The toast was enthusiastically responded to.

Bro. EVANS, who was received with applause, said, on behalf of the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Grand Master of England, and the rest of the Grand Officers, he had the honour to return thanks for the very kind way in which their names had been received. His task on behalf of the Deputy-Grand Master was a very easy one, and for the other brethren, they were too well known to need any eulogy from him. He had known the Earl de Grey and Ripon when he held the high and responsible office of Principal Secretary of State, and had attended his duties at Grand Lodge to go home and sit for hours at work upon his public business, and for a brother, and one in such a high position to devote so much of his time for the good of Freemasonry, he thought they would agree with him deserved their Masonic regards. Their worthy President had alluded to the five Grand Officers, as representing the five points of fellowship, but he thought if he looked round he might see two others to make up the admirable number of seven, prominently amongst them being their Worshipful Master himself. (Hear, hear.) He is the Lord Chancellor of the Order—(laughter)—and he could only hope that he might be Lord Chancellor in another sense. Then they had Bro. Ransford, who, in days of old—(applause)—ably filled the office of Grand Organist, and it was quite pleasant to find what excellent voice he was in. It brought him back to old times. (Hear, hear.) They were all pleased to see him. On behalf of the Grand Officers he begged to return his very best thanks. They were most anxious to discharge their duties, and he thought he might go so far as to say that he thought the Craft was satisfied at the manner in which those duties had been discharged. The worthy Brother sat down amidst applause.

The President rose to explain, and apologised to Bro. Ransford for not including him in the toast, but said it was because he did not sit on the right with the other Grand Officers. He did not wish to slight Bro. Ransford, far be it from him that he should have any such intention, for he esteemed him very much, and was very glad to see him. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. RANSFORD, Past Grand Organist, said he was convinced of the truth of what the W.M. had said, that he had not left his name out intentionally. (Hear, hear.)

The PRESIDENT said he had to call the attention of the brethren to the toast of the evening. They could see what it was in the programme, and it needed no words from him to make them receive it with the greatest approbation. It was "Continued Prosperity to Stability Lodge of Instruction," coupled with the name of their excellent preceptor, Bro. Henry Muggeridge, P.M. Anything he (the President) could say on his behalf would be perfectly superfluous. He had seen him in private lodges and he believed him to be one of the best instructors in Masonry, and any brother following in his footsteps would be sure to learn the correct ritual of the Craft. Whenever he (the president) came to that lodge he was sure to learn something fresh. He thought if the principles inculcated in the lessons of the Craft were carried out in private life, the brethren would prove themselves better husbands, better sons, and better fathers. He hoped that for very many years Bro. Muggeridge might be their preceptor, for he was convinced that, search wherever they would amongst his pupils, not one of them would be found who would do him discredit. He had very great pleasure in proposing his health in connection with the toast, and if the time were not so short he would have given a sketch of Bro. Muggeridge's career. When Bro. Peter Thomson, who was a great Mason—(hear, hear)—was called to his fathers, his mantle descended upon Bro. Muggeridge, who, with great ability and knowledge, had fulfilled the duties of Preceptor. He had exceeding pleasure in proposing his health, and he was sure the brethren would drink it with the same satisfaction he had in proposing it. (Loud cheers, and cries of "To you, Bro. Muggeridge.")

Bro. MUGGERIDGE rose and for some minutes was hailed with loud applause. When it had somewhat abated he said (speaking with some emotion):—Worshipful Master, Grand Officers, and Brethren, many thanks for this flattering reception, I am sure, Worshipful Sir I am exceedingly pleased at the very kind manner in which you have proposed, and at the way in which the brethren have responded to the toast. I have had the honour of responding to this toast so many times that it is impossible I can say much on the subject, especially as it is so limited in its character and so chiefly concerns myself. I am very much gratified with the manner in which you have expressed yourselves this evening. I have expressed my thanks on many previous occasions, still there are very many brethren present who were not present at our previous meetings, and I must say to them that I have been a member of this Lodge of Instruction close upon thirty years—(hear, hear.)—and I have had the management of this Lodge of Instruction very nearly twenty years. I assure you I am very much gratified at the admirable manner in which my four pupils have gone through their work this evening—(cheers)—but as the subject will be brought before your notice very shortly, I shall say nothing more upon that topic; at the same time I am exceedingly pleased at the manner in which you expressed your satisfaction at the way in which they went through their duties. I am also very much gratified at the very successful meeting this evening, and if anything I have done towards it has met with your approbation I am very much pleased. On this occasion perhaps it is not necessary to say more, but as we have very young members here this evening, it may be as well to state that this Lodge of Instruction meets at the Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street, from the first Friday in September to the last Friday in April, and I shall be very glad to receive them and render them every assistance they may require to qualify them to fill the offices they may belong to. Worshipful Master and Brother Grand Officers, allow me to say that I am extremely pleased at seeing you here on this occasion, our Fifty-second Anniversary, and I am glad to hear the proceedings have met with your approbation. I am sure it is a very great satisfaction to me, and I hope we may be honoured with your presence on many future occasions. Bro. Muggeridge concluded by urging upon the Brethren the propriety and advisability of attending Lodges of Instruction, and sat down amidst renewed marks of favour.

Bro. LLEWELLYN EVANS said the Worshipful Master had entrusted him with his gavel, and the brethren would understand for what purpose. (Hear, hear.) Bro. McIntyre was well-known in the Craft, and was an excellent Grand Officer, and he could not understand how he, belonging to an arduous profession, could devote so much time to Freemasonry, but yet he did so. He hoped they would drink the toast in bumpers. [Drunk with enthusiasm.]

The PRESIDENT said, addressing Bro. Evans, his brother Grand Officers, and the brethren generally, he could assure them he felt completely overpowered by the very kind reception they had given him. He felt it a high honour to preside over them, for a more distinguished assemblage could not be found. Whether filling the chair, or assisting them in any other way, he was always most happy to assist them. In occupying that position for the third time, he could not forget the time when he first became a member of that Lodge, when the festival was presided over by a brother who was with them for seventeen years, and for the honour and good he had done in the Craft the name of John Havers would never be forgotten. (Loud cheers.) He was a brother he could never forget, neither could he (the President) forget that day and their kindness to him. Bro. Havers was unable to be present through illness, and he was sure they must all deeply regret his absence, but he hoped they would give him an assurance of their sympathy for Bro. Havers in his affliction, and of the esteem in which he was sure he was held by them. (The brethren showed their concurrence and assent to these observations by a loud cheer.) The speaker concluded by saying the cheer they had just given would enable him to convey to Bro. Havers an assurance of their condolence with and esteem for him. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. JOHN HERVEY, the Grand Secretary, said he did not know why the next toast had been placed in his hands, except it was that he had been a working Mason, and knew the difficulties working Masons were placed in. He well knew how much toil, how much attention, and how much zeal must be advanced when brethren undertake the duties of officers, and it was with a deal of pleasure he proposed "The health of the Working Brethren of the Lodge." In earlier days he (Bro. Hervey) had undertaken those duties himself, and he knew how arduous they were; but unless the duties of the lodge were well performed they fell far short of what they ought to be. When a person was initiated, unless the ceremony was done well it lost its impressiveness, and the candidate went away dissatisfied, and would say, "Well, yes, I was initiated, but the Master stumbled at every second word, and I did not think much of the ceremony." What was, when well performed, a solemn ceremony lost its solemnity by being slovenly executed. He paid a compliment to the working brethren and Bro. Muggeridge. If the brethren generally followed their example, there would be no risk of the ceremonies losing their impressiveness. He gave them "The health of the Working Brethren of the Lodge—Bros. Bryant, Birdseye, Townsend, and Cargill," coupling with the toast the name of the last-mentioned brother, the Senior Warden. The toast was well received.

Bro. CARGILL in returning thanks, said he was actuated by mingled feelings of pride and gratification—with pride because they had succeeded in satisfying them, and, he need not say, there could hardly be a greater stimulus to young Masons than that of affording gratification to their superiors in the Craft; but he could hardly realize what the lodge would do without Bro. Muggeridge, and he hoped he would long be spared to be among them. On behalf of the working brethren and himself, he begged to thank them for the manner in which they had received the toast.

The PRESIDENT proposed the sister lodge of instruction. He said the Emulation Lodge of Improvement was second to none in point of efficiency of working, and, in connection with it, he was delighted to see present Bro. Pike, who was distinguished as a teacher, and honoured as a man and a Mason. He had very great pleasure in coupling his name with the toast.

Bro. PIKE returned thanks, and said since the demise of Bro. Stephen Barton Wilson, he had been very anxious that the lodge should not lose any of the honours it had won. He could only say that he thanked them very kindly for the manner in which they had responded to the toast.

The PRESIDENT proposed the Masonic Charities, and said it was a toast they ought never to forget; for, whilst they were very joyous, there were others who through unavoidable calamity and misfortune were brought to abject poverty. On such occasions they would be very remiss were they to forget the Masonic charities. The charities were not forgotten, for they were in a very flourishing condition, and he need only call their attention to the fact that on a recent occasion, viz., the Boys' School Festival, the largest sum was subscribed that had ever been subscribed on any occasion throughout the world. (Hear, hear.) He was happy to say they had a brother present who was a steward, not for the first, but for the third time. (Hear, hear.) He alluded to Bro. T. Meggy, of the Fitzroy Lodge, and whom he would call upon to respond to the toast.

Bro. MEGGY, who was received with applause, appropriately responded, and congratulated the brethren, of the Stability Lodge of Instruction that they were able to vote on one evening £25 to the charities, which showed that more than one half of the money contributed was given in charity.

The PRESIDENT corrected Bro. Meggy, and said that the whole of the money contributed by the Brethren after paying for working and other unavoidable expenses, was given to the charities. (Hear, hear.)

The Brethren then separated, highly pleased at the proceedings.

During the evening the following pieces were sung by the musical brethren:—

National Anthem Dr. John Bull.

Glee—"Merrily goes the Bark" Stevens.

Song—"Welcome, ever welcome, Friends" Berens.

Bro. YOUNG.

Duet—"Tell me where is Fancy bred" Stevenson.

Bros. YOUNG and RANSFORD.

Song—"Thou art so near and yet so far" Reichart.

Bro. F. ELMORE.

Glee—"Mynheer Van Dank" Bishop.

Song—"The Oak and the Ivy" Lord.

Bro. RANSFORD.

Glee—"Push the Red Wine about" Bishop.

NEW MASONIC HALL, YOKOHAMA, JAPAN.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

YOKOHAMA, 2nd March, 1869.

At one o'clock yesterday, 1st March, was laid the first stone of the New Masonic Hall, which is to be erected in the Main Street, on the lot immediately opposite the German Club. No masonic ceremony was performed, but about a dozen of the brotherhood assembled to witness the simple laying of the stone. A bottle containing some Japanese coins, a rupee, and a record, was placed in the cavity prepared for it; after which the stone was lowered to its proper position. The W.M. Bro. Miller, then delivered a short address to the brethren present, which terminated the proceedings.

The masonic community are indebted to the courtesy of E. Loureiro, Esq., H.M.F.M.'s Consul for the site of their new hall, and a more convenient position, and one more suitable for a public edifice could not be found in Yokohama.

The new Masonic Hall will be built entirely of solid stone, without the wooden framework which has been usually considered necessary to ensure the stability of a building against the shocks of the earthquakes. One or two godowns so constructed already exist in the settlement, with no signs of injury, and if this mode of building should prove a success, it will materially lessen the risk of fire—a far more dangerous enemy than earthquakes.

The new building will be of the Doric order, with a portico supported by six columns, and is being erected in accordance with plans prepared by Messrs. Whitfield and Dowson, architects. Every endeavour will be made to finish the new hall by the 24th June, the festival of St. John the Baptist, one of the patrons of Ancient Freemasonry.

A petition for a second lodge to be held at Yokohama has been sent home, which it is hoped will be speedily granted, as Masonry has made much progress in Japan. The new lodge is to be called "O Tentosama," a Japanese term referring to the sun.

THE OLD MEN'S ANNUITY FUND.—Let it not be forgotten by the brethren of the Masonic Craft that Bro. Charles Sloman (the only improvisatore, and the author and composer of the songs, "The Maid of Judah," "The Daughter of Israel," &c.) is a candidate for election as a recipient of the benefits derivable from the Old Men's Benevolent Institution. Brethren and others desirous of assisting Bro. Sloman are informed that he will be happy to receive proxies in his favour at his residence, 24, Bow-street, Covent-garden, W.C. Non-Masons are eligible both as subscribers and voters. Subscribers are particularly requested not to withhold their votes under an impression of the certainty of Bro. Sloman's election, as that might prove greatly detrimental to his success.—Communicated.

CONSECRATION OF THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH LODGE, 1259.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

For a long time past the Freemasons in and about the neighbourhood of Mile End, have felt the want of a new Lodge, which should be judiciously managed, well officered, and conducted according to the ancient usages of the Order. One or two preliminary meetings were called, and the desirability of petitioning the Most Worshipful Grand Master to grant his warrant discussed. Foremost amongst the agitators were Bro. John Wright, P.M. and Treasurer, 754 and 781, well-known and respected for his excellent working; Bro. Edward Jex, and John D. Lusty, and so favourably did the Most Worshipful Master think of the application that he at once granted permission for the warrant to issue. The petitioners were the before-named brethren, who were named consecutively as the first W.M., S.W., and J.W., and John Salter, S.D., John Deer, J.D., Weatherall, I.G., Hogg, Secretary, and Bro. Barford, P.M.

Bro. J. Terry, P.M. 228, 1196, and P.Z. 975, was appointed by the Grand Master as Consecrating Officer. The ceremony took place on Tuesday evening last at Mr. Allen's, the "New Globe Tavern," Bow Road, in the presence of about fifty brethren, some of whom had come long distances in order to listen to the excellent style in which Bro. Terry performs the ceremony; and his working of this, about the most interesting ceremony in Freemasonry, was listened to with rapt attention.

Bro. the Rev. D. Shaboe, Past Provincial Grand Chaplain, Suffolk, officiated as Chaplain, and the musical arrangements were under the direction of Bro. Küster, Organist of the Urban Lodge, 1196.

The Brethren present were:—Bros. E. T. Reed (W.M. 781), E. Bracebridge (P.M. 781), W. McDonald (P.M. 30), Potts (P.M. and P.Z.), G. C. Kerust (M.D. 1227), H. Marston (53), H. Higgins (184), T. C. Holford (55), Jno. G. Stevens (P.M. 554), Dan. E. Scurr (P.M. 933), Benj. Pendek (742), Gilruth (P.M. 55), Henry Warren (754), W. Steedman (P.M. 754), Jno. Rugg (781), Jno. Holt (781), Edw. Glinister (781), Barlow (P.M. 174), Newton (174), Kindred (P.M. and P.Z. 554), G. Christie (754), Rev. D. Shaboe (P.M. 183, 205, 554, 813, 898, 959, and P.P.G.C. Suffolk), Hugh Ballantyre (P.M. 754), Küster (Organist of the Urban Lodge), Alf Harris (Friendship 206), Drayling (831), Hemmingway (831), H. Spooner (831), W. Davis (831), Warren (217), Wm. Bigg, William Thorp (217), Thos. West (700), Edward Davies (700), William Lusty, William Wrenn (P.M. 174, 1056), W. Watson (831, 1259), Edw. Davis, (P.M. 238), Tho. J. Quelch (P.M. 619), R. Brady (P.M. 217), Jno. C. Davis (W.M. 198), Chas. B. Payne (P.M. 27), Chas. E. Thompson (S.D. and Sec., 1158 and 177.)

Bro. Terry was assisted by Bro. W. Hamilton, P.M. 554, who acted as S.W. pro tem., and Bro. J. Kindred P.M. 354, as J.W., and shortly after three o'clock the Brethren, properly clothed, assembled in the lodge room, and the lodge was duly opened in the several degrees, and after an address had been delivered, the petitioners arranged themselves in front of the S.W. The Acting Grand Sec., Bro. Reed, W.M. 781, read the petition and warrant. In answer to the P.O., the brethren present signified their approval of the officers named in the warrant in Masonic form, and they were then constituted into a regular lodge according to the ancient form.

Bro. TERRY delivered an oration on the nature and principles of the Institution. The Anthem was then sung,

"Behold how pleasant and how good."

Subsequently the board was uncovered, and Bros. D. Scurr P.M. 933, Stevens P.M. 554, and Bracebridge P.M. 781, proceeded to carry the cornucopia, wine, and oil three times round the lodge,

Anthem, "Glory be to God."

The Chaplain then took the censer round the lodge.

A chant by the Brethren. Anthem, "Glory to God in the highest."

The P.O. then dedicated and constituted the lodge, and after the "Hallelujah Chorus" the lodge was resumed to the second degree, and a Board of Installed Masters formed. Bro. John Wright was regularly installed into the chair, and saluted in the customary way, and after the appointment of officers, Bro. Terry delivered the concluding addresses in excellent style—in truth, his entire working was faultless.

The lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down to an excellent repast, provided by Bro. Barford, of the Red Lion, Leytonstone, Treasurer of the Constitutional Lodge, and one of the founders of this lodge.

The W.M. proposed the "Queen and the Craft," which was duly honoured.

The W.M. then proposed the health of the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master, and said on that special occasion they had reason to be specially thankful to him for granting the warrant. It was one of the most unprecedented things that ever had occurred—the petition was presented, and within ten days it was cheerfully granted. There could be no doubt at all that the lodge was required—(hear, hear,)—and he hoped they would vie with each other in doing all they possibly could to render each other happy, and as they had every reason to be thankful to the M.W.G.M., he trusted they would drink the toast with enthusiasm, but before he concluded he paid a compliment to the Brethren of the Merchant Navy Lodge for the assistance they had given.

The toast was received with much applause.

The W.M. next proposed the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Grand Master, a brother who was not only known in the Craft world, but also in the political world, as a very useful and a very active member of society, and one likely to become a very great man among Masons.

Bro. the Rev. D. SHABOE said he appeared before them as one who had had something to do with the consecration of the Duke of Edinburgh Lodge. (Hear, hear.) He had had the happiness of knowing their W.M. for several years, and a kinder hearted man never breathed, and as the consecrating Master had said when delivering the warrant into his hands—that warrant which was as pure as snow and as chaste as ice—that he had no doubt at all he would deliver it to his successor as pure and as spotless as it then was, so he (Bro. Shaboe) believed it would leave his care whenever that should be. (Hear, hear.) As he liked a pun he would say he was the "Right man in the right place." (Cheers.) He knew no man in the internal world whom he appreciated more than he did him. He had always found him kind-hearted, just and firm—they were the characteristics of a man and Mason, and if the Lodge did not prosper they would not have to reproach their W.M., or regret the choice they had made in selecting him to preside over their future gatherings. As one of the clergy, and living in the parish, he begged to thank them for coming into the neighbourhood, for it must be beneficial to society. He hoped the "Duke of Edinburgh" Lodge would meet with success, and if he could be of any assistance they might rest assured they might command him. He could not eulogise their W.M. too much, but if they did as he asked them they could not do ill.

The toast was received with cheers, and a good fire given.

The W.M. said he was delighted to have been spoken of by Bro. Shaboe in such terms, because there had been circumstances in Masonry in which they had been connected together in one of the warmest battles which had ever been fought, and then they were as great enemies as they were at that moment. (Laughter and cheers.) There was a difference of opinion, and at any rate they fought their battles to an issue, in which he (the W.M.) succeeded, and the right was on the right side. (A laugh.) He could assure the brethren, that so long as he had the power he should do all he possibly could to further their interests, and they would find through life that there was no such happiness equal to that of imparting happiness to others. It was so much better to be pleased at all things which came before them, than to make yourselves obnoxious. (Hear, hear.) There were a number of young Masons, excluding Bro. Barford who was an old P.M., and he hoped from the bad example set by himself and others, they would adopt the good portions and leave out those which were bad. He should be delighted if at the end of twelve months they could speak in the same manner of the flourishing condition of the lodge. With these few remarks he begged to thank them for the very kind manner in which they had responded to the toast.

The W.M. said he rose to propose a toast which gave him very great pleasure, and he was sure they would all respond most cordially. Masons had reason to be proud of one of the biggest in Masonry, and yet comparatively speaking one of the smallest men, Bro. Terry. (Great laughter.) Every one must acknowledge he was perfect in all his parts. He (the W.M.) had heard him in blue and in the Royal Arch, and in all he never missed a word. (Cheers.) A parson had his book before him, but he had not (much amusement, in which the Rev. Dr. Shaboe heartily joined.) He hoped they would do him all the honour he deserved.

Drunk with enthusiasm.

Bro. TERRY, who was loudly applauded, said, in rising to respond to the toast they would allow him to say that it had afforded him as much pleasure to be present as it had afforded them to hear him. If he had given satisfaction he was amply repaid for any trouble he had been put to. He always made it a rule never to undertake to do anything unless he was fully competent to carry it out. He had received much assistance from Bro. Shaboe, who had kindly acted as Chaplain, and although the duties were light, if they were not done well and properly it made a great deal of difference in the ceremony. (Hear, hear.)

The Rev. D. SHABOE, in returning thanks, said he had had the happiness of being associated with Freemasonry for fifteen years, and he had learned from it that it mattered not in what position of society they might be placed, it was their duty to administer to the happiness of each other. For himself he had only done his duty, and could only say that he had never witnessed such magnificent working as he had seen that day—not one hiatus existed. It was often his pleasure to visit Lodges and sometimes he had witnessed a slight elapse, but Bro. Terry was perfect in all his points, and it was with much pleasure he had acted as one of his coadjutors. With regard to the slight difference of opinion between the W.M. and himself it was just this—the W.M. thought something was silver and he thought it was gold, and the W.M. was right. They were a jolly set of fellows, and he didn't care (turning to our reporter) whether the brother who was taking notes put that down or not. (Laughter.) He trusted whenever they had struggles they would not be worse than his was with Bro. John Wright. With regard to the Lodge, he hoped it would go on and prosper, and give up one to another; he had tried it all his life, and there he was a happy, contented man. He hoped they would give way one to another in kindly spirit, and they would be sure to prosper, and if at any time he could be of any service to them he could only say his purse and his person were at their service.

The toast of "The Visitors," coupled with the names of Bros. Davis and Reed; "the Officers," "Masonic Charities," and "Tyler's," toast were given and responded to, and the brethren separated. Bro. Very was a very good Tyler.

INSTALLATION FESTIVAL, ABBEY LODGE, ABINGDON.

Friday, the 30th ult., was quite a "red-letter" day in the history of this Lodge, the brethren being honoured with the presence of the Grand Master, Sir D. Gooch, Bart., M.P., and the D.P.G.M., Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, Bart., Vicar of Arborfield, near Reading, on the occasion of the installation of Bro. John Blandy-Jenkins (late High Sheriff of Berks) as W.M.

The Lodge, which is held in an elegant room adjoining the Council Chamber, was opened in due form at 8.30, and the W.M., Bro. J. T. Morland, performed the installation ceremony in an admirable manner. No other business was transacted, except the adoption of votes of thanks to the G.M. and the D.G.M., both of whom received the customary Lodge honours.

The G.M. assured the brethren that it afforded him great pleasure to attend, and make their acquaintance as their new G.M. He did not accept office without duly considering the duties attaching thereto, and he had resolved to visit each Lodge in the province, as opportunities for doing so presented themselves. This was the first visit he had paid to the Abbey Lodge, and he could not help expressing the gratification he had experienced in seeing it worked as it had been. He trusted he should find other Lodges in the province worked in an equally satisfactory manner.

The D.G.M. also said this was the first occasion on which he had joined the brethren of the Abbey Lodge, but he hoped to have other opportunities of visiting them.

At five o'clock a banquet was served in the Council Chamber, which contains several fine portraits by Gainsborough, besides well-executed portraits of some eminent men connected by birth, education, or otherwise, with the borough.

The chair was ably occupied by the Worshipful Master, Bro. J. Blandy-Jenkins, and the company included Bro. Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart., M.P., Grand Master of Berks and Bucks; Bro. the Rev. Sir John Warren Hayes, Bart., Grand Chaplain, and Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Berks and Bucks, Bro. Spiers, Deputy Provincial Grand Master (Oxford), and P.G.S.B. of England; Bro. J. T. Morland, P.M.; Bro. Captain G. F. Lamert, P.G.S. and W.M. of "Apollo" Lodge, Oxford; Bro. W. C. Bland, P.G.J.W., W.M. Lodge of Hope, Newbury; Bro. W. C. Borlase, Secretary "Apollo" Lodge; Bro. H. D'Almaine, Secretary, Abbey Lodge; Bro. W. Hedges, S.W.; Bro. W. Davenport, J.W.; Bro. W. Ballard, S.D.; Bro. Richard Badcock, Treasurer; Bro. Walter Ballard, I.G.; Bro. B. Badcock, Steward; Bro. J. H. Clarke, M.C.; Bro. F. H. McCalmont, S.W. "Apollo"; Bro. E. J. Trendall; Bro. J. S. Lowe, "Alfred" Lodge, Oxford; Bro. S. P. Spiers, W.M. elect "Alfred" Lodge; Bro. T. G. S. Mahon; Bro. Edward Morland; Bro. George J. Cosburn, Secretary Lodge of Hope; Bro. W. L. Hunt; Bro. T. Stevens; Bro. T. Parr; Bro. J. L. Jolcham; Bro. Trendell, jun., &c. The tables were adorned with some choice plants from the conservatory of Bro. E. J. Trendell. Grace was said by Bro. the Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, and dessert having been introduced.

The W.M. rose and said that, as this was an anniversary festival of the Abbey Lodge, he had several toasts to propose, and he would first ask the brethren to drink the health of Her Majesty the Queen, whom they all respected and honoured, and coupled with the name of her who occupied the throne he would give that which must be uppermost in their minds as Masons, namely, the "Craft." Let them heartily drink the toast of the "Queen and the Craft." (Applause.)

The W.M. said the next toast was the health of the Earl of Zetland, who had long enjoyed the honour of presiding over the Order in this country, and who had distinguished himself not only as a Mason but also as a nobleman. (Applause.)

The W.M. next proposed the health of the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and the Grand Officers, associating with it the name of Bro. Spiers. He was sure Sir John Hayes would pardon him for not giving his name with this toast, but he should have Sir John on another score. (Applause and laughter.)

Bro. SPIERS, D.G.M. (Oxford), said he ought not to reply on behalf of Grand Lodge in the presence of Sir John Warren Hayes, who was his senior both in rank, and standing, and age; still, he felt bound to obey the command of the W.M., and he was pleased and proud to address them, both as a member of the Abbey Lodge, and also as a representative of Grand Lodge. They would, perhaps, be glad to learn that the recent appointment of Grand Lodge officers had afforded general satisfaction. The Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, continued to act as Deputy Grand Master, and it was a subject of congratulation that one who held so high a position, and enjoyed the confidence of royalty, still took so great an interest in everything associated with the Craft. (Applause.) Earl Percy, eldest son of the Duke of Northumberland, had been appointed Senior Grand Warden, and the appointment was a good one not only on account of the position of him who held it, but also because the noble earl was determined to prove himself worthy of it. (Applause.) The J.G.W. was Mr. Dodson, whose onerous official duties in the House of Commons were not sufficient to prevent him manifesting an active interest in the affairs of Freemasonry. That fact showed there was more in the Craft than the world gave it credit for. (Applause.) The Grand Master had determined upon advancing in each year one brother from the provinces in Grand Lodge. Referring to the Abbey Lodge, Bro. Spiers said it embraced within it men who did credit to Masonry, and also to the Town of Abingdon, and he was sure Sir Daniel felt pleased in having such a body to rule over. He was confident they would be obedient to his command, and would work as well as could be desired. He was some judge of Masonry, and must say that the ability shown by the late W.M. (Bro. Morland) was above all praise. (Applause.) In conclusion, Bro. Spiers again thanked the brethren for the compliment they had paid him.

The W.M. then proposed the health of the P.G.M., Sir Daniel Gooch. (Applause.) The brethren felt it to be a very great compliment to have among them their new Grand Master (applause), and he thought that, as a province, they must all feel themselves highly honoured in having such a distinguished Mason to preside over them. (Applause.) He had the good fortune to be present at the Provincial Grand Lodge, at Chippenham, when the brethren of that province presented him with the regalia of office, and he (Bro. Jenkins) found out in a moment that Sir Daniel was acquainted with the working of every department of the lodge; and seeing that, and also knowing his urbanity of manner, no brother could possibly wish for a better Mason to preside over the Province of Berks and Bucks. (Applause.) It gave him the greatest pleasure to see Sir Daniel there that evening, and he felt it was not only an honour to the lodge, but also a compliment to himself (the W.M.). He hoped this would prove but the first of many occasions on which they would have their G.M. among them; in fact, he trusted Sir Daniel would have cause to feel that the Abbey Lodge did such credit to the province that it was really incumbent upon him to be present. (Applause and laughter.) Perhaps he ought not to have gone so far and said that; still, he hoped Sir Daniel would often visit them. (Applause.)

The GRAND MASTER, in responding, said he should feel it incumbent upon him to visit the Abbey Lodge not in consequence of any deficiency, but on account of the excellent way in which it was worked, and also because of the kind and cordial reception they had given him. (Applause.) The gathering here had been a source of great pleasure to him, as it had given him an opportunity of making the acquaintance of a number of the brethren. He had attended not only because it was his duty to do so, but because he felt very anxious indeed to visit all the lodges in the province, to give him a knowledge of the members and the way in which the different matters were conducted. Although he should on another occasion have an opportunity of expressing his views with regard to the ruling of the province, he would take into account as far as he could properly do so, the wishes of the various lodges in the appointments it would be his duty to make. He considered that in all the appointments for the Provincial Grand Lodge merit and excellence in Freemasonry ought to be the chief grounds. (Applause.) It had sometimes been urged that merit was not altogether what was needed, but he thought himself that the Brother who most zealously performed his duties ought to receive his reward in the shape of the honours connected with the Craft. (Applause.) They ought to aim to make the purple such a mark, that when it was seen in lodge it might be taken as a certain indication that the brother who wore it had done his duty to the Craft. (Applause.) Such feelings as those would guide him in the appointments he should make, and he must ask the brethren to believe that what he did was for the benefit of the province, and if he made a mistake, it would be an error of judgment, and not committed for the purpose of favouring one individual or the other. (Applause.) He would not regard either private or public friendships, but strive to discharge the duties of his office faithfully, and he hoped they would give him credit for acting from sincere and conscientious motives. (Applause.) He was glad to see amongst them that evening Bro. Spiers, who held so high an office in the Province of Oxford, and whom he had previously had the pleasure of meeting. He assured the brethren, in conclusion, that he had spent a very pleasant and happy evening. (Applause.)

The WORSHIPFUL MASTER called upon the brethren to drink the health of the D.P.G.M., Sir J. W. Hayes, remarking that he felt sure there was not a brother present who was not glad to hear Sir John's name mentioned. (Applause.) Sir John was as old in Grand Lodge as Lord Zetland himself, and was initiated in the Apollo Lodge at Oxford. He was connected in every way with the brethren present, and it afforded them much gratification to see him present. (Applause.)

The D.P.G.M. thanked the brethren very sincerely for the kind reception they had given him, and assured them it gave him great satisfaction to be among the brethren of the Abbey Lodge. He had often wished to attend their meetings, and it was with the utmost possible pleasure with which he accepted the invitation they were so kind as to send him on this occasion. (Applause.) He had derived satisfaction from seeing the working of the Lodge, and finding how admirably everything was done. There was also some satisfaction in knowing that the brethren around him owed something to the Lodge in which he was himself initiated, inasmuch as their new Master had sprung from that Lodge. He felt sure the Abbey Lodge would thrive very much under the government of Bro. Blandy-Jenkins. (Applause.) He should be delighted to see the Abingdon brethren at Reading, and hoped they would swell the gathering at Windsor on the 21st of May, when they would do honour to their new Grand Master. (Applause.)

The G.M. then proposed the health of the W.M. (Applause.) He felt that, in a Lodge where Bro. Blandy-Jenkins was so well known it was almost wrong on his part to attempt to describe his many good qualities, for he had already served in the same capacity. He wished him health and happiness during the ensuing twelve months, and felt confident that during such period he would zealously discharge the duties of his office. (Applause.)

The W.M. said, in reply, that, but for the promise of assistance given by Bro. Morland, who had so efficiently filled the office during the past year, he must have declined the honour of once more presiding over the Lodge. He could not expect to come up to the standard set by their worthy G.M. (Sir D. Gooch), still he hoped the Lodge would be worked in a satisfactory manner. The W.M. closed by proposing the health of Bro. Morland, to whom he paid a well-deserved compliment for the very admirable manner in which he had performed the difficult ceremony of installation. (Applause.)

Bro. J. T. MORLAND, P.M., acknowledged the toast, observing that he hoped that what he had done met their approval (applause), although he had not satisfied himself. He considered it to be a high honour that he had been the first brother initiated in this lodge who had risen to the chair; and he assured the brethren that, although no longer Master, he should still devote his best energies in carrying on the lodge, and so long as he could promote the interests of either the lodge or an individual brother, he intended to do so. (Applause.)

The W.M. next gave the health of Bro. Lamert, the W.M. of the Apollo Lodge, who ably responded.

Then followed the health of the Masters of Lodges in the province, coupled with that of Bro. W. C. Bland, P.G.J.W., and W.M. of Lodge of Hope, who suitably returned thanks. The health of Bro. Hedges, S.W., was also drunk, after which the Tyler's toast was given. Several first-rate songs were sung, and the brethren separated highly delighted with the festival of 1869.

THE SOCIAL BUCKS' PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY.—On Saturday, May 8th (to-day), there will be a meeting of this society, of which Bro. Thomas Beard is president, at Bro. Swainston's, the "Three Bucks" Hotel, Old Jewry, when it is anticipated there will be a large and influential gathering of the Craft. Amongst the brethren who promote this really deserving society are Bro. J. Emmens (P.G. Purs., &c.), Stroud, M'Namara, H. Sydney, Thos. Adams, Charles E. Thompson, &c., &c.

ENGLAND 81 YEARS AGO.—On Wednesday morning 25th June, 1788, were executed at Newgate, pursuant to their sentence, William James, alias Levy, John Gilbertson, Jeremiah Grace, and Margaret Sullivan. They were brought out of Newgate about seven o'clock, and after spending some time in devotion the platform dropped a quarter before eight. They behaved with a seriousness and decency becoming their unhappy situation. After the men had been hanging about a quarter of an hour, the woman was brought out, dressed in black, attended by a priest of the Romish persuasion. As soon as she came to the stake she was placed upon the stool, which after some time was taken from under her, when the faggots were placed round her, and being set fire to, she was consumed to ashes.

PAST MASTERS AS PRECEPTORS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am pleased to have it in my power to inform yourself and correspondents that the proposal put forward under the above heading is obtaining that support which might have been expected from brethren of high standing in the Craft, and that the Conference of Past Masters which I have suggested will be held in London between the 24th and 30th of this month. The exact date and place of meeting will be announced by circular, and also by a letter which I shall ask you to publish in your impression of the 15th or 22nd inst.

The more numerously attended this conference may be, the more important will be its results, and I have therefore to ask for further communications from such Past Masters as may desire to associate themselves with the movement. If your correspondents, Brother Hughan, "P.M. 200," and "Delta," would be disposed to assist, I should be obliged by their sending me their respective addresses, that circulars might be forwarded to them in due course.

The arguments already put forth in favour of the proposed memorial are weak as compared with those which it is thought politic to reserve from public discussion, but these will be brought forward at the conference and there fully debated. It is the desire of those who have originated this movement that every point of detail affecting the question of uniformity of ritual and ceremony should be calmly and earnestly considered, and the more numerously the conference is attended, the more certainty there will be of securing that result.

Again soliciting the further support of the brethren by personal communication,

I remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours truly and fraternally,

JAMES STEVENS, P.M., P.Z., &c.

Clapham-common, May 4th, 1869.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In my former letter under the above heading, I used the words, "In a ritual preserved, as that of Masonry is, by tradition only." Your correspondent, "Leo" (writing on a wholly different subject), after quoting my words says, "I deny that. Delta should either say nothing or tell the truth."

I pass over the graceful manner of Leo's correction, and proceed to consider whether any correction at all was necessary. I need hardly premise that my observation applied only to Blue or Craft Masonry, which alone formed the subject of my letter; and subject to this limitation, I think it will appear that my words were strictly correct. I am perfectly aware, and never dreamt of denying, that there are in existence numerous catchpenny publications professing to disclose the whole art and mystery of Freemasonry. I am also aware that there are in the hands of members of the Craft, both in print and MS., versions of our ritual bona fide intended to be correct. These, however, are held by Masonic authorities to be entirely contraband and illegal, and even the most correct of them only represent a particular brother's recollection of the traditional working, as practised in his day. A tradition may be committed to writing twenty times in a century, but unless promulgated in a written form will still remain a tradition. If the writing is published, or preserved in any authentic form for purposes of reference, the legend will be transmitted orally no longer, or, in other words, can no longer be said to be "preserved by tradition only." But this is precisely what never does, and under the present system never can, happen with respect to Masonry. If a Mason procures a written ritual, or is painstaking enough to compile one for himself, it will be only useful just so far as it happens to correspond with the actual working in use for the time being. Wherever there is a discrepancy no one dreams of correcting the lodge working by the book, but the book is, as a matter of course, held of less authority than the lodge working—in other words, the tradition of the day.

The fact that unauthorised and contraband written versions do exist, is an additional reason in support of my suggestion that what I may call the "commonplace" portion of the ritual should be authoritatively printed for the use of the Craft. I am informed (whether correctly or not I cannot say) that in France this is actually done, under the sanction of the Grand Orient. Perhaps some of your correspondents can give useful information on this point.

At present there is a great and undesirable uncertainty as to how far the Masonic obligation of secrecy (as to ritual) really extends. I have heard it maintained by earnest and conscientious brethren that it is unlawful even to put upon paper for one's own private study the smallest portion of the ritual from beginning to end. On the other hand, the great Masonic authority, the lamented Dr. Oliver, quotes with approbation the words of an American writer, Ward, who says, "The secrets of Masonry are her signs, words, and tokens; these the oath regards, and no more. The common language of Masons in conversation on the subject of Masonry is a proof that this is the opinion of the Fraternity in respect to the application of the oaths." This is the view which Dr. Oliver appears himself to have taken, inasmuch as he quotes freely in his works both from the ceremonies and lectures.

A division of opinion upon such a subject is a manifest evil. We should surely know precisely what is lawful, and what is unlawful; and in no way could this object so well be attained as by a publication of what I may call a skeleton ritual, comprising the prayers, explanation of tools, moral illustrations, &c., and leaving only the really special and esoteric portions to be learned from oral teaching.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Very fraternally yours,

DELTA.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In reading the letters in THE FREEMASON on the subject of some method of acquiring uniformity of working the ceremonies, &c., of the Craft, I believe if some system could be devised and adopted that would lead to such a desirable end, it would be hailed with pleasure and satisfaction by many of the brethren. Allow me to throw out another suggestion: that the M.W.G.M. appoint a brother expert in the craft to visit the various lodges for the purpose of instructing the brethren; that the brother so appointed be the paid agent of Grand Lodge; and that the lodge asking for his instruction should be called upon to pay the travelling and hotel expenses of such agent. Trusting to see other ideas on this important subject,

I am, yours fraternally,

P.M., 208.

CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Am I right in inferring from the Scotch Constitutions that as the Scotch Grand Lodge only recognises three degrees in Masonry, therefore Arch Masonry is ignored, and any brother presenting himself at a Scotch lodge wearing a Royal Arch jewel may be required to remove it?

Further, if only three degrees are recognised in Scotland, how does that agree with the statement of certain Mark Masons, when they requested our Grand Lodge to recognise them, that they were recognised by the Grand Lodge of Scotland?

Yours fraternally,

SILEX.

London, May 3, 1869.

To the Editor of the Freemason.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Permit me to inform "Leo" that I know perfectly well that the Mark is part of the degrees recognised by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, I did not refer to Mark but chair. "Leo" put words in the mouth of the Old Scottish Lodges that were never uttered or thought of except in the wanderings of such as himself; viz.:—your Royal Arch ideas are a new creation merely of last century, whereas we were in existence long before. Query how long? Let him read the last clause of his answer to "Cryptonymus." "Leo" should take to himself the advice he gives to "Delta," either say nothing or tell the truth. Where did the ritual exist previous to the 150 years ago, that "Leo" finds as the date of the degree of M.M.? In tradition. What does he think of the Masonry that existed at the building of Solomon's Temple, or the Masonic Marks on the Great Pyramid of Cheops at Ghizeh, as discovered by General Howard Vyse.

In answer to your other correspondent, Bro. Snodgrass says that there are few lodges in Scotland, but work the Chair degree although against the positive instructions of Grand Lodge, I am aware of that, I was in the same position as Bro. S., and received it in the same lodge. What I intended in my remarks on the chair degree were, that no lodge has a right to use the Charter granted by Grand Lodge, in working that degree, as the Grand Lodge expressly stipulates in the granting of said Charter, and also in Grand Lodge Laws, cap. xxi. sec. i. "All lodges holding of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, are strictly prohibited and discharged from holding any other meeting than those of the three orders, viz., Apprentice, Fellow-craft, and Master Mason (denominated St. John's Masonry—the Mark forming part of the second degree); and from giving any countenance, as a body, to any other order of Masonry," &c. I think this speaks for itself. Is not every candidate bound by his O.B. to obey the laws of Grand Lodge? Is it obeying them in using the charter for working a degree strictly prohibited by Grand Lodge? The R.W.M., administering the O.B. to a candidate in the Chair Degree on a G.L. Charter, not only breaks, directly, his O.B. to Grand Lodge, but binds the candidate that he will not be present at the, &c., &c., except a just and lawful charter, &c., &c., he well knowing that there is no charter present at the time for working that degree. As I asserted in my last letter, they have an equal right to work the R.A.K.T. or any other order on the Grand Lodge Charter.

AMMI.

THE ROMISH ANTI-MASONIC BOGLE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As I perceived from your columns lately, an individual of the Roman hierarchy—Cardinal Cullen—issued a manifesto interdicting the presence of anyone, under his jurisdiction, at the grand Masonic assembly in Dublin, and, as dutiful children his subjects obeyed. The worthy cardinal treats them as bairns, but we are sorry to see them acting as such. He seems to remember his schoolboy days, when an awful effect could be produced by tying two brooms together crosswise, and dressing them up with an old shirt; possibly, he yet remembers the effect produced upon himself when going into his bedroom one night he saw the terrible apparition full before him, when the moon's rays shining through the window lighted it up with a ghastly glare. Profiting by the lesson, the now cardinal thinks that if a bogle can be made to frighten little boys, so also may one be equally easily made and stuck up to frighten men, alias big boys. His eminence, therefore, constructs his bogle in the shape of a manifesto, or anti-Masonic-ball-interdict, which being duly stuck up, the effect is at once seen by an universal skedaddle—the cardinal, no doubt, enjoying the ruse immensely.

One would have thought in this advanced age of railways, electric telegraphs, &c., there would have existed sufficient discrimination to have seen through the make-up, but such seems not to have been the case. Three centuries and a half ago, one at Wittemberg had the manly courage to pay due respect to a pope's foolish bull; but now, in this advanced era, A.D. 1869, where, in Dublin, was the Luther who had the sensible courage to light his pipe with a cardinal's possibly more foolish interdict.

All honour to the pioneers of freedom, wherever they are found. If men would only think, the days when such needlessly foolish manifestos would produce any practical effect would soon be numbered, and if cardinals would eat they would have to find some more profitable work than composing interdicts, or anti-Masonic manifestos.

The success, however, of the cardinal's present effort deserves some acknowledgment, and I would suggest that a crest be granted him of two broomsticks, tied together a la latini crucis, covered with a white shirt a la hominis, the whole surmounted with an old night cap, the motto being "Boh!"

I am, yours fraternally,

ANTI-HUMBUG.

A CORRECTION.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to correct an error which has inadvertently appeared in your impression of Saturday last. In returning thanks for the "Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland," I am reported to have said "that I came from what some persons had called an unfortunate country."

I alluded to Ireland, on the occasion of the Inauguration of the Grand Hall having been called an "unhappy" not "unfortunate" country, and I said I was certain that the Irish brethren would do all in their power to make any English Brethren "happy" and welcome, should they visit Ireland, and I hoped some would do so at the Inauguration of the New Masonic Hall in Dublin, which I thought would take place about July next.

I remain yours very truly,

FRANCIS BURDETT, P.M., P.S.G.W.,

Rep. from G. L. Ireland, at G. L. England.

Ancaster House, Richmond, May 5, 1869.

A HYMN.

We seek one port beyond the main,
We journey on one tide;
Then, Father, let no question vain
Thy children here divide.

The streams by various names we call
Flow on to one bright sea;
Thy sun of Love shines on them all—
They all flow on to Thee.

So, as upon the streams the skies
Their shade of glory throw,
Let Heaven's light suffuse our eyes
And fill our breasts below.

And when our lives like sere leaves fall,
Whatever stream it be
On which they fall; oh! deign to call
Those withered leaves to Thee.

ALEXANDER HUME BUTLER.

ROYAL ARCH.

Victoria Chapter, No. 1056.

In observing the rapid spread of Freemasonry throughout the length and breadth of the land, there are few indications of its prosperity more gratifying to thoughtful brethren than the formation of Royal Arch Chapters. For many years in the history of the Order, a lethargy seems to have prevailed with reference to Royal Arch Masonry, and the proper study of its ceremonies appears to have been neglected in a manner unaccountable to the few who appreciated the beauties of the system.

This torpor is now being dispelled by the light of better instruction, and it is no longer the rule for installed Principals to discharge their duties by deputy. Both in the metropolis and in the provinces we now possess Chapters where real work is done in masterly style, and with all the accessories of proper apartments and furniture. Among the new Chapters in London conspicuous for the Masonic abilities of its members the "Victoria" Chapter, No. 1056, may justly be quoted. An emergency Convocation of the "Victorians" was held on Thursday the 29th ult., at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, upon which occasion the splendid new furniture manufactured by Comp. Caney was used for the first time. The tout ensemble was all that could be desired, as every requisite for the use of the Chapter was provided. The officers and members present at the meeting were:—Comps. C. Hosgood, M.E.Z.; G. H. Oliver, H.; E. Clark, J.; A. A. Pendlebury, P.Z., Scribe E.; W. Long, Scribe N.; E. Gottheil, P.S.; R. Wentworth Little, P.Z. and Past Scribe; James Brett, P.Z., Treasurer; W. H. Hubbard, P.Z.; Geo. Kenning, J. D. Taylor, C. W. Noehmer, W. Musto, J. J. Caney, H. Bolleter, and J. W. Forge.

The visitors were Companions Joseph Smith, P.G.D.C., P.Z. 177; C. A. Cottebrune, Z. 733, P.Z. 177; W. Smith, C.E., P.Z. 33; R. Tanner, P.S. 975; G. Ruthven, 249; C. Willcox, 975; and J. Harvey.

After the confirmation of the minutes, ballots were taken for several candidates, and, proving favourable, Bros. R. R. Baker, W. Ashby, E. Roberts, W. J. Ferguson, and R. E. Bright, were then admitted into the supreme Order of capital Masonry by the M.E.Z., and it is but bare justice to Companion Hosgood to say that the ceremony was rendered by him and his able officers in a most admirable and impressive manner, indeed the proficiency shown cannot be surpassed.

Votes of thanks were then unanimously and heartily accorded to Comp. George Kenning, who presented the chapter with a superb Bible and complete set of books; to Comp. Caney for an elegant solid silver trowel; and to Comp. Long, for a handsomely emblazoned scroll.

The chapter having been closed with the usual solemnities, the companions proceeded to the banquet hall, where, after "the feast of reason and the flow of soul," substantial creature comforts were provided to recruit the physical man. Toasts in honour of the candidates, the M.E.Z., the visitors, officers, &c., followed the usual formal observances; and when the hour for departure arrived, all separated with a thorough conviction that in the Victoria Chapter they had not laboured in vain, or wasted their strength for nought.

MASONIC GATHERING AT SKIBBEREEN.

On Thursday last week the Brethren of Lodge 15 gave a supper to Bros. J. Waters and John Evans, on the eve of their departure from Skibbereen. The former has for many years been manager of Messrs. Grant & Co's, establishment here, which position he filled with much credit to himself and satisfaction to the public, by whom his departure is much felt. Mr. Evans has not been so long in our midst, his first visit to Skibbereen being to erect the Gas Works. But short though his stay has been, he too was fortunate in gaining the good wishes and respect of all classes. As Masons, both these gentlemen were all that the Craft could desire, and by whom their absence will long be felt. The chair was occupied by Bro. C. Clerke, and the vice-chair by Bro. J. F. Levis. After the usual Masonic and loyal toasts were disposed of the chairman gave the toast of the evening in suitable language, expressing his sorrow at losing their excellent member, sentiments which were fully endorsed by the brethren.

Mr. Waters, in reply said,
Worshipful Sir,—Accept my very sincere thanks for the very kind manner in which you have proposed my health, and you, brethren, for the hearty and kind manner with which you have received it. I have sometimes heard speakers say that such and such moments were the happiest of their lives, and that their feelings so overcame them that their tongues refused to utter the thought and feeling of their hearts. I do assure you, worshipful sir, and dear brethren, such is my case to night. Words of mine cannot convey the feeling of my heart for the flattering but unmerited eulogium, which you, worshipful sir, have passed on me, and which the brethren have endorsed by their hearty approval of every sentence as it fell from the Master's lips. I trust I shall so conduct myself towards my fellow men as to merit the approbation of all good men and worthy Masons. It is with feelings of much regret that I am about to sever the tie which has for so long a time subsisted between us as friends, but, in doing so, I have the consolation that Masons are bound by a tie that cannot be broken, for whenever you find a member of our Order there you find a brother. Since I joined your most honourable society of free and accepted Masons, you, brethren, have exemplified in your conduct towards me one of the first great principles of our most noble Order—brotherly love. You, sir, have expressed yourself in words of hope and encouragement for my success in my new sphere of duties. I can quite reciprocate such kind words and wishes. Nothing will give me greater pleasure than to hear of the prosperity of my friends in Skibbereen, and of the brethren of Lodge 15 in particular, wherever my lot in after life may be. I shall always look back with pleasure to the years I spent among you. If, in the order of Divine Providence, we are never again permitted to meet in a Masonic Lodge, I sincerely trust and pray that we shall all live such lives that, when the last summons from our Great Master shall sound in our ears, we shall be found ready to enter the Grand Lodge above, when parting shall be no more.

Mr. Evans, in a short but appropriate speech, warmly thanked the brethren for the great kindness he had received at their hands, and assured them that his parent Lodge would ever be looked back on by him with feelings of true affection.

After several other toasts the meeting separated about eleven o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWO GRAND LODGES OF ENGLAND IN RATIFICATION OF THE UNION, 1813.

Grand Assembly of Freemasons, for the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England, on St. John's Day, 27th December, 1813.

The cornucopia, the wine, and oil, were in like manner presented to the Grand Masters, who, according to ancient rite, poured forth corn, wine, and oil, on the said Ark, saying—"As we pour forth corn, wine, and oil on this Ark of the Masonic Covenant, may the bountiful hand of Heaven ever supply this United Kingdom with abundance of corn, wine, and oil; with all the necessaries and comforts of life. And may He dispose our hearts to be grateful for all His gifts!" And the Assembly said, "Amen."

The Grand Officers then resumed their places.

A letter was read from the R.W. Brother Laurie, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, transmitting Resolutions of that Grand Lodge in answer to the letter of the M.W. the Grand Master of the two Grand Lodges, announcing to them the happy event of the Union and requesting them to appoint a deputation agreeably to Art IV. of the Act of Union. And it was ordered that these Resolutions be inserted on the minutes of this day.

A letter was also read from the W. Brother W. F. Graham, Dep. G. Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, transmitting Resolutions of that Grand Lodge, in answer to a similar communication from their Royal Highnesses the two Grand Masters of the respective Fraternities in England. It was ordered that these Resolutions be entered on the minutes of this day. In consequence of its having been found impracticable from the shortness of the notice for the sister Grand Lodges to send deputations to this Assembly, according to the urgent request of the two Fraternities, conferences had been held with all the most distinguished Grand Officers and enlightened Masons resident in and near London, in order to establish perfect agreement upon all the essential points of Masonry, according to the Ancient Traditions and general practice of the Craft.

The members of the Lodge of Reconciliation, accompanied by the Most Worshipful His Excellency Count De Lagardje, Grand Master of the first Lodge of Freemasons in the North, the Most Worshipful Brother Dr. Van Hees, of the Grand Lodge of Hamburg, and other distinguished Masons, withdrew to an adjoining apartment, where, being congregated and tiled, the result of all the previous conferences was made known.

The members of the Lodge of Reconciliation, and distinguished visitors, on their return, proceeded slowly up the centre in double file; and as they approached the two Grand Masters they opened, and the Grand Visitors advanced, when His Excellency the Grand Master of the First Lodge of the North, audibly pronounced that the forms settled and agreed on by the Lodge of Reconciliation were pure and correct.

This being declared, the same was recognised as the forms to be alone observed and practised in the United Grand Lodge, and all the Lodges dependant thereon, until time shall be no more.

The Holy Bible spread open, with the square and compass thereon, was laid on the Ark of the Covenant, and the two Grand Chaplains approached the same. The recognized obligation was then pronounced aloud by the Rev. Dr. Hemming, one of the Masters of the Lodge of Reconciliation, the whole Fraternity repeating the same, with joined hands, and declaring—"By this solemn obligation we vow to abide, and the regulations of Ancient Freemasonry now recognized strictly to observe."

The Assembly then proceeded to constitute one Grand Lodge, in order to which the Grand Masters, Deputy Grand Masters, Grand Wardens, and other acting Grand Officers of both Fraternities, divested themselves of their insignia, and Past Grand Officers took the chairs; viz., the R.W. Past Deputy Grand Master Perry in the chair as Deputy Grand Master; the R.W. Robert Gill, as Senior Grand Warden; and the R.W. James Deans, as Junior Grand Warden.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, then in an eloquent address, in which he stated that the great view with which he had taken upon himself the important office of Grand Master of the Ancient Fraternity, as declared at the time, was to facilitate the important object of the Union which had been that day so happily concluded. And now it was his intention to propose his illustrious and dear relative to be the Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge, for which high office he was in every respect so eminently qualified. As therefore proposed His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex to be Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Freemasons of England for the year ensuing. This was seconded by the R.W. the Hon. Washington Shirley, and being put to the vote, was unanimously carried in the affirmative, with masonic honours.

THE ANCIENT BRITONS.—Those numerous writers who represent the brave Ancient Britons as being totally without roads of any kind, are evidently in error. The cannibals who, according to recent researches in ancient sepulchres by industrious antiquaries like the Rev. William Greenwell of Durham, appear, at some remote period, to have inhabited our country, previous to what has been hitherto regarded as the Aborigines, and who have had, in the course of nature, been forced to give place to a superior race called Celts, themselves doomed to give place to a still superior race, may possibly have been in that deplorable condition. But a people who understood so well how to fortify their fords, that the strong stakes they had driven into the bed of the Thames remained for many centuries; and whose enduring earthworks still show how every mountain top in Britain had been chosen as their "coigne of vantage;" whose courage in war struck the veteran Roman legions with surprise, and whose skill in riding their small hardy horses and dexterity in driving their scythe-armed chariots would be now viewed with admiration in any circus in Europe; whose careful casting of many metal articles, of both use and ornament, as well as the construction of their vehicles, show considerable mechanical ability and artistic skill; whose knowledge of agriculture extended to the cultivation and garnering of corn, and to the use of marl as a manure; and whose Bardic-Druical system of religion, if we may form any notion of it by the Historical Triads of the Cymry (the numbers three and seven being apparently, from remotest ages, dear to superstition), was a higher and a holier thing than much that yet passes current among men as sacred;—that such a people, I say, should have possessed no rude roads even, to enable them to pass with ease through their interminable forests, is no article of my historical creed, and I can only express my surprise that it should form any portion of my belief of so many other authors.—The History of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, by Bro. George Markham Tweddell, F.S.A. Scot. and Newc., &c.

DRUMBO CHURCH ERECTION FUND,
ONTARIO, CANADA.

AN examination of the official papers set forth below will sufficiently explain, and, I venture to think, justify, my bringing to the notice of my fellowchurchmen the object which I have at heart in visiting England at this time.

The Mission of which I have the charge, situated at Princeton, in the diocese of Huron, covers a very large area, and is, at present, provided with but one church—a provision utterly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of the district.

This church, a very small one (being but 30 by 60), I was enabled to build by the proceeds obtained from lectures delivered by me, and appeals made by sermons and other agencies, supplemented by free gifts of sand, stone, and other material, most liberally contributed by the members of the mission, who gave, in addition, their personal services, both in digging the foundations and bringing to the site the whole of the material required—a distance, in some cases, of twelve miles.

Before leaving Princeton I had the great consolation of seeing this church (St. Paul's) free from debt, and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

My present object is to provide a second church for Drumbo, the northern portion of my mission, distant about seven miles from St. Paul's Church, Princeton.

In this district are many settlers, mostly emigrants from Great Britain, who are very anxious to have the great blessing of a place of worship in their midst, and who, although too poor to help much financially, are both ready and willing to contribute, as their neighbours in Princeton have done, in labour and material.

The amount required for this good end is but trifling,
 £1,200 to £1,500 being amply sufficient (with the labour and material given) to provide a suitable church and mission-house; and I appeal with all confidence to God's stewards of wealth in England who are happy in the full enjoyment of all Christian privileges, to extend to their fellow churchmen for whom I plead, the blessings so liberally poured out upon themselves.

BRO. HENRY BARTLETT,

(Incumbent Princeton, Canada), Senior Curate (pro tem)
 St. George the Martyr, Southwark.

March 17th, 1869.

From His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

"I have examined the papers of the Rev. Mr. Bartlett which seem to me to be quite correct

(Signed) "A. C. CANTUAR.

"Lambeth Palace, February 27th, 1869."

From the Lord Bishop of Huron.

"The Rev. Henry Bartlett has been, since his ordination Missionary at Princeton, in the Diocese of Huron. Within the limits of his extensive Mission, the village of Drumbo is situated. Mr. Bartlett is desirous to erect a church in this village, and, the people being very poor, he is under the necessity of seeking assistance from Christian friends for that object. He is going to England to visit his friends, and he hopes to be able to interest some of those to whom the Lord has committed the stewardship of the goods of this world, to aid him in the good work which he has in hand. I would recommend this cause to the liberal assistance of members of the church.

(Signed) "BENJAMIN HURON.

"See House, London, Canada, July 10th, 1868."

From the Ven. Archdeacon Utterton, Commissary of the Diocese of Winchester.

"The Rev. H. Bartlett, of Princeton, Upper Canada, appears to be well accredited, and I shall rejoice to hear that he has been successful in his endeavours to raise funds for the erection of a church at Drumbo.

(Signed) "J. S. UTTERTON, Archdeacon of Surrey.

The "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge,"

At its Monthly Meeting, held December 1st, 1868, made, at the suggestion of the Standing Committee, a grant of £25 towards the above object, on the condition that the residue be raised.

The undermentioned gentlemen have kindly consented to receive contributions towards the "Drumbo Church Erection Fund," and an acknowledgement of all subscriptions received will be forwarded to the Times, by the Lord Bishop of Huron, immediately after my return to Canada (D.V.) in June next:—

[Br. Henry Bartlett, G. Orator of Canada, stands well with the Order there, comes fully accredited, and highly recommended, therefore, the object of appeal being a very deserving one, we hope the brethren will support the Rev. Brother with liberal contributions.—

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]

Such were the wonderful manifestations of the Divine Presence with which it pleased the Almighty to favour the patriarchs of old, and as they were thus assured of the guardianship and protection of Jehovah, so are we taught by a due commemoration and observance of those ancient signs, that the servants of God in every age are canopied by celestial mercy and power. In endeavouring to trace the traditional outlines of the history of Royal Arch Masonry, we shall strictly keep in view its scriptural character, as whatever differences of opinion may exist as to its antiquity as a Masonic degree, few, we apprehend, will deny its claims as a splendid sequel to the historical and legendary associations of the Craft degrees.

Upon the model of King Solomon's Temple were constructed, we are informed, nearly all those wondrous palaces and temples of the ancient world of which such magnificent remains exist even to the present day, and it is well known that in every subsequent attempt to rebuild the Temple itself, the architects and masons employed strove to emulate the glories of the former structure.

Scarcely had the wise son of David been gathered to his fathers, when the people of Israel forsook the altars of the true and living God to worship at the unhallowed shrines of the heathen nations—when, as God, by the prophet Isaiah, complains, “They forsook the fountain of living waters, and hewed out for themselves cisterns, broken cisterns that could hold no water;” and they were justly punished for their wicked apostasy and blind idolatry. It is very remarkable, and is a strong proof of the depravity of human nature, that the Hebrews, for whom when in Egypt God wrought by the hand of Moses a series of the most astonishing miracles—to whom He displayed from Mount Sinai “the divine majesty of His glory, and the excellence of His magnificence”; and who had heard the Almighty speaking with an audible voice out of the midst of the fire—a people who had the radiant Shechinah, the visible symbol of His presence, constantly before them, and whose prophets enjoyed direct communion with Jehovah—that favoured men like these should have debased themselves by idolatry, almost transcends the power of belief, but for the innumerable instances of their perverse and rebellious spirit which are related in the sacred scriptures.

After trying the patience and long-suffering of God for many ages, during which, however, they were visited at intervals with divine chastisement—by sword, famine and pestilence—the Most High declared, through the prophet Jeremiah, that He would give them up into the hands of their enemies; that their city and temple should be destroyed by fire, and the remnant of their nation carried into captivity by the King of Babylon for the space of seventy years; which prediction was verified in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, king of Judah, when Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, conquered Jerusalem, and after having plundered the Temple of all its holy vessels and utensils, he committed the sacred edifice to the flames, and razed the city to the foundations, carrying away as captives nearly the whole population, except a few of the servile race who were left to till the ground. After the deaths of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, God raised up Daniel to be the prophet and instructor of His disobedient but now repentant people. Daniel and his friends, whose faith had been so severely tested in that fiery trial from which they were so signally delivered by the Most High, eventually became the trusted servants of the King of Babylon, who raised them to the chief offices in his dominions, by which means they were enabled to alleviate the sorrows of their less fortunate countrymen.

Belshazzar, who succeeded to the throne after the death of his father, having profanely used the sacred vessels of the Temple at an impious feast given to his courtiers, had a supernatural vision which none of the Chaldean seers could interpret, and fear and awe sat upon the brow of the haughty king, who at length sent for the inspired Daniel to expound the mysterious characters on the wall. Daniel informed the king that the writing foreboded the loss of his kingdom and life, and it came to pass that in the very same night he was slain, and Darius, the Mede, accompanied by Cyrus, his nephew, obtained possession of the kingdom.

Daniel continued as high in favour with Darius as under the former dynasty, and when, after the death of Darius, Cyrus succeeded to the sole government of the empire, Daniel having a favourable opportunity showed to the king the prophecy of Isaiah, wherein Cyrus is described by name more than 200 years before his birth, and the circumstances of the taking of Babylon and the restoration of the Jews are foretold with marvellous minuteness and accuracy. The following is part of the prophecy: “Thus saith the Lord to His anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and THE GATES SHALL NOT BE SHUT. I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight; I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron; and I will give the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayst know that I, the Lord which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel, for Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me. I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me; I girded thee, though thou hast not known me; that they may know, from the rising of the sun and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else. I form the light and create darkness. I have raised him

THE EPHEMERAL AND THE ETERNAL.

A series of afternoon costume recitals from Shakspeare's plays have lately been given at St. George's Hall, Langham-place. The various characters were very ably sustained by Miss Bouverie, late of the Theatre Royal Haymarket; Misses Lavine and Blanch Wilton, Mr. Ryder, the celebrated tragedian of the Theatre Royal Drury Lane; Messrs. Gaston, Murray, and Weaver. At the conclusion of each selection they received well-merited rounds of applause from crowded and fashionable audiences. Bro. A. Nimmo has the entire management of these excellent performances.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

VII.—MASONRY & THE NUMBER SEVEN.

“And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.”—Apocalypse i. 12, 13.

The greatest materialists as well as the most profound theologians of all ages have joined in glorifying mathematics, founded as it is upon number and form, as the most exalted of all pursuits, either as science, art, or doctrine, into which the human mind can venture to inquire; while to us of later times it has proved alike a social advantage and an intellectual charm. In numbers and their correlations we can, if we choose to do so, lose ourselves as mystics; by numbers, as statesmen, we can regulate political economy and the well-being of mankind; and through numbers—which, in their essence, may be defined as proportionate relations—we can arrive at some faint idea of the solemnity existing, by permission of T.G.A.O.T.U., throughout nature in a perfect harmony—a spherulic music intelligible to those who choose to incline their ear.

All numbers, with their series and multiples, have an interest to thoughtful men, but none rings with more charming melody and inspiring hope than the number seven.

It is, to use technical language, "of the third parity, the crown;" it bows to one other series of numbers only, of which indeed, it is part. I allude to the number ten, with which all operations can be performed from the inherent nature and practical capacity of the signs.

As, however, I am not at the number ten, and desire to be practically useful in these papers rather than oracularly wise, I will proceed to the consideration of this perfect, because indivisible, number in another light. Nor do I intend to encumber the pages of THE FREEMASON with elaborate catalogues of the applications hitherto made of this number, only mentioning the most important. It would need many diagrams to carry out the universality of the number, and it must be reserved for another time and place.

It is enough to say that all Masons—by which I purpose to include men instructed in universal symbolism—bow, with unfeigned respect to the number seven. There is a Master Mason (1) to control, a Senior and Junior Warden (2, 3) to provide for labor and refreshment, a Senior and Junior Deacon (4, 5) to reply and conduct, and an Inner Guard and Tyler (6, 7) to introduce and warn. These offices are plain and indisputable. Other offices in a lodge, such as Secretary, Treasurer, Organist, and Orator (or Chaplain), are adventitious aids not contemplated in the original plan. Of course modern society, not recognising anything without a partition of duties, perceives the necessity of this hierarchy of government; but it has always been within the power and discretion of the Master for the time being to ordain who shall bear these select and honourable burthens. I doubt whether, in one sense, the office of Treasurer should not be within his function, but that is a matter of convenience, and also marks the late origin of Masonry as it now stands. I only argue that the first seven are inherent in the nature of things, and are irremovable landmarks. They date from "Operative" Masonry, while the other offices are produced by the effect of social changes, and date from a comparatively immediate period. Practically, the first seven are all the officers requisite, and they wonderfully and aptly illustrate the continuity of Freemasonry.

There are, however, (without recurring to the consideration of the High Degrees, a subject on which I am desirous of advancing some opinions), many interesting results to be derived from a contemplation of the number seven. In the motto of this paper I have endeavoured to make my readers turn to a very solemn question indeed, and I will endeavour, with all my strength, to convince others of the vitality existing in this said number seven, with its central point.

It will readily be conceded that Masonry, with its wonderful spirit of charity, would be a nonentity, and, forsooth, an impossibility, if it did not busy itself with the social, intellectual and moral advancement of man. It was instilled, we may say, so to speak, into all mankind at the beginning of his intellectual enlightenment, and has suffered only at the hands of the "men of Belial." Apollyon stands always in the path, and if we do not smite him, he will assuredly smite us.

But the placid planets continue to revolve and remind us of our path of duty; they, immutable as that Being who placed them in their orbs, tell us that we are as everlasting as they. They inspire us with hope, and the galaxy of stars rejoice in the perception of universal love and care. If we are frail, so we are bid to fight for our own redemption, by having confidence in T.G.A.O.T.U. If we err we have those ever-shining witnesses of His glory to inspire us with ideas far transcending those of poets.

Well, then, are we to cast aside as worthless those meditations of the Immortals who have preceded us? For one, I say never! Should we not rather try, with all our might, to understand as much as we can of the mysteries of numbers. Therefore, I may safely look at the scale of the number seven, and seek to deduce from it for the common benefit a common lesson.

It will not be doubted, after the eloquent vindication of his fame by Mr. Morley, that Henry Cornelius Agrippa Von Nettesheim was one of the foremost spirits of his time. A life of singular misfortune, enlivened only by constant and close application to study, was his portion on this earth; but if the duty of a reflective man be to mirror the inner spirit of his era, then Agrippa fearlessly and truly did his duty. He also accumulated much of the symbolic lore which had preceded him, and which, misunderstood and vilified by the mass of mankind, has come down to our times under the name of magic. In his celebrated "Three Books of Occult Philosophy," Agrippa furnishes the world with tables and illustrations of the meaning of numbers from unity onwards, and though some of the analogies are fanciful, and perhaps a little too recondite, to the symbolical student they afford much valuable information. I have therefore ventured to copy the following for the benefit of my readers, as the work is very scarce:—

THE SCALE OF THE NUMBER SEVEN.
In the Original World....	Ararita	Ḥayy			Asser Ebeie	Ḥayy		The name of God with seven letters.
In the Intelligible World	Zaphiel	Zadkiel	Camael	Raphael	Hauei	Michael	Gabriel	Seven Angels which stand in the presence of God.
In the Celestial World ..	Saturn	Jupiter	Mars	The Sun	Venus	Mercury	The Moon	Seven Planets.
In the Elementary World	The Lapwing The Cuttlefish The Mole The Ouyx	The Eagle The Dolphin The Hart Tin The Sapphire	The Vulture The Pike The Wolf Iron The Diamond	The Swan The Seacalf The Lion Gold The Carbuncle	The Dove The Mallus The Goat Copper The Emerald	The Stork The Mullet The Ape Quicksilver The Agate	The Owl The Seacat The Cat Silver Crystal	Seven Birds. Seven Fish. Seven Animals. Seven Metals. Seven Stones.
In the Infernal World ..	Hell	The gates of Death	The shadow of Death	The pit of destruction	The clay of Death	Pardition	The depth of the Earth	The 7 habitations of infernals described by Rabbi Joseph of Cas-tile, in "The Garden of Edén."

I can only beg my readers to ponder well the profound symbolism contained in the above table. Compare it with the mythology of the ancient world, and much will become clear which is at present a riddle. The hieroglyphics of Egypt and Assyria contain images founded upon tables such as these, and although there may not be, as perhaps might be argued by some, any immediate reference to modern Masonry, there is unquestionably an occult relation to the ancient mysteries of the world of antiquity in the series. The motto taken from the Apocalypse at the head of this paper is, I am disposed to think, connected with this antique symbolic series, and refers to the common centre point—God in the eternal and immutable world, man in his finite and fleeting state of existence. Thus, even from the dreams of occult philosophy we may obtain analogies well worth thinking carefully upon, even at this late period of human history. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it. The macrocosm and microcosm are indissolubly bound together, and the one is but the faint adumbration of the other and Eternal Essence.

CRYPTONYMUS.

CRYPTONYMUS.

CONSECRATION OF THE GOLDEN RULE LODGE, No. 1261.

The consecration of the "Golden Rule" Lodge took place on the 6th inst., at the Great Western Hotel, Paddington. There was a numerous and influential attendance of brethren, of whom the following is a list:—Brothers Henry Muggeridge, Frederick Bigg, P.M.; John Sunley, A. G. Sharpe, J. J. Harris, E. Addis, S. Cornish, D. Newsham, A. Williams, R. Cross, M.D., G. Beaman, M.D., William Smith, P.G.S.; E. H. Fennell, 969; J. H. Cox, 49; Newton Jennings, W.M. 452; S. Pidcock, 90; P. Matthews, 569; W. The following is a copy of the programme supplied to the brethren for the occasion:—

The Brethren assemble at half-past three p.m., and form in procession, the juniors first, headed by the Director of the Ceremonies.

The Presiding Officer takes the Chair, and appoints the Wardens, pro tem.

The Lodge is duly opened in the Three Degrees.

The Chaplain offers up Prayer.

Solemn Music.

The Grand Secretary addresses the Presiding Officer, who desires him to read the Petition and Warrant.

The Presiding Officer inquires if the Brethren approve of the Officers named in the Warrant.

The Presiding Officer (Bro. Henry Muggeridge) will deliver an oration.

Anthem—"Behold! how pleasant and how good."—St. Stephen.

The Grand Secretary presents the New Master to the Presiding Officer, who places him on his left, the Brethren of the New Lodge arrange themselves on each side of the Lodge Board.

The first portion of the "Dedication Prayer."

All—Chant, "So mote it be."

Sanctus, "Glory be to Thee, O Lord."

All the Brethren turn to the East, when the Presiding Officer gives the Invocation.

All—Chant, "So mote it be."

The Lodge Board is uncovered, and three Past Masters carry Corn, Wine, and Oil three times round the Lodge, during Solemn Music, "Glory be to God on high."

All—Chant, "So mote it be."

The Chaplain takes the Censer three times round the Lodge during Solemn Music.

The second portion of the "Dedication Prayer."

All—Chant, "So mote it be."

The Presiding Officer "Dedicates" the Lodge.

All—Chant, "So mote it be."

The Presiding Officer "Constitutes" the Lodge.

All—Chant, "So mote it be."

Anthem, "The spacious firmament on high."—Haydn. Installation.

Shortly after the appointed time the business commenced, and the programme was gone through. Bro. Muggeridge impressively delivering an oration (we understand composed by himself), to which the brethren paid great attention. Bro. Jennings, assisted by professional brethren, ably conducted the musical arrangements, and everything passed off with éclat. When Bro. Eglese had been installed in the chair of K.S., according to ancient custom, he was greeted with the customary salutations, and proceeded to appoint and invest his officers for the year:—Dr. Beaman, Treasurer; Fred. Bigg, P.M., Secretary; John Sunley, S.W.; A. G. Sharpe, J.W.; J. Harris, S.D.; P. H. Cornish, J.D.; A. H. Williams, G.G.; the other offices were for the present left open.

Bro. BEAMAN, in returning thanks to the W.M. and brethren, for having that evening elected him their treasurer for the year, said he felt grateful to them for the honour conferred upon him, and it would be his constant endeavour to promote the harmony of the lodge, and do his duty faithfully and well. (Hear, hear.)

The W.M., who upon rising for the first time was applauded, proposed that a vote of thanks be given to Bro. H. Muggeridge, P.M., &c., for the very able and excellent manner in which he had performed the duties of consecration and installation that evening. They were all ready to expect what they should hear, for they knew him so well, and knew his capabilities, and had he not done it so well he would have fallen short of his usual excellence. (Hear, hear.) He (the W.M.) could assure them it was with great gratification to himself he had been put into the chair that evening to preside over them by his respected friend, Bro. Muggeridge, who had been his chief preceptor, and to whom he owed his knowledge of the Craft, and which knowledge had given him a desire to become a good Mason and a better man. (Hear, hear.) He had therefore, as he had already stated, very much pleasure in proposing "That a vote of thanks be given to Bro. Muggeridge for the excellent manner in which he had performed the duties of Consecrating and Installing Master, and that the same be recorded on the minutes of the lodge."

The S.W. seconded the motion, which was put by the J.W., and carried unanimously.

Bro. MUGGERIDGE returned thanks for the compliment paid him, and said if he had given satisfaction he was very pleased, and fully repaid for any trouble he might have been put to.

Five propositions were received of gentlemen desirous of being initiated, and several joining members were proposed, and the lodge, after the usual enquiries of the W.M., was closed with solemn prayer. The meeting then adjourned.

[Subsequently several speeches were delivered, but as our representative was not honoured with an invitation we are unable to give a report of them.]

The fittings, jewels, books, &c., were made by Bro. George Kenning, of Little Britain, from the designs of Bro. Eglese, the W.M.

PRESENTATION TO BRO. WM. COOKE, P.M. ST. JAMES'S LODGE, HALIFAX.

At the weekly Instruction Meeting of this Lodge, held on Tuesday evening, the 4th inst., an interesting feature of the evening's proceedings was the presentation of a testimonial to Bro. William Cooke, P.M., who for the last six years has filled the office of Secretary to the above Lodge, acted as Scribe E. to the Chapter of Regularity, and as Secretary to the Fearnley Lodge of Mark Masters, No. 58.

In the absence of the W.M., Bro. R. Lord, who was confined to bed through an accident, the chair was occupied by Bro. Ibberson, S.W.

After the usual loyal and masonic toasts had been given, that of the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, R.W.P.G.M., of W. York; Bro. Bentley Shaw, W.D.P.G.M.; and the P.G. Officers, being responded to by Bro. R. R. Nelson, P.D.P.G.M., and P.G. Sec.

The CHAIRMAN rose and said they now came to the toast of the evening, which was the health of their esteemed member, Bro. W. Cooke. After alluding to the satisfactory way in which Bro. Cooke had discharged the duties of his office, both as secretary and as a Past Master, he said the brethren were so well aware of Bro. Cooke's merits, that he could say little but what they already knew. He had, therefore, great pleasure, in addition to proposing his health, of presenting Bro. Cooke, on behalf of the members of St. James's Lodge, with a handsome English lever watch and gold Albert, and hoped he might long be spared to render further services to the Craft.

The following inscription was engraved on the watch:—

"Presented to Bro. WILLIAM COOKE, P.M., Lodge of St. James's, 448, in recognition of past services; April, 1869."

Comp. NORMANTON, Z., Chapter of Regularity, on behalf of the Companions of that chapter, then presented Comp. Cooke with an elegant gold P.Z. jewel, and, in doing so, expressed the delight it afforded him in being able that evening to take part in paying a tribute of respect to Comp. Cooke. He also mentioned the peculiar pleasure he experienced, when W.M. of 448, in signing the first voting paper as a vice-president of the Boys' School, as it was through Comp. Cooke's advocacy of the benefits of that noble institution, which caused the brethren to subscribe to place the W.M. in that proud position. Having read the inscription on the jewel—

"Presented to Comp. WILLIAM COOKE, P.Z. of No. 448, as a token of respect for past services; April, 1869," he then placed it on the breast, with the wish that he might have health to attend many future meetings of the chapter.

Bro. BATES, P.M., in the absence of the W.M., Bro. John Stott, then presented Bro. Cooke, on behalf of the members of the Fearnley Lodge of Mark Masters, with the collar jewel of a Past Grand Senior Overseer of the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters for England and Wales. He stated that he had noticed Bro. Cooke from his initiation into Freemasonry, and found him always anxious to make progress in the knowledge of the Craft; and so convinced was he of this, that, when elected W.M. of No. 448, he at once promoted Bro. Cooke from J.D. to S.W., and had never had cause to regret the choice he made, and from that time Bro. Cooke's progress in Masonry had been steady but certain. The inscription on this jewel was as follows:—

"Presented to Bro. WILLIAM COOKE, P.M., Fearnley Lodge No. 58, and P.G.S.O., as a token of respect for past services; Halifax, April, 1869."

Previous to Bro. Cooke's reply, the train being nearly due, the health of "The Visitors" was given from the chair, which was responded to by Bro. T. ALEXANDER of the Masonic Life and Fire Association, and Bro. FREDERICK SCHOFIELD, of the Caledonian Lodge, No. 392, Edinburgh.

Bro. COOKE then rose to thank the brethren, and was received with considerable applause. Having stated his regret at being unable to express his gratitude in a manner which the occasion deserved, he went on to say that from his initiation Masonry had been his "hobby," and when men have a hobby, be it what it may, they generally devote plenty of time in the practice of it. He had been privileged with a deal of spare time, and he did not consider he should have been doing his duty as a Mason had he neglected to avail himself of the opportunity thus presented to him, and endeavour to obtain a general knowledge of the Craft. He had received the utmost kindness from an old Freemason at Keighley, Bro. Thomas Brown, P.M. (now 56 years a Mason, and whom he should have liked, had he known earlier, to have seen present that evening to witness the reward of one of his pupils), and he should always be ready to give, with the same freedom it had been given to him, anything that he knew concerning the mysteries of our ancient Craft, not to the members of No. 448 alone, but to the members of any other lodge who were desirous of instruction. After again thanking the brethren for the great kindness shown to him on this as on former occasions, he said he could not sit down without proposing to them a toast, and that was the health of the "W.M. and Officers of No. 448." He regretted the absence of the W.M. that evening—a circumstance which they all regretted—as it was from a cause over which he had no control. He had observed, with the greatest pleasure, the W.M. reviving the former weekly instruction meetings, as it was from them so much benefit was derived by the younger members of the Lodge. If the W.M. continued during his term of office in the way he had begun, he (Bro. Cooke) believed the members of the Lodge would have no cause to regret the choice made at the last election.

Bro. IBBERSON, S.W., Bro. LUPTON, J. W., and Bro. Dr. DOLAN, I.G., having replied, the remainder of the evening was spent in a social and convivial manner.

MACDONALD LODGE OF IMPROVEMENT, No. 1216.—The Fifteen Sections will be worked in the above Lodge, at the Head Quarters of the First Surrey Rifle Volunteers, Brunswick-road, Camberwell, on Wednesday, May 19th, 1869. Bro. J. Stevens, P.M., P.Z., 720, S.W. 1216, will preside. The Lodge will be opened at half-past six o'clock precisely.

THE SOCIAL BUCKS' PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY.—This Society held a meeting at Bro. Swainston's, the Three Bucks' Tavern, corner of Old Jewry, Gresham-street, on Saturday last. Bro. Stroud, Vice-president of the Society, in the unavoidable absence of Bro. Thos. Beard, President, occupied the chair, and was faced by Bro. Swainston, the Treasurer. There were also present Bro. John Emmens, Past Grand Pursuivant, Past Master of the Old and New Concord Lodges, and Secretary of the Society; Bro. James Hill; Bro. Maynard; Bro. Charles R. Sloman (author, &c.); Bro. Chaddock; Bro. John Hill; Bro. Nicholson, of the Concord Lodge; J. W. Duperé; Bro. Robinson; Bro. Arthur McNamara; Bro. Chas. E. Thompson, &c. This charitable Society was formed some few years ago for the purpose of supplying the poor in the winter time with bread and coals, and can now boast of the patronage of the Rt. Hon. the Lord Mayor, Mr. Under-Sheriff Roche (member of the Metropolitan Board of Works), and several barristers, solicitors, &c., and since its establishment has done a great deal of good. Bro. John Emmens, the Secretary, read the minutes of the former meeting, which were confirmed; and after the transaction of some routine business, the brethren adjourned to a dinner served in excellent style by Bro. Swainston, and after the cloth was drawn several toasts were given and responded to: Bro. Hill, in proposing the health of the Chairman, spoke in felicitous terms of his urbanity and general kindness of disposition. It was a toast they would all do honour to, for he was sure they all respected him as much as he (Bro. Hill) did, and, indeed, he did not think he (Bro. Stroud) had an enemy in the world. (Hear, hear.) Bro. Stroud returned thanks and said he was very much obliged to Bro. Hill for his good opinion, and as long as he was connected with it he should do all he could to promote the interests of the Society. Some songs were sung by Bro. Sloman, and the brethren adjourned at an early hour. We were indebted on this, as on many former occasions, to the courtesy of Bro. John Emmens, the Secretary, who takes great interest in promoting the comfort of the brethren as well as the laudable objects of the Society.

AN OLD MASON.—Mr. Wright, said to be one of the oldest Masons in Canada, died at Montreal on Wednesday last. He was born in Halifax, N.S., on the 2nd August, 1804, and died on the 4th instant. He was therefore in his 65th year. He became a member of the Masonic fraternity in 1834, at Quebec, and was Master of many different lodges both in the ancient capital and Montreal. He it was who started the benevolent system in Quebec in connection with Masonry. He was for over thirty-six years in the Adjutant-General's office, where for many years he held the position of Chief Clerk. For the last three years he has been placed upon the retired list with an allowance. There is an older Mason in our own town than was Mr. Wright at the time of his death.—W. F. McCulloch, Esq., of the Grange, having been initiated as an apprentice Mason on April 13th, 1832, at Caen, Normandy, France. We may add that our respected townsman is not only among the oldest, but the highest and most accomplished Masons in Canada.—Beacon, Canada West, March 26.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Egyptian Lodge, No. 27.—This excellent working lodge met on Thursday, the 6th inst., at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street. The W.M. Bro. W. H. Libbis, having taken the chair, supported by P.M.'s B. Todd, Buss, Payne, Berri, D. H. Jacobs, and Tomlinson. The minutes of the former lodge having been read and confirmed, Bro. C. H. Walter having answered the usual questions retired, and was duly passed to the degree of a F.C., in a very impressive manner. There being no other business before the lodge, it was closed in due form until October next. The brethren then sat down to a very sumptuous banquet, provided by Bro. Clemow. After the usual toasts, Bro. Farnfield, P.A.G.S. and Sec. to the R.M. Benevolent Institutions, returned thanks for the Grand Officers and the Masonic Charities. The visitors were Bros. Long, W.M. 435; Hickey, W.M. 534; Stokes, J.D. 861; G. Dudley, 93; and Geo. Tedder. The W.M. in proposing the health of the P.M.'s, stated how delighted he, as well as the brethren present were, to see Bro. Todd, P.M. and Treasurer, on that occasion, being his first appearance since his severe indisposition. Bro. Todd rising met with an enthusiastic reception, said he felt equally pleased that the G.A. of T.U. had spared him, and hoped to have their wishes fulfilled in being spared, and trusted he would ever remember with gratitude, their good and kind wishes. The P.M.'s present severally returned thanks. There was some excellent harmony from Bro. Skidmore, Dawson, Stokes, D. H. Jacobs, P.M. (who was in excellent voice), G. Tedder and Cook. After spending a very delightful evening, the brethren separated in peace and harmony.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge, No. 279.—A regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Halford-street, on Wednesday the 5th inst.; the W.M., Bro. Kelly, D.P.G.M., in the chair. All the officers, except the I.G., were in their places, and twenty-five brethren were present. Among the visitors were the Rev. Bro. N. Haycroft, D.D., of the Universal Lodge, No. 181; and the W.M., S. and J.W., and other brethren, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 523. After the preliminary business had been transacted, Bros. J. Wright, Smith, Pegg, Widdowson, Astill, and Skevington passed a satisfactory examination as F.C.'s, after which they retired, and the lodge having been opened in the third degree, they were severally raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The impressive effect of the ceremony was greatly increased by the full musical service, as arranged by Bros. C. Johnson and Dr. Hopkins, being performed, Bro. Crow, the talented Organist and Secretary of the lodge, presiding at the instrument. The ceremony of passing six candidates to the second degree was postponed until a future day, a lodge of emergency being arranged to be held for the purpose. After being at work from 6.30 p.m., the lodge was finally closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment at 9.30, and spent a short time very pleasantly.

COLCHESTER.—United Lodge, No. 697.—An adjourned meeting of this lodge took place at the George Hotel, Colchester, on Monday, April 26th. Present: Bros. Newman, W.M.; Rix, S.W. pro tem.; Bigley, J.W. pro tem.; Ray, Sec.; Calthorpe, S.D.; Eustace, J.D.; Gill, J.G.; J. S. Smith, P.M., 325; Woodland; and O'Malley. Visitors: The Prov. Grand Master, Bro. R. J. Bagshaw; Bros. Mathews, P.M., P.G., I.G.; Carr, Prov. Grand Sec.; Rev. F. B. Sheppard, W.M. 276; W. Spalding, Sec. 114. The lodge was opened in due form in the first degree, and the summons convening the meeting read. The Prov. Grand Master was then introduced by Bro. P. Mathews, and received with the usual honours. The minutes of the last two regular meetings were then read and afterwards confirmed. The brethren having met for the installation of the W.M., all those below the degree of Master Mason were requested to withdraw, and Bro. J. G. Trenman was then duly installed, and received an excellent address from Bro. Mathews, highly complimenting him upon having been chosen a second year to fill the office of W.M. The W.M. was then saluted with the usual honours. The lodge was then closed to second degree, and again saluted; and afterwards to the first, when the E.A. were admitted and the brethren again saluted the W.M. The W.M. next appointed his officers, and they were severally invested by Bro. P. Mathews with an appropriate address. The officers appointed were: Bro. George H. Ray, as S.W.; J. S. Smith, P.M. 325 (J.C.), J.W.; W. Calthorpe, S.D.; T. Eustace, J.D.; W. Gill, I.G.; Witten, Tyler; Rix, Treasurer; Ray, Sec., pro tem. Proposed by Bro. Ray, seconded by Bro. Trenman, that a vote of thanks be given to Bro. P. Mathews, for attending the United Lodge as Installing Master. Bro. Matthews briefly responded, and thanked the brethren for the kind reception given not only to him, but the Prov. Grand Master, Secretary, and the other visitors. The Prov. Grand Master and Secretary briefly addressed the brethren. Proposed by Bro. Ray, seconded by Bro. Captain J. S. Smith, P.M., 325, that Captain Sadler and Lieutenant Gray be permitted to enter their names as joining members of the United Lodge. Proposed by Bro. Gill, seconded by Bro. Ray, that Sergeant J. Feun, 41st Regiment, be allowed to enter his name as a candidate for initiation. The lodge was then closed, and the brethren afterwards sat down to a superb banquet, provided by Bro. Guiver in his usual first-class style.

MONKWEARMOUTH, DURHAM.—Williamson Lodge, No. 949.—The ceremony of installing the W.M. and officers for the ensuing twelve months took place on the 3rd of May, Brother W. Adamson, P.M., officiating as Installing Master. Bro. John Tillman, P.P.G.S. of W., was installed W.M., and he appointed and invested the following brethren, viz.:—John Trehwitt, P.G.R., I.P.M.; Robert Hudson, S.W.; W. Liddell, P.G. St., J.W.; R. W. Halfuight, P.M. and P.P.G.P., Treasurer; Charles Bell, Secretary; William Bryans, P.P.G. St., S.D.; J. H. Smith, J.D.; Walter Scott, I.G.; W. M. Laws, P.M. and P.G., Tyler; J. H. Marrison, D.C.; J. H. Coates and J. H. Sanderson, Stewards; Thomas Atkinson and C. F. Austin, Auditors; and J. H. Sanderson, O. Amongst others present were Bros. Cook, P.M.; Maddison, P.M.; Wade, P.G.D.C., W.M. of St. John's, 80, and Sangster, P.M. and P.P.G.P.; John Potts, P.M., Phoenix, 94, P.G.J.D.; Lord, W.M. of the Palatine, 97; Levy, P.M. and P.P.G.J.W. Reed, W.M.; and R. Candlish, P.M.; of the Fawcett Lodge, Seaham. At the annual festival, which was held in the evening, about 60 sat down, and did ample justice to Bro. Richardson's excellent dinner, and the evening was spent in the usual harmonious manner.

IRELAND.

BELFAST.—Hiram's Lodge, No. 97.—The regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held on Friday evening, 7th inst., in the Masonic Hall, Donegall-place, the W.M., Bro. McKenna, presiding. The lodge being opened in the E.A. degree, Mr. William Elliott Roberts, who proved fully prepared, received the degree of E.A. from Bro. Mooney. The election of officers was then proceeded with, the following brethren being elected:—Thomas Simpson, W.M.; Wm. Kerry, S.W.; W. White, J.W.; W. Murphy, Secretary; F. Henderson, Treasurer; W. McGladery, I.G.; Jno. Hampton, S.D.; James Maxwell, J.D.; Hugh McCormick and W. Graham, Stewards. No other business being before the lodge, it was closed in due form. The brethren then adjourned to the refreshment board, where the usual toasts were duly honoured.

MARK MASONRY.

IPSWICH.—Albert Victor Lodge, No. 70 of M.M., which meets quarterly, held their usual lodge 26th April, when three brethren belonging to lodges in the province were advanced. We find it is in contemplation to apply for a warrant to hold a M.M. Lodge in a neighbouring town, the Albert Victor being the only lodge in the province of Suffolk.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

IPSWICH.—Royal Plantagenet Encampment.—This Conclave having been called to the field of Encampment at their usual place of meeting, on Ascension Day, for the installation of officers for the ensuing year, who were elected at the last regular meeting, on the 19th April. After the usual preliminary business, Sir Kt. Henry Thomas, P.E.C. and Grand Standard-bearer, in an appropriate speech, presented the newly-elected E.C., Sir Kt. Francis Barnard Jennings, to the Installing Commander, Sir Kt. Sanderson, D.P.G. Com. for Suffolk, who in his usual excellent manner performed the ceremony. The Knights having been marshalled, a procession was formed, and Sir Kt. Jennings saluted in due form. The E.C. then appointed and invested his officers, and having thanked the Knights and Companions for the confidence they had reposed in him, by unanimously placing him at head-quarters in the East, the D.P.G.C. for and on behalf of the Provincial Grand Commander, Sir Kt. N. G. Philips, presented to the Encampment a very handsome baton, for the use of the E.C. Sir Kt. Jennings upon receiving the baton expressed the great pleasure he felt in being the first E.C. to wield the same, and that he should be wanting in his duty if he did not at once propose that the thanks of the Royal Plantagenet Encampment be voted to the P.G.C., for his very beautiful present, and that such vote be recorded on the minutes. The same having been seconded by the 1st Captain, was carried unanimously. There being no further business before the Encampment, it was closed in ancient form.

INSTALLATION MEETING OF MACDONALD LODGE, No. 1216.

The first annual Meeting of this lodge was held at the lodge-rooms, Head-quarters of the 1st Surrey Rifle Volunteers, Camberwell, on Wednesday evening, the 5th inst., and was exceedingly well-attended. The representatives of several corps, both regular and volunteer, were present, and their varied uniforms with the Masonic regalia of their several ranks in the Craft, contributed, together with the handsome appointments of the lodge, to form a most perfect and imposing ensemble. The Brethren present were:—Bros. Major A. L. Irvine, W.M.; James Stevens, P.M. and S.W.; P. de Keyser, J.W.; Dr. Eugene Cronin, Treas.; J. J. Curtis, Sec.; Ensign F. T. Dubois, S.D.; S. H. Wagstaffe, J.D.; G. H. N. Bridges, D.C.; G. Waterall, Steward; also Bros. T. Meggy, P.M., Jas. Vickers, P.M., J. H. Hastie, J. A. Patton, M. S. Larham, H. Puckle, H. Francis, H. Rassam (late prisoner in Abyssinia), T. W. Carnell, A. Fletcher, W. J. Messenger, D. Fournier, A. Kethro, C. Phare, G. England, jun., W. A. Willis, C. Fountain, W. H. Thomas, J. Allen, R. Plews, H. Hammond, &c.; also visiting brethren, Henry Bridges, P.G.S.B., D.P.G.M., Somerset; J. C. Fournier, P.G.J.W. North Wales, and P.M. of 2, 755, 1113, &c.; Major E. D. Smith, H.M. 95th Foot; S. Coghlan, 176; C. Hampton, 179; F. W. Bryant, &c., &c.

This being the Installation Meeting, and the highly-respected W.M. Bro. Major Major Irvine, having, at the earnest solicitation of his Wardens and the unanimous voice of the brethren, consented to serve the office for another year, the lodge was opened by Bro. Stevens P.M., the Senior Warden, in the several degrees, and prepared for the reception of the W.M. and Master elect; on whose arrival, for the due instruction of the newly-initiated brethren, and in accordance with the desire of all present, Bro. Stevens performed the Ceremony of Installation in full detail, and according to ancient custom, most impressively reciting the concluding addresses.

The W.M. reinvested his former officers, with the addition of Bros. Waterall, H. Puckle, and W. J. Messenger, to offices not previously filled up.

The report of the audit committee, which had been printed and sent to all members with a financial statement, was taken as read, and being of a most satisfactory character was unanimously received and adopted. We were favoured with a copy of this report, and its perusal gave us much pleasure, for through it we learnt that this fine lodge has been established on a firm basis, has had a first year of unparalleled prosperity, and has before it prospects of a most brilliant career. Commencing with eleven members as founders, it now numbers 49, of whom 23 are initiates and 16 joining members, and these are all members of the corps with which the lodge is connected. The lodge possesses furniture and appointments of a most recherché character and of great value, the principal portion of which have been donated by the individual members. Great ingenuity and taste have been displayed by the several donors to make the aggregate collection of gifts unique, and the result is perfect. With all our experience of lodges we know of none so thoroughly approaching perfection, whether in regard to appointments or, which is of more consequence, working, than the "Macdonald." We were also pleased to observe by the report that the Masonic charities had not been forgotten, stewards having either represented, or being about to represent, the lodge at each festival, and funds having been voted for life governorships.

After the adoption of the report, Bro. RASSAM (late of Abyssinia) proposed his former comrade in captivity, Dr. Henri Blanc, for initiation at the ensuing meeting (June 2nd), when a strong muster of the lodge may be anticipated. Bros. Major E. D. Smith, H.M. 95th Foot; Henry Bridges, P.G.S.B. and D.P.G.M., Somerset; and F. W. Bryant, were proposed as joining members.

Bro. STEVENS, S.W., then presented, for Bro. Larham and himself, three very handsome gavels made from portions of the wreck of H.M.S. Ferret, and which those Brethren had secured during the storm at Dover on Easter Monday last. Each gavel, bearing its appropriate emblem, is engraved with a record of the event, and together these implements will form an heirloom in the lodge which we trust will interest future generations of Masons.

The gift was accepted with cordial thanks.

The lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned to the large mess-room forming part of the head-quarters of the corps, where, under the arrangements of Bro. F. Gordon, of Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate, whose manager, Mr. Zoller, is butler to the corps, they partook of a banquet the only possible defect in which was the redundancy of service. The menu comprised every delicacy of the season, and the viands being served a la Russe, their full enjoyment by all was ensured. The loving cups, of which there were several, the tables being decorated with many of the superb silver tankards won by the marksmen who are members of the lodge, having circulated, the W.M. proposed the various toasts according to the handsome programme set before each brother present, the proceedings being varied by appropriate songs and accompaniments, under the direction of Bro. Weaver. "The Sovereign of the Realm, and the Sovereign of the Craft," having been duly remembered, the W.M. proposed the toast of "The Deputy Grand Master and past and present Grand Officers," to which

Bro. HENRY BRIDGES, P.G.S.B., D.P.G.M., Somerset, responded, expressing his great gratification at all he had heard and witnessed that evening, the best evidence of the sincerity of his remarks being given by his desire, although resident far distant from the metropolis, to associate himself with the Macdonald Lodge as a joining member. This he would certainly not do but that, both in the progress made by his nephew, newly initiated into Masonry, and already by merit advanced to office, and in the efficient manner in which the whole proceedings of the lodge were carried out, he felt assured that the genuine tenets and principles of Freemasonry were well understood and thoroughly practised by those who had the conduct and government of the lodge. He should therefore probably have many opportunities for observing the progress of the lodge with which he hoped to be connected as a member, and in the best interests of which he could not fail to be much concerned. On behalf of other grand officers present, and himself, he begged to return thanks for the toast so heartily accorded.

The W.M. proposed the initiates and joining members for the past half year, which was responded to in a very able manner by the latest initiate, Bro. CHARLES FOUNTAIN.

The W.M. then called the attention of the members of the lodge to the next toast, "The Visiting Brethren," and in very forcible language expressed the great gratification which it at all times gave the lodge to have the opportunity to welcome those who felt interested in its progress, or desired to see its working. During the past year, he said, many Masons of high standing in the Craft, had supported him by their valued presence; and he trusted that during the ensuing year he might have the pleasure to welcome very many more. On this occasion, he found on his right and on his left, members of the Craft of exalted rank and held in high estimation, not only for their social position and courteous demeanour, but chiefly for their Masonic ability. He was pleased to say that several of these brethren had privately expressed their opinions to him in respect of the lodge, and, being themselves well-skilled Masons, he felt the value of such opinions; and the praise they bestowed became, therefore, a still stronger incentive to increased efforts. So highly was this lodge thought of by the visitors present, that three of their number had expressed their desire to become joining members—a circumstance which spoke for itself in favour of the lodge, and he hoped that at an early date he should have the pleasure to address the D.P.G.M. for Somerset, Bro. Bridges; Bro. Major E. D. Smith; and Bro. Bryant, not as visitors, as now, but as members of the lodge. Meanwhile, he hoped the lodge would render them, in conjunction with the other esteemed visitors present, that honour which was their due; and, expressing his personal gratitude to them for the support they had given, and bidding them one and all a most hearty welcome, he desired that the brethren of the Macdonald Lodge, should, by the heartiness of their manner in drinking to this toast, endorse all he had said. He proposed "The Health of the Visiting Brethren," coupled with the name of Bro. J. C. Fourdrinier, P.G.J.W. for North Wales. (It is almost needless to say that the W.M.'s request was complied with in a most enthusiastic manner.)

Bro. C. J. FOURDRINIER, in responding, expressed on behalf of his brother visitors and himself his unbounded delight in observing the true Masonic spirit which appeared to be infused into every detail connected with the "Macdonald Lodge." He felt himself at a loss to give full expression to all he thought, for he feared that the praise he could not do otherwise than bestow would appear excess of flattery, and that should be avoided. He could not, however, resist saying that during six and thirty years of active Masonry, he had never seen anything so nearly approaching perfect order and perfect working as he had on this occasion. For this they might take an old man's word, given seriously and sincerely. The labour in the lodge, and the refreshment after, left nothing to be desired, and he could but hope, that the progress already made might continue. He asked his brother visitors to join with him in drinking "Prosperity to the Macdonald Lodge," a request with which they heartily complied.

Bro. THOS. MEGAY, P.M. and Grand Steward, said: Brethren, I have now, in my position as acting Past Master of this lodge, to call your attention to a toast which I am certain will be most cordially received by you. During the past year you have been presided over by a Brother, whose qualifications are such, both in respect of position and ability, as can leave nothing to be desired. Under his genial sway the success of the lodge during the first year of its establishment has been beyond our very utmost expectations, and there is considerable promise that this success may be further continued. Your Wardens, having the welfare of the lodge more at heart than their own personal ambition, have counselled us to continue the Mastership of the Past year for yet another, and our unanimous vote has been in accordance with that counsel. For my part I can but express my belief that the re-appointment of our W.M. has been well-deserved, and I have therefore considerable pleasure in proposing his health on this occasion, both as the first P.M., and the present W.M. of the lodge. Worshipful Master, I take this opportunity to discharge a pleasing duty entrusted to me by the members of your lodge, and to confer on you that distinction which you have so ably earned. This jewel will, I trust, be considered by you an evidence of the great esteem they entertain for you, and which I fear I have but feebly expressed. If a consciousness of its having been well-deserved will add to its worth, you may fairly entertain that emotion within the breast which we trust this emblem of merit may adorn for many years to come. Brethren, I propose to you "The health of Bro. Major A. L. Irvine, our Worshipful Master." (The toast was drunk with acclamation.)

The WORSHIPFUL MASTER, in returning thanks, expressed his deep sense of the honour conferred upon him by his re-appointment, and urged upon the members a continuance of those efforts which had resulted in the perfect establishment of the "Macdonald Lodge." Its repute was even now, when only one year of its existence had passed away, of no small moment, and he was certain that each succeeding year would increase it. He entertained a high regard for all the willing service which had been rendered by the members generally, and could not let this opportunity pass by without placing on record the self-denial of his brother wardens and officers in sacrificing their own advancement to higher positions under the conviction that the best interests of the lodge generally would thereby be best promoted. His senior warden, who had originated the lodge, waived that position to which the founders would have named him in the charter,—had solicited his acceptance of the Master's office during the first year, and had again repeated his desire, supported by the members, that he should continue the office for a further period. But that he felt convinced the brethren were of opinion that his continuance would strengthen the position of the lodge, he could not have consented to impede the advancement of officers according to usual rota. He thanked them sincerely for the confidence reposed in him, and also for the testimony of satisfaction with his endeavours hitherto which he now had the gratification to wear; and he assured his brethren that no efforts should be wanting on his part to uphold the dignity and promote the honour and reputation of his lodge.

The W.M. then proposed "The health of Bro. James Stevens, P.M. and S.W., the Installing Master." To the observations which had already fallen from him he desired, in proposing this toast, to add his personal testimony to the energy and zeal of that brother, to whose continued attention to the arrangements for both labour and refreshment much of the success attained must be attributed. Bro. Stevens was, fortunately for the lodge, able to devote a little more time than his (the W.M.'s) engagements would permit him to give, and at all times he had been enabled to rely upon the ready thoughtfulness and willing assistance of his S.W. in respect of all matters which required previous arrangement. He had now to speak of Bro. Stevens in another capacity, that of Installing Master, and he could but refer all present to the evidence given in the lodge of his extreme efficiency in the performance of that lengthy ceremony, an efficiency which, although the task had been then undertaken by that brother for the first time, had called forth the eulogium of many old Past Masters present as being perfect in all respects, and a complete testimony of Masonic ability. For his services on this occasion especially, as well as in regard to his assistance at all other times, he called upon the brethren to the health of Bro. Stevens with all Masonic honours.

Bro. STEVENS, in a brief speech, returned thanks or the honour conferred, expressing his sincere desire for the continued prosperity of the lodge, and his satisfaction that whatever abilities he might have, or assistance he had rendered, should meet with so much appreciation from those with whom he was associated.

The W.M. then proposed "The health of the Officers of the Lodge," making special mention of each, and eulogising their several efforts to promote the harmony and good order of the lodge.

Bro. P. DE KEYSER, J.W., on behalf of the officers, replied, endorsing the best wishes of the previous speakers on behalf of the lodge.

The several toasts of "The Macdonald Lodge or Improvement," "The Masonic Charities," and "All poor and distressed Brethren," were given and responded to in speeches which, owing to the lateness of the hour, were necessarily brief; and after the interchange of mutual congratulations upon the success of the meeting, and the great interest which had been manifested in the proceedings throughout, the brethren separated fully carrying out the sentiments of our Masonic refrain, "Happy to meet, sorry to part, happy to meet again."

LONDON GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT COMPANY.

We observe with pleasure that a company has been formed specially for the transaction of "Guarantee" and "Accident" business, branches of insurance which are not only the safest but the most remunerative in their working and results. From the high character of the directors, and the energy of Mr. Laughton Anderson, the secretary, we anticipate a great success for the new company. The field of operations is most extensive, and requires only energy and perseverance to bear ample fruit. From the Prospectus we gather "that one office, transacting Accident business only, has, after having accumulated a very large reserve fund, just divided among its shareholders, in respect of the year 1868 alone, no less than 60 per cent. on its original capital, and its shares are sought after at a premium of eight hundred per cent." This is certainly a most encouraging prospect for the shareholders of the "London Guarantee and Accident Company," whose offices are at 8A, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall, S.W.

PRESENTATION.—Mrs. D. Martin, wife of Past Master Martin, of Hibernia Lodge, Saint John's New Brunswick, F. & A.M., was, lately made the recipient of a handsome silver tea service, the gift of members of the Lodge. The presentation ceremonies were very pleasing. A delegation of about twelve of the members waited upon Mr. and Mrs. Martin, and were formally introduced by Past Master Mullin, who said that the object of their gathering was to present Mrs. Martin with the service in testimony of their appreciation of her husband's worth as a man, and particularly because of his efficient discharge of the duties of the Chair in Hibernia Lodge in the year that is past. The presentation was formally made by Mr. Johnston, the Master of the Lodge, and an address on parchment was read to Mr. Martin by Mr. W. J. Logan, the Senior Warden of the Lodge. An inscription on the service setting forth the object of the presentation, is engraved in Mr. Venning's best style. After the formal portion of the ceremony was over, the company were hospitably and happily entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Martin, and a most delightful evening sped rapidly away.—St. John's Globe.

PRESENTATION TO BRO. SPRATT.—On Wednesday night last a supper was given at the Rosemary Branch Tavern, Hoxton, by the members of the New Concord Lodge of Instruction, to present their worthy Secretary, Bro. Spratt, with a testimonial. Bro. J. Emmens, P.M., and Grand Officer, in the Chair, who was supported by the present W.M., J. Hart, P.M.; Boyce, P.M.; Main, P.M.; Peller Preceptor; Bro. Capt. Taylor, and Bro. E. A. Masterman, of the Old Concord Lodge, 172; and about 40 others, including members of the Lodge referred to. The Chairman gave the customary loyal toasts, with those of the Earl of Zetland, Grand Master, Earl de Grey and Ripon, D.G. Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers; and then introduced the toast of the evening, viz., their Secretary, Bro. Spratt, which speech our limits preclude us giving in extenso; but it was throughout received with every demonstration of approval by the company. The Chairman especially referred to the many years Bro. Spratt had so assiduously attended to their interests, not missing a night's attendance, and during his secretaryship no less than £45 had been collected and distributed amongst the Masonic Charities, which for a Lodge of Instruction was highly creditable. He could assure Bro. Spratt that he was held in the highest esteem and respect by all, and he was sure that his brethren had cheerfully subscribed the token he now presented—a handsome gold watch, which he (the Chairman) trusted his worthy and excellent brother might live many years to regard as a token of the esteem of his brethren. Bro. Spratt returned thanks in a very grateful and earnest speech, and after the toasts to the Chairman, the W.M. of the New Concord Lodge, and Visiting Brethren had been given, the meeting closed, all having spent a very rational and agreeable evening, great credit being due to Bro. Gabb for the excellent manner in which he contributed towards the comfort of the brethren on this and many former occasions.

Answers to Correspondents.

T. C. J.—Your object being a very praiseworthy one, you cannot do better than make an appeal to the Craft for aid. Judging from experience, however, we think your chief reliance must be placed in the support of energetic brethren in your own province and neighbourhood.

We are sorry that pressure of matter obliges us to defer the continuation of Bro. Emra Holme's tale, and other interesting communications.

THE PATHS OF VIRTUE AND SCIENCE.

It is a trite saying that the familiar sinks into the unheeded; hence it is that words pregnant with meaning, and full of the grandest significance, become, through the force of mere repetition, a monotone, a formalism, and a sham. All of us are more or less impressed with this truth, which is the child of experience; we can each bear testimony to its pernicious effects in the history of the human heart, which ever yearns after something new and strange, forgetting the potentiality which resides in the accumulated wisdom of ages.

It is not our province to define the nature of that virtue which all true Freemasons should cultivate; it is not for us to describe the transcendent lustre of that moral light which is the good man's guardian and guide; but in the belief that the primitive work of Freemasonry is greatly overlooked by the brethren at the present day, we will briefly consider the paths of science in which all Freemasons are invited and expected to tread. We are told by a great poet that "the proper study of mankind is man," but in thus acquiring a generic knowledge of our kind, let us not sink the individual in the species, but analyze our own hearts and learn the mysteries of our own being. Now, this is precisely the science of which we take less heed than of any other—it being the tendency of men's minds in the present generation to ignore all self-knowledge, and to cast themselves blindly upon the stream of events, guided by the floating straws which indicate the current; or, in other words, by the fantasies of the passing moment. Was Burke right when he said, "The age of chivalry is over," and must we indeed resign ourselves to the gradual effacement of all that is pure and noble, because the song of the troubadour has ceased, and the knightly lance is for ever laid "in rest?" No! The records of departed greatness still remain, and the glories of those mediæval centuries still haunt the souls of the world's unacknowledged legislators.

It is, unquestionably, the mission of Freemasonry, to nourish those lofty conceptions which have given birth to the imperishable sentiments of honour, of virtue, and of true religion; it is her mission to reveal to her children the wonders of that psychological science, whose operations, though unseen, are as marvellous as the greatest triumphs of the natural sciences. It is for her to interpose the rock of eternal truth to the torrent of rationalism, of positivism, and of infidelity.

No greater barrier can be erected against the inroads of materialistic philosophy than an institution like Freemasonry, which appeals to every human sympathy, brightens every human hope, and is identified with the cause of our common humanity; while, at the same time, it points with steady finger to the source of all light and power. It is true that the teachings of the Order are often misinterpreted, and oftener, through familiarity, lose their original importance; but it is time that Freemasons awoke to the necessity of studying the whole system of the Craft, not merely as an abstract symbolism, but as a tangible reality—not as a vulgar mystery, but as a mirror in which to read their own hearts, and as a volume in which to seek the solution of those doubts and difficulties which beset every earnest thinker.

To do this, we must ponder well the language of Freemasonry, and thoroughly comprehend its signification. The wealth of wisdom couched in its every phrase will then become apparent, like the revelation of a new and radiant world; and unless we thus follow our celestial guide, we cannot be said to walk in the paths of virtue and science.

PAST MASTERS AS PRECEPTORS.

THE importance of the subject induces us again to urge upon all who value the well-being of the Craft how desirable it will be to strengthen the hands of those brethren who are labouring to effect an uniform system of working the Craft ceremonies. All old Masons, when appealed to, acknowledge the evils arising out of the present varying modes, but few seem inclined to help when a practicable remedy is suggested. If brethren who coincide with Bro. Stevens' views on the subject of "Past Masters as Preceptors," will signify their adhesion, by letter or otherwise, as speedily as possible, they will aid the good work and encourage those who may be able to attend the proposed Conference in the discussion of suitable remedial measures. Nothing will be accomplished without effort, earnestness, and perseverance.

THE ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

The eighty-first Anniversary Festival of this Institution was held on Wednesday evening at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-Inn-fields. The Right Hon. the Lord Leigh, Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master for Warwickshire, in the chair.

On the Friday previous it was arranged that his Lordship should visit the School at Battersea-rise, that day being appointed for the annual visit of the Stewards. His Lordship, however, was unable to be present, and his place was taken by Bro. Benjamin Head, P.G.D., and V.P. of the Institution. This yearly visit, which, although called "the Stewards' visit to the Institution," is really open to the whole Craft and the ladies of their families, is the most delightful of all the Masonic entertainments. Being held in that month of the year which is suggestive of youth and joyousness, and especially of feminine youth and joyousness, it does not compel the visitors to stay within doors, but gives them the opportunity of walking in the lovely grounds (which are part of the provision for the children's health) and enjoying a sight of herbiage and foliage so agreeable at all times to the London slave. Therefore, whenever the year, in its rolling, brings about the time for the Stewards' visit to the Girls' School, the attendance of visitors is sure to be large; and although the programme admits of very little change, however numerous may be the people who attend for the first time, the old faces are found there year after year, entering with the same zest into the entertainments provided, as if to them it were a perfect novelty. The reason for this, no doubt, is that, having seen the building from the laying of its first stone, and contributed largely towards the attainment of its present proportions, they look on it with just pride as a child of their own, which grows nearer to perfection every day.

The company assembled on that day numbered nearly 300, amongst whom were Bros. Benjn. Head, John M. Clabon, John Udall, H. Empson, W. Paas, Raynham W. Stewart, W. Farnfield, Wm. Winn, Geo. Cox, Edw. Cox, J. G. Chancellor, Dr. Barringer, A. J. Pritchard, Charles Lacy, John Hart, W.M. (No. 813); James W. Avery, P.M. (No. 619); F. Binckes, E. H. Patten, P.G.S.B.; H. Muggeridge, W. H. Warr, A. H. Hewitt, H. J. Thompson, James Terry, P.M. (No. 228); S. C. Hadley, W.M. (No. 65); H. Dicketts, W.M. (No. 25); W. Young, P.G.S.B.; Joshua Nunn, G.S.B.; Frank Elmore, F. H. Ebsworth, Rev. C. Woodward, Chaplain; George King, W.M. (No. 172); F. Walters, P.M. (No. 73); J. H. Wynne, P.M. (No. 101); C. Marshall, P.M. (No. 22); Alfred Pratt, P.M. (No. 22); H. Thompson (No. 177); Chas. G. Thompson (No. 1158, 117); and Massey, W.M., Beadon Lodge.

The programme for the day was divided into five or six parts, and commenced with some pianoforte playing and part songs by thirty of the pupils. To these succeeded recitations by six of the little girls—E. Hutchinson, E. Henty, A. Winter, A. M. Dickens, F. Redgrave, and E. Redgrave,—and Lord Leigh afterwards distributed the following prizes to the fortunate winners:—Bro. William Paas's gold medal and Bro. W. Winn's Canonbury prize of three guineas, for general proficiency, to Edith G. Collis; the Institution silver medal and Bro. W. Winn's Canterbury prize of two guineas, for good conduct, to Ada Fanny Triggs; the Institution's prize, for passing in honours at the Cambridge Examination, and for passing at the same Examination, to E. G. Collis, A. F. Triggs, E. Redgrave, E. L. Winter, J. A. Rumbow, and E. G. Baxter; for French, to Florence Redgrave and Eliza Hutchinson; for music, to M. A. J. Stevens and M. Burditt; for writing and map drawing, to E. H. Stopher; for general usefulness, to F. M. Feast and E. H. Banks; for order and neatness, to E. S. Woolnough; for needlework, to E. Henderson and A. A. Smith; and for general proficiency, to Kate Tappolet, Eliza Clarke, and Lucy Caparn. Brother John M. Clabon's prize was awarded to H. A. M. Jordan and C. L. Dickens. A prize, the gift of Henry F. Bowker, Esq., for religious knowledge distinguished at the Cambridge examination, was given to Emily Redgrave and E. G. Collis; and Bro. P. H. E. Brette's, for French, to Ada Fanny Triggs. Other prizes for dictation were given by Bro. Raynham W. Stewart, to M. S. Gillard, M. F. Wood, H. Thorpe, and C. B. Fletcher; by Mrs. Peckett, for music, to E. Redgrave; by Mrs. Brette, for music, to E. S. Saunders; by Mrs. Crick, for elocution, to A. M. Dickens and A. G. Winter; by Bro. Joseph Starkey, for drawing, to E. G. Collis; and by W. Maitland, Esq., for calisthenics, to Ellen B. Henty.

The company then sat down to a meat tea, provided by the committee. The girls afterwards went through their calisthenic exercises, and dancing terminated the proceedings.

The festival took place under favourable auspices on Wednesday last, when there were present, amongst others: Bros. John Hervey, Grand Sec.; John Emmens, Past Grand Purst.; Peter Matthews, Hon. Dentist to the Institution, and P.M. and Treas. of the Fitzroy Lodge; Robt. J. Chappell, J.D. No. 7; Major Gen. Gore Munbee, St. Kew Lodge, 1,222; Moore, 1,155; Bolton, 169; W. Holland; John Udall; Rev. R. J. Simpson, Past Grand Chaplain; Stephen Blair; F. Binckes, Secretary of Boys' School; Rev. J. Huyshe; H. Empson; Samuel Tomkins; Rev. C. Woodward; Fenn; Geo. Cox, P.G. Deacon; Bradford; G. W. K. Potter; R. J. Spiers; D. Jacobs, P.M., 27; R. J. Chappell, J.D. 7; John Hart, W.M., 813; Benj. Head; W. H. Warr; W. Paas; R. M. Stewart, W.M., 12; Chas. Cote, P.M., 205; Hyde Pullen; Dr. Barringer, P.M., 154, Surgeon to the Institution; L. C. Hall, 10; Dr. F. E. Wilkinson, P.M., 181; F. H. Ebsworth, W.M., 1,178; James Ellis, L. Hirsch, 861; W. Billington, 871; C. Pawley, 33; J. Swain, 55; Driver; Thomas Meggy, Fitzroy Lodge; E. H. Patten, Sec. of the Institution; Crossley; R. W. Little, P.M., Rose of Denmark; Geo. Kenning, of THE FREEMASON; Buss, P.M., 27; C. Jacques, Southern Star, 1,153; Pendlebury, P.M., 1,056; Henry Muggeridge, P. M., &c.; Har-1056; Boyce, P.M., 813; Crabb, 813; Captain Field, P.M., 569; J. Stevens, Domestic Lodge, 177; Dr. O'Connor; Massey, W.M., Beadon; F. Walters, P.M. of several lodges; Farnfield, P.M. and Sec. of Constitutional Lodge; G. Bolton, 147, P.M.; N. Wingfield, 169; H. Thompson, 177; W. Massey, W.M. Beadon; and Chas. E. Thompson, 1,158 and 177.

The cloth having been drawn, grace, "For these and all the mercies given," was sung by the professional singers, who were led by Bro. Ganz.

The PRESIDENT proposed the health of Her Majesty the Queen, he said: Brethren, the first toast I have to propose is always most enthusiastically received on all public occasions in this country, I therefore give you with all sincerity "The Health of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and long life to her." The Queen is loved by all her subjects, and I am quite sure by none more so than the Freemasons. She is a good Queen, and although she is not a supporter of the Girls' School, she is a liberal contributor to the Boys' Institution.

The National Anthem followed, the solo parts being sung by Madame Liebhart.

The next toast on the list was that of "Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the other members of the Royal Family." The President said the Prince of Wales appeared to take great interest in the charitable Institutions, and he hoped he would follow in the footsteps of his illustrious parent. He believed no subject had seen so much of the world as His Royal Highness. He had lately visited the Sultan of Egypt, where he had been received in a most magnificent manner (hear, hear,) and which they as Masons were glad to hear, because it tended to promote that fraternity of feeling which should exist between nations. (Hear, hear.) It was well-known that his brother-in-law was a Mason, and it had been whispered—he did not know how true it was—that His Royal Highness was a Mason, but if he was he would come forward and support the charities as his royal predecessors had done. This, as well as the former toast, was received with applause.

Duet, Miss Fanny Holland and Miss Fairman—"I know a Bank."

The CHAIRMAN said he had pleasure, very great pleasure, in proposing the next toast. It was first in regard to the Masonic toasts in the list, and it was one he was sure would meet with hearty approval at their hands. It was no less a toast than that of the "Health of the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master of Masons." Lord Zetland had now ruled over them for more than a quarter of a century, and during that time Freemasonry, and especially the charities, had flourished in a remarkable degree. He was glad to hear the subscriptions to the Zetland Commemoration were likely to amount to a large sum, and that his lordship had expressed a wish like a true Mason, that it should be devoted to some charitable object. The other day he visited the Girls' School, and while speaking to the matron he mentioned the name of Lord Zetland and she said she hoped he might live to be Grand Master over the Freemasons for many years; and that, he was sure, was the wish of every brother present. (Hear, hear.) He gave them with great pleasure "The Health of the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Zetland, Patron and President of the Institution. (Loud cheers.) The toast was enthusiastically responded to.

The PRESIDENT proposed "The Right Worshipful the Deputy Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, and the rest of the Grand Officers, past and present."

The Rev. J. R. SIMPSON returned thanks on behalf of the Grand Officers past and present. He said he never had more pleasure in attending a Masonic gathering than he had on this occasion. He alluded to the Zetland Commemoration Fund, and said he hoped it would amount to a very large sum.

The Rev. J. HYSHE proposed the health of the Chairman of the day, the Rt. Hon. Lord Leigh, with thanks for his attendance.

The NOBLE CHAIRMAN returned thanks for the too flattering manner in which his Right Worshipful Brother had spoken of him. He also thanked the brethren for the cordial manner in which they had received him. Nothing gave him greater pleasure than to promote Freemasonry—(hear, hear)—to its fullest extent; and therefore he had, in conjunction with the brethren of the Province of Warwickshire, undertaken to preside over the meeting that day. He then proceeded to the next toast, which was, "Success to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, and the healths of the Treasurer, Bro. S. Tomkins, and Bro. Benj. Bond Campbell, the late Treasurer for thirty years." He said they were very properly proud of their charitable institutions, and the Girls' School, whose anniversary they were met that day to celebrate, was most deserving of the support of every member of the Craft. About nine years ago, at the request of their able, courteous, and energetic Secretary, Bro. E. H. Patten, he had presided at their anniversary festival, and therefore he felt some reluctance again to take the chair this year, as he was afraid that the brethren of his own province would consider he was coming before them too often in asking them to again support him. He had filled the chair successively at the festivals for the three Masonic Institutions, and he thought to come again would be taxing their pockets too much; but when he remembered they had several Warwickshire children in the school who cost the Charity not less than £200 per year, and the Province of Warwickshire did not contribute more than a fourth of that sum, he could not refuse to again come forward and take the chair, if by his doing so he could in any way promote the interests of that great institution. He was glad to see so large a body of Warwickshire brethren present, as it bore testimony to him, as Provincial Grand Master, that he had not taken a false step. He would not then go into details as to the history of the school; but for the information of the brethren and the ladies who might not be aware of it, he would say that the school was established in 1788—81 years ago,—and that it was supported by voluntary subscriptions, with the exception of about £150 annually voted by the Grand Lodge, and during the time it had been established, children had been clothed and educated, and where they had no friends they were provided with situations suitable to their rank. Where they had friends they returned to them. The school was first established at St. George's Fields, but it had since been removed to a more airy and healthy situation, and yesterday he visited the school and when he saw the children's happy rosy faces there gathered together, it gave him peculiar satisfaction. In company with his esteemed friend Bro. Patten, the Secretary, he visited the school, and he could not help saying he never visited any public institution with more sincere pleasure. He heard the girls sing, play on the piano, and recite pieces, and beyond that, he saw them go through their drill under the direction of their skilled and esteemed mistress, Miss Davis (loud cheers), in a manner which would do credit even to the famed City of London Rifle Volunteers (looking at the members of the Hon. Artillery Company, who, besides the regalia of the Craft appeared in the uniform of the regiment). There were in the school 106 children, of whom 100 were placed there by election, and six by purchase. They were all clothed, educated, and trained in the performance of useful and domestic duties, and he could bear his testimony to the excellent manner in which the School was conducted by Miss Forward and the excellent mistress, Miss Davis, and he hoped they would long retain their services for the benefit of the Institution. He gave them with great sincerity, "Success to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls," coupled with the names of Bros. Cabbell and Tomkins. (The toast was admirably received.)

Bro. TOMKINS returned thanks, and expressed his deep interest in the Institution.

Bro. PATTEN, the Secretary of the Institution, and P.G.S.B., then proceeded to read the list of subscriptions, and at the mention of the larger sums there was much applause.

The following are the principal items quoted:—Major-General Munbee, 7l. 10s.; John Donkin, 17l. 1s.; Major John Machen, D.R.G.M., Warwickshire, 117l. 12s., including Lord Leigh; Cooke, 22l.; J. Saunders, Royal York, Brighton, 66l. 3s.; Hassell, 20l.; Head (his 5th donation himself of 10l. 10s.), 77l.; Maybury Lodge, 52l. 10s.; Archer, 10l. 10s.; R. W. Stewart, 31l. 10s. The total amount is 4053l., with 26 lists to come in.

Bro. Secretary PATTEN subsequently announced that he had had another ten guineas given to him. (Hear, hear.)

The NOBLE CHAIRMAN gave the next toast which was "The Provincial Grand Masters and Grand Officers, coupled with the name of Bro. Stephen Blair, Provincial Grand Master for East Lancashire, and for which Bro. Blair returned thanks.

Br. UDALL, P.G.D., proposed "The other Masonic Charities, and success to them." They were, the Masonic Institution for Boys, and the Masonic Benevolent Institution for aged Freemasons and their Widows—coupled with the names of Bro. Binckes and Farnfield to which Bro. Binckes responded.

The "Stewards" acknowledged by Bro. Head, and "the Ladies," brought an interesting evening to a close.

THE MASONIC CHARITIES.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Under this heading a series of questions are strung together by your correspondent, "Quidnunc," in THE FREEMASON of the 1st inst., which appear to me to be couched in an unfair spirit towards Bro. Binckes, the secretary of the Boys' School. As one of the so-called "Governors" or general committee who voted the sums stated by "Quidnunc," permit me to say that Bro. Binckes' salary is not really increased, as he will now relinquish all claim to commission upon receiving £400 per annum, £200 of which is granted as a special gratuity for his unparalleled exertions to ensure the success of the last festival, and therefore there is a valid reason "why the other secretaries should not be placed in a similar position."

If Bro. Binckes were not allowed travelling expenses, many brethren in distant parts of the country would remain ignorant of the Boys' Institution, and the school would lose more pounds in this way than it will shillings by defraying necessary expenses. Hoping some better qualified brethren may answer "Quidnunc,"

I am, &c.,

SENEX.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—"Quidnunc" has sounded a trumpet which will reverberate through the length and breadth of the land.

Is it to be credited that the office expenses of our charities, whose normal income from the subscriptions of brethren is about £12,000 per annum, are to be increased, as hinted by "Quidnunc" in his 7th query, to something like £2000 per annum, or one-sixth of the gross sum received? Surely this cannot be, or else a moral blindness must have overspread the Craft.

I for one at once avow that I do not grudge Bro. Binckes one farthing of any amount awarded him in recognition of great and special services; but there the committee ought to have stopped. They have no right to saddle an institution just shaking off a load of debt with another permanent incubus, and if persisted in, their resolution will have a sad effect upon the school itself. This is an age of enquiry; and if a system cannot bear the light of discussion, too surely will it crumble into dust.

I know that strong expressions of dissatisfaction have been vented in reference to the recent proceedings; but finding that remonstrance is in vain, brethren will shrug their shoulders and say, "It can't be helped;" but their guineas will not be so readily forthcoming in future, until they are better satisfied with the disposal of the funds.

I am, yours fraternally,

ONE WHOSE GUINEAS ARE SCARCE.

THISTLES LODGE, GLASGOW.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—My attention has been directed to an absurd notification of a supper in connection with the Glasgow Thistle Lodge, No. 87, as given at the bottom of the last column of the 4th page of your imprint of the 24th ult. The brethren who have so imposed upon your editorial vigilance and Masonic discernment are too well known in this province for their peculiar proclivities and love of discord, and doubtless their absence on the occasion referred to was conducive to that harmony for which, even in their capricious and gratuitous communication to you, they give the entertainment credit. Apparently they could not find an exponent of their malice in the local press, which courteously gave publicity to the event, so really they must be excused for skulking all the way to London for an innocent vehicle for their spleen. Let us in all charity forgive them, knowing they could not help it, for 'tis their nature; so

"Lightly tread, 'tis hallowed ground;

No farther seek their merits to disclose,

Or draw their frailties from their dread abode."

The fact is, Bro. Editor, that a complimentary supper was given by the S.W. of the Thistle Lodge to the office-bearers and others, the only stipulation being that sixpence per guest should be levied as an offering to the old and incapacitated Tyler; and it is pleasant to have to state that, after enjoying a most social evening, the brethren were enabled to send something home to gladden the heart of Bro. Robert Walker. Craving an insertion of this letter in your first issue, and hoping your journal may long flourish as a medium of promoting and maintaining concord and true Masonic sentiment, as well as practice, amongst brethren,

I am, yours fraternally,

WM. LAWSON, Sec., Thistle, No. 87.

CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have read with much interest the letters in THE FREEMASON upon the above degree; but I question if the formality called "Chairing" in the Scotch three-step lodges is a distinct degree at all. I received it as part of the M.M. degree, and have bestowed it as such often since. The obligation proves that a M.M. is entitled to receive it, without relation of his election to the chair of the lodge, although election to the latter is now the only way that a M.M. is entitled to receive it, in shape of installation, according to Grand Lodge laws. I am of opinion that the Grand Lodge of Scotland has allowed itself to be cozened out of this by the R.A.C. in its scramble for degrees, and that chairing belongs as much to the M.M. degree as the Mark does to the F.C. The new mode of "Chairing" may be renovated Masonry, but is certainly not the Masonry practised by our forefathers, and if correct as I saw it performed lately in my lodge, is little better than a farce, and is diametrically opposed to the first principles of Masonry.

Yours fraternally,

R. CRAIG, P.M. of St. John's, 157.
Beith, May 8th, 1869.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—IN THE FREEMASON of April 3, p. 5, and again of April 24th, p. 9, I made some remarks upon the above subject which do not seem to please "Amami." Neither does he seem to fully understand some of them; because, as I suppose, he has not read them carefully. However, I shall try to give him a little "more light" upon the subject. English Masons practise a ceremony connected with Blue Masonry, which is conducted in what is called a "Board of Installed Masters," said ceremony being over and above the three degrees. Therefore I hold that if English Masons do so, Scottish Masons may also practise something similar if they choose. However, we need not speculate at all upon the subject, for the case of a lodge working the ceremony of the chair was brought up before the Grand Lodge of Scotland; and turning to Laurie's History, pages 422 and 423, we read as follows:—"In modern times it has been the practice of many of the Royal Arch Chapters to give the Mark Master's and Chair Master's Ceremonial as separate Degrees, classing them after the Master's Degree; this is contrary to the practice of the Ancient Craft Lodges, who class the former with the Fellow-craft, and the latter with the Master Mason Degree. Dr. Oliver, in referring to the Mark Master, in his Landmarks, remarks, 'that this is usually classed after the Master's Degree, but in strict propriety it ought to precede it, for the Mark Master is but the Master of a Lodge of Fellow-crafts.'" (It will be understood I differ from Dr. Oliver on some points; my remarks show where). "This difference of opinion was decided by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, in so far as it affected the lodges under her jurisdiction, at the Quarterly Communication held in November, 1858. On that occasion a representation was made by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Glasgow that the Lodge of Glasgow, St. John, was practising the Mark and Chair Master Degrees; which degrees, said the memorialists, were neither recognised nor practised by the Grand Lodge of Scotland. In defence it was alleged that the Lodge of Glasgow, St. John, did not recognise them as separate degrees, but as portions of the Fellow-craft and Master's degrees"—(I did not call it a separate degree, but "the chair," or "chairing," or "a sort of side degree." The reasoning of the Grand Lodge of Scotland and mine are somewhat different, but our conclusions are the same, viz., to keep up the chair),—"sanctioned by the laws and constitutions of the Grand Lodge. After mature deliberation, the Grand Lodge, without a division, found that the Lodge of Glasgow St. John was in perfect order, and dismissed the complaint."

I know that Royal Arch Masons are rather sore upon this point; but I cannot help that; they wish to keep the Mark and the Chair to themselves, but you see the Grand Lodge of Scotland says no! The Royal Arch may keep all its other points, lights, secrets, &c., to itself, but not the Mark and Chair, for the working of them on the Blue, the Grand Lodge of Scotland says, "was in perfect order!" Just think of that, Bro. "Amami"—wasn't that too bad of the Grand Lodge—casting aside your suggestion too, as given at page 9 of THE FREEMASON for April 17th—"Let Grand Lodge make an example by suspending lodges working those degrees, then farewell to Chair on the Blue." Too bad! Of course if any lodges practise other Royal Arch degrees, or make Knights Templar, &c. (neither of which I ever saw done), I have no objection that they should be suspended, if you like, when they unwarrantably practise such tomfoolery. In THE FREEMASON for April 24th, page 9, I spoke of old Scottish lodges (many of which as operative Masonic Lodges existed long before A.D. 1700, and which in process of time gradually were turned into the Free-masonic Lodges), whose "Fellow-crafts got their Marks recorded in their books long before the Royal Arch was born, and whose master, when elected, filled the chair long before the Royal Arch was ever heard of. Your Royal Arch ideas are a new creation, merely of last century, whereas we were in existence long before."

"Filled the chair," that is, sat in the chair, and discharged the duties belonging to the office of a Master. Thus the "chairing" of the Master or Deacon, and the office of Master was in existence long before the Master Mason degree. When the new Master was formerly elected he was placed in his chair, and had to "pay off" to the whole lodge assembled, while the members no doubt paid him due honour. The chairing not taking place as now in England, merely before those who had previously held the office of Master, but before the whole lodge, consequently the Scottish brethren seem to have in this respect kept nearer the "old landmarks." The practice of "chairing" may have existed in the old operative lodges for above four centuries back, although not exactly under the same circumstances, or with precisely the same ceremony, as now.

If I have committed any mistakes in the above or former remarks, I shall be most happy to acknowledge them when pointed out to me, or when proved to be such, my only object being to give or receive "more light."

I am, yours fraternally,

LEO.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—"Amami" asks what I "think of the Masonry that existed at the building of Solomon's Temple?" in answer to which I can tell him, that I consider there was nothing extraordinary about it; and I believe it was "possibly excelled by other co-existent structures." And as for its size it was undoubtedly much smaller than many of the noble buildings which existed among the neighbouring nations. As a temple of architecture Solomon's Temple, per se, had, in comparison with other then extant productions, nothing to boast of. We have been too apt "to forget that the great glory of Solomon's Temple did not consist in its structure, but in its worship, and the ideas connected therewith."

One circumstance about the site of Solomon's Temple has been an altogether unnecessary matter of wonder, viz., the high wall or dyke which the nature of the ground rendered it necessary to build up, so as to enlarge the area as required for the foundations of the intended building. Now, what people can see extraordinary about a high plain wall I know not. Give any common sensible mason a sufficient foundation, and money to pay the expense, and he could easily put up a wall twice as high as Solomon's.

There is a hundred times more architectural skill, or knowledge, ability, or brain-work, required and displayed in the structure of one of our still extant old Gothic Cathedrals, with their beautiful high spires, &c., &c., than in ten Solomon's Temples. While saying so I trust I shall not be misunderstood, for, at the same time I assert that for many important reasons the excavations now going on at Jerusalem deserve to be viewed with great interest by all, especially Christians and Bible-readers, there being more in it than the mere shape or size of the stones; therefore all Christian churches and Masonic lodges ought to contribute to the exploration fund.

As a specimen of architecture, that Petit Temple, or pretty little Temple of Solomon's, might now, comparatively speaking, be almost called a "Nehushtan." Why, it might be set down in one of our large cathedrals, and take up no more room relatively than a common handbox (or hat-box) inside a large chest. Or to compare Solomon's Temple to some of the pre-Christian Grecian edifices would be to liken some of our modern classic church abortions (steeple! and all included) to the Parthenon.

I hope that Bro. "Amami" will be satisfied with my opinion "of the Masonry that existed at the building of Solomon's Temple." It may be new to him; but he would do well to think over it before he says much about it. And as for any "Freemasonry" supposed to have existed then, that is a mere dream. Were Freemasons generally to study the literature of Freemasonry, in conjunction with the history of architecture and general history, rather more than has been yet done, we might by-and-bye soon get out of the eternal circle of Freemasonic nonsense which has until lately been so current. Then, as now, Masonry—i.e., operative Masonry—existed, but not Freemasonry; therefore, as I have already stated, the noblest laurels of "Freemasonry" do not lie in the past, but in the future—they have yet to be won.

And as for "Masonic Marks," why, if a mason then lifted a soft brick he would very likely leave the marks of his fingers on it, which would be nothing mysterious, although made by a mason; and suppose a mason was cutting stones, and the overseer desired to measure off his work, and give each man his particular portion to execute, what more commonplace or sensible than that the workman would have to put some distinguishing mark—simply "his mark"—upon the stones he wrought? This "mason's mark" on the stone, therefore, simply showed who did the work, and would also enable the overseer, or master of the work, to understand where it was to go, and who to blame if it was not correctly wrought. But "Amami" may say—these marks must have a mysterious meaning, because, see, there are "circles, triangles, &c.," to which I answer, suppose they are "circles, triangles, &c.," what about it? what else could they be? If a mark is to be made at all it must be of some shape, and their variety shows that a needful circumstance was that the mark of one party should be different from that of another. And the mark which a mason would be likely to adopt would be some figure, letter, sign or symbol which, having seen somewhere, had caught his fancy. Again, although some of these "mason's marks" on stones should happen to be similar to some religious or civil symbol, it does not therefore follow that said figure, when used as a "mason's mark" on the stone, has either the same meaning or intention as the symbol which is used under other circumstances. Many of these supposed symbols on the stones are, I consider, simply the mark of the workman, or perhaps sometimes of the overseer, or the initial of, or sign, or symbol for, his name.

MASONIC RITUALS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am sorry to have again to differ from "Delta." In the Freemason for April 24th, p. 9, I was not "writing on a wholly different subject," for although my letter then was headed "Chair Degree," it is only the first paragraph, of 23 lines, that refers thereto; all the rest of the letter, as any one could easily perceive from the prefatory remark, line 29th, refers to what "Delta," &c., had been treating on. But be that as it may—to the point. "Delta" said, "In a ritual preserved, as that of Masonry is, by tradition only." I denied that, and I do so still. "Delta" now adds, "I need hardly premise that my observation applied only to Blue or Craft Masonry, which alone formed the subject of my letter; and subject to this limitation, I think it will appear that my words were strictly correct." "Delta" now jumps out of the frying-pan into the fire; because, even "subject to this limitation," I still have to inform him, that, allowing it was "Blue or Craft Masonry which alone formed the subject of his letter," his words were—as he knows, or ought to know, and as his letter of May 8th, p. 9, to any with half an eye distinctly proves—anything but "strictly correct."

Speaking generally, I consider there has been far too many "white lies," or, too much "writing ingeniously," anent Freemasonry; it is high time this was stopped. Our Order teaches us to act upon the square, which of course includes that we are also to write upon the square, neither attempting to deceive our brethren, ourselves, or the public at large. So shall we be respected by all. Further, as regards our rituals, except perhaps part of the first degree, they are new creations since the beginning of last century, and any "traditions" regarding the connection of said rituals with our "Freemasonry" could only have existed since then; but I can go further, and say that there was no such thing in existence as our present Freemasonry previous to about A.D. 1700. I may have more to say upon this point again; meantime I can refer to THE FREEMASON of April 10th, page 6, for some of my ideas thereanent. Before closing, I would not wish to leave our esteemed brother, "Delta," in the well; but, holding out the right hand of fellowship by which terra firma is reached, I would merely add—We can surely understand each other.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I shall feel obliged if you will permit me, through the medium of your journal, to make it known to the brethren who attended the festival yesterday, that it is my intention to bring before the next Board of Stewards the style in which we were treated by the contractor for the banquet, and that I shall be happy to receive any written communication from brethren on this subject.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

H. W. HEMS WORTH, W.M.,
And Steward for the Oak Lodge, 190.

GRAND MASONIC FESTIVAL AT ROCHDALE.

On Thursday last week, a Provincial Grand Lodge of the Freemasons of East Lancashire was held in the Lyceum, Baillie-street, Rochdale. The lodge was opened by the Provincial Grand Master (Bro. S. Blair), who was attended by Bro. A. H. Royds, P.D.P.G.M. for East Lancashire, and P.G.M. for Worcester; and several past and present officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge. Representatives of 70 out of the 75 lodges in the province were present. The accounts for the past year, which were presented by the P.G. Treas. (Bro. Barker), showed that a balance of £70 was in hand, after making all grants and investing £300 in stock. Bro. J. D. Kennedy, of the Blair Lodge, was elected Treasurer for the ensuing year; and the following appointments were made:—Bros. J. M. Wike, P.S.G.W.; T. Radley, P.G. Chaplain; C. Heywood, P.G. Registrar; T. Tunnah, P.G. Secretary; W. H. Prince (Rochdale), P.S.G.D.; J. Duffield, P.G. Superintendent of Works; J. Titmarsh, P.G. Director of Ceremonies; C. M. Jones, P.G.A.D.C.; W. Gouldthorpe, P.G. Organist.

Mr. J. L. HINE, President of the Charity Committee, read the proceedings of the several meetings which the committee had held since the last Provincial Grand Lodge, and referred to the election of two girls from East Lancashire to the Institute in London. He stated that the appeal made to the province on behalf of the Boys' Institute had resulted in answers from 40 of the 70 lodges, and individual donations had been subscribed amounting in the aggregate to nearly £2,000. A further sum of £900 was required to redeem the promise made on behalf of the province. Amongst the donations to the Boys' School was one of 1,000 guineas given by the Provincial Grand Master of East Lancashire, which gave them a right in perpetuity of nominating one boy to the school.

At the conclusion of the lodge, the brethren, to the number of upwards of 300, marched in procession to the Prince of Wales Theatre, where dinner awaited them. The weather, unfortunately, was very unpropitious for the display of the regalia, but, notwithstanding this drawback, it did not affect the after proceedings. During dinner the band of the 24th L. R. V. was stationed in the gallery, and played selections of music at intervals. When the post-prandial proceedings commenced the boxes were filled with ladies, who seemed to take much interest in the proceedings. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Bro. Wrigley, P.M., P.P.G.S.B. The vocalists were: Miss Winward, Mrs. Howarth; Bros. Edmundson, Dumville, Bailey, and Wroe; pianist, Bro. John McNaught.

The CHAIRMAN (Stephen Blair, Esq., P.G.M.) proposed the first toast: "The Queen." He congratulated Rochdale upon having had the most successful gathering since he became the P.G.M. of East Lancashire, twenty-three years ago. (Applause.) He said the first toast he had to propose was the Queen. The purity and goodness of her rule was only equalled by her desire to see her people happy and prosperous. He was sure they would drink it with much heartiness. (Applause.)

"God save the Queen," Masonic version.

The CHAIRMAN next gave the toast of "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and rest of the Royal Family." The members of the royal family, he said, had been doing their best to make themselves known, both in this country and abroad, and he had no doubt when the Prince was called to his high destiny, that he would be found worthy of his noble progenitors.

Glee, "God bless the noble pair."

The CHAIRMAN next gave "The Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, Most Worshipful Grand Master of England. (Applause.) He said he was in London the other day at the inauguration of the Grand Lodge of England. The Earl of Zetland was present, and he was happy to tell the brethren, though he was getting up in years that he was in good health. He had been W.G.W. of England for twenty-five years, and a number of gentlemen had subscribed a testimonial of £5,000 for his services to the Order, but he said he would not receive a farthing, but asked that it might be so disposed as to be a benefit to the poor Freemasons of England. (Applause.) He was much pleased with the inauguration of the lodge in London, and the manner in which it was conducted; but he was far better pleased at the manner in which things had been conducted this day. (Applause.) He concluded by expressing a hope that the Earl of Zetland would long be G.M. over them. The toast was received with "twenty and one."

Glee, "Honour to Masonry."

P.G.C. Bro. RADLEY proposed the next toast, "Brother the Right Hon. Earl Grey, Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master of England, and the rest of the Grand Officers." He said in the history of Freemasonry in Lancashire, and perhaps in no part of the country, was there such a company to greet them. (Applause.) He rose with great pleasure to propose the toast, which was not a formal toast, as they knew that on organisation depended the success of every institution, whether good or bad. (Applause.) And when they had such men at their head, they could not be surprised that Masonry had advanced so much during the past twenty years. The Earl de Grey and Ripon was also the P.G.M. of West Yorkshire. In Lancashire he hoped they would only cultivate that spirit of brotherly rivalry which produced good works. He had, therefore, great pleasure in proposing the health of Earl de Grey and Ripon, and the rest of the Grand officers.

Glee, "Blow, gentle Gales."

Bro. WIKE, P.G.S.W., proposed the next toast, "Bro. Stephen Blair, Esq., Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master of East Lancashire." Bro. Blair, he said, first came to Lancashire under the presidency of the Earl of Ellesmere, whom he succeeded as Grand Master. After twenty-three years of rule they had him there amongst them in health and strength. (Applause.) He had the pleasure of having the acquaintance of many Provincial Grand Masters, but he knew no one so worthy of his position. He alluded to the many men of high birth who might be called ornamental Grand Masters; but if they wanted a Grand Master in his Craft, they had him in Stephen Blair, even when he was a poor Mason in Bolton. If they wanted a leader in their charities, in him they had such as no province could show. As an example of his generosity he mentioned that the Master had presented 1,000 guineas to the Boys' School. (Loud applause.)

Glee, "When the Temple's first stone."

The CHAIRMAN, when he rose to respond, was received with loud and prolonged cheers. He said he was greatly obliged to them for the manner in which they had received the last toast. From his youth he had always had a love for Freemasonry, and very early in life he came into the Grand Lodge, and, as Bro. Wike had said, by industry he had worked himself up to his present position. When he first came into office there were 30 lodges in the province. Now they had 70 lodges in East Lancashire, and 4,000 subscribers. (Applause.) By their help, and by his steering the way, they had become what they were. He referred to the principles of Masonry, and said there was nothing by which their Order would be more advanced than by opening the benevolent hand. "The poor they had always with them," and he had always done what he could to assist his poorer brethren. He thanked them from his heart for the kind compliment they had paid him, and he hoped often to be able to meet them; and when they happened to bring anything forward for a charitable object, he would always lend a helping hand. (Applause.)

Bro. A. H. ROYDS, P.G.M. of Worcestershire, proposed the next toast, "Bro. W. R. Callender, jun., Esq., Deputy Provincial Grand Master of East Lancashire, and the rest of the Provincial Grand Officers." He said he proposed that toast with no little feeling of respect, because it had never previously been his privilege to propose the health of their Deputy, whom he regretted was not present with them. He envied him his situation, a situation which he had himself long held.

Glee, "Now tramp."

Bro PARKER responded to the toast. He and they must all regret that Bro. Callender was prevented through sickness from being present with them.

The CHAIRMAN next proposed "The Provincial Grand Masters and the officers of other Provinces." Freemasons, he said, were always willing to extend the kind hand of fellowship towards those friends who came to see them.

Glee, "The Dawn of Day"

Bro. ROYDS returned thanks as an officer of a distant province. In Worcestershire they could not compete with Lancashire in masonry, but he was happy to say that since he was last with them he had opened a new lodge.

Bro. HIND, P.P.G.T., proposed the next toast, "The Masonic Charities." He alluded to the charities connected with the Order, and hoped they would do all they could to extend their usefulness.

Glee, "Burns' Farewell to his lodge."

The remaining toasts were, "The Rochdale, Whitworth, Smallbridge, and Wardle Lodges," proposed by Dr. LEES, P.P.G.S.W., and responded to by Bro. HOLROYD, W.M., of 298; "The Visiting Brethren," proposed by Bro. PRINCE, P.G.S.D., and responded to by Bro. Rev. HENRY JONES, of West Yorkshire; "The Ladies," proposed by Brother CROXTON, P.P.G.S.D., East Lancashire, and responded to by Bro. CHADWICK, P.M., 816; and "To all Poor and Distressed Masons—a Speedy Relief." The glees after each of the latter toasts were, "Stay! Pry thee, Stay," "Sleep, Gentle Lady," and "All hail! thou Queen of Night."

After the departure of the provincial officers votes of thanks were accorded to Bros. P.M. Wm. Roberts, P.P.S.P.; and P.M. William Ashworth, hon. sec., to whose energy and perseverance the success of the banquet is to be attributed.

Bro. Barry Sullivan, who has lately opened the Holborn Theatre with every prospect of success, had a very high compliment paid him by his friends and admirers in Liverpool, on the 1st inst. They engaged a special train to convey them to and fro, and at the conclusion, Bro. Sullivan received a perfect ovation.

CONSECRATION AND DEDICATION OF ACACIA LODGE (No. 24), LURGAN.

To-day, the ceremony of opening and dedicating the new Masonic Room, Town Hall, Lurgan, in connection with the Acacia Masonic Lodge (No. 24), took place at four o'clock.

The room which has been selected by the lodge is a wing of the new Town Hall, and is 26 feet by 22, the height being 24 feet. At the head of the room a beautiful canopy, the work of Br. M'Connell, has been erected, underneath which is the Master's chair, and on each side of it are Past Masters' seats. All the chairs have been beautifully carved by Bro. Wm. Lonsdale, of Lurgan, and upholstered in blue velvet. The canopy, which is painted in white, blue, and gold, presents a beautiful appearance; and on the panels are inscribed, in gold letters, the words, "Acacia Lodge, No. 24," the whole ornaments forming the neatest of the kind we have ever seen. The centre of the room was occupied by a beautiful altar, erected on three steps of tessellated pavement; and on the altar were the three greater lights of Masonry, the Holy Bible, square and compass, and the gold and silver vessels connected with the lodge. Amongst the mottoes on the wall was a massive chart, which was executed by Bro. Wm. Lonsdale, of Lurgan, who kindly presented it to the lodge, of which he is a member. The painting of the canopy was executed by Mr. James Robinson and Mr. James Young.

The warrant of this lodge was first moved to Hillsborough in 1817, but in consequence of its becoming inoperative in that neighbourhood it was transferred to Lurgan in 1865, and has been working successfully, the lodge at present consisting of upwards of forty members.

The brethren assembled in the large-room adjoining the new lodge-room shortly before four o'clock, wearing the clothing, jewels, and insignia of their respective orders and the offices which they represented. The directors of ceremonies (Bros. W. R. Kelly and A. A. Lutton) having formed the brethren into procession, they proceeded to the lodge-room, which was, in a most impressive and solemn manner, duly consecrated and dedicated to the purposes of Freemasonry.

The WORSHIPFUL MASTER then delivered from the chair an address delivered by the late Bro. the Venerable Archdeacon W. B. Mant, Past Prov Grand Master of Belfast and North Down, at the dedication of the Masonic Hall, Donegall-place, Belfast, on the 24th of June, 1850. In conclusion, he said: I would congratulate you, brethren of Lodge 24, on the dedication to the purposes of Freemasonry of this room, which, although not of very large dimensions, is sufficiently spacious for the celebration of the ceremonies, both of your lodge and of the higher orders of Masonry with which some of us are connected, and appears to be commodiously situated and well arranged. I am happy to have been able to take part in so interesting a ceremonial; and I heartily wish that this lodge may long continue to flourish and increase in numbers and respectability; may long enjoy the use of this room, in peace, love, and harmony; and may set an example and model to the Masonic fraternities of the North, by the correctness of their working, the regularity of their discipline, and their adherence to the true grand principles of brotherly love, mutual relief, and pursuit of truth!

A Masonic version of the National Anthem was then sung, and the lodge was closed in ancient form.

The following visiting brethren were in attendance at the ceremony:—William Redfern Kelly, P.G.J.D., County Antrim; John Ireland, P.P.J.W., County Antrim; John Gilbert, 134; G. W. M'Cutcheon, 334; W. Bailey, 219, Portadown; Isaiah Kilpatrick, 219; Wm. Hall, P.M., R.A.C., 82, Portadown; Wm. Faris, P.M., 134; Frederick W. Magahan, P.M., 134; Samuel Rodgers, M.D., 134; William Anderson, W.M., 367, Downpatrick; John Archer, 335; James Archer, 134; Samuel Parkes, 82; Joseph Totten, 272; Wm. Sands, 66; S. W. Lutton, W.M., 66; John P. Harris, 66; William Baird, P.M., 134; George Haslett, P.M. and K., 134; Wm. Macoun, P.M. and P.K., 134, H.K.T.; Wm. Herron, R.A.C. and S.W., 134; John H. Farrell, P.M., 82, Portadown; James Donn, 39; A. C. Innes, 246; and H. Greer, P.M., 134.

After the ceremonies, two new members were initiated, and subsequently the brethren sat down to dinner, which was supplied in excellent style by Mr. Thompson, of Lurgan, the dining-room being decorated with appropriate symbols, put up under the superintendence of Mr. Lonsdale.—Belfast News Letter, 11th May.

Worldly good, to deserving persons requiring aid, does not come by any seeming supernatural power. It comes by means that are perfectly natural. Favourable circumstances occur. It comes from a friendly disposition, a desire to serve, an inclining of the heart—when an angel whispers no word is spoken, but a thought comes most heavenly.—Ellis.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWO GRAND LODGES OF ENGLAND IN RATIFICATION OF THE UNION, 1813.

Grand Assembly of Freemasons, for the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England, on St. John's Day, 27th December, 1813.

(Concluded.)

His Royal Highness was placed on the Throne by the Duke of Kent and the Count Lagardje, and solemnly obligated. The Grand Installation was fixed for St. George's Day.

Proclamation was then made that the Most Worshipful Prince Augustus Frederick, Duke of Sussex, Earl of Inverness, Baron Arklow, Knight Companion of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, was elected and enthroned Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Freemasons of England. And His Royal Highness received the homage of the Fraternity.

His Royal Highness the Grand Master, previous to nominating his Grand Officers, took occasion to observe that he had written to an exalted and distinguished nobleman to be his Deputy Grand Master, who being absent from London, and not able to return an answer in time for this meeting, His Royal Highness did not feel himself at liberty to name him, but would take the earliest opportunity of communicating the appointment. He then nominated the following Brothers to be the Grand Officers for the year ensuing:—The Rev. Samuel Hemming, D.D., Senior Grand Warden; Isaac Lindo, Esq., Junior Grand Warden; John Dent, Esq., Grand Treasurer; William Meyrick, Esq., Grand Register; William Henry White and Edwards Harper, Grand Secretaries; Rev. Edward Barry, D.D., and Rev. Lucius Coghlan, D.D., Grand Chaplains; Rev. Henry Isaac Knapp, Deputy Grand Chaplain; John Soane, Esq., Grand Superintendent of the Works; Sir George Nayler, Grand Director of the Ceremonies; Captain Jonathan Parker, Grand Sword bearer; Samuel Wesley, Esq., Grand Organist; Benjamin Aldhouse, Grand Usher; William V. Salmon, Grand Tyler.

It was then solemnly proclaimed that the two Grand Lodges were incorporated and consolidated into one, and the Grand Master declared it to be open in due form according to ancient usage.

The Grand Lodge was then called to refreshment, and the cup of Brotherly love was delivered by the Junior Grand Warden to the Past Deputy Grand Master, who presented the same to the Grand Master; he drank to the Brethren—"Peace, good will, and Brotherly love, all over the world;"—and he passed it. During its going round, the vocal band performed a song and glea.

The Grand Lodge was re-called to labour, when as the first act of the United Fraternity, His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, after an elegant introduction, moved—

"1. That an humble Address be presented to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, respectfully to acquaint him with the happy event of the Re-union of two Grand Lodges of Ancient Freemasons of England—an event which cannot fail to afford a lively satisfaction to their Illustrious Patron, who presided for so many years over one of the Fraternities; and under whose auspices Freemasonry has risen to its present flourishing condition. That the unchangeable principles of the Institution are well known to his Royal Highness, and the great benefits and end of this Re-union are to promote the influence and operation of these principles, by more extensively inculcating loyalty and affection to their Sovereign—obedience to the laws and magistrates of their country—and the practice of all the religious and moral duties of life—objects which must ever be dear to his Royal Highness in the government of his Majesty's United Kingdom. That they humbly hope and pray for the continuance of the sanction of his Royal Highness's fraternal patronage; and that they beg leave to express their fervent gratitude for the many blessings which, in common with all their fellow subjects, they derive from his benignant sway.

"That the great Architect of the Universe may long secure these blessings to them and to their country, by the preservation of his Royal Highness, their Illustrious Patron!"

This motion was seconded by the Honourable Washington Shirley, and passed unanimously, and with Masonic honours. This was followed by a motion—

"2. That this Address, signed by the Grand Master, be presented to his Royal Highness, accompanied by the Past Grand Masters, his Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, and his Grace the Duke of Athol."

The R.W. Bro. Williams, Provincial Grand Master for Dorsetshire, moved

"3. That the grateful Thanks of this United Grand Lodge be given to the Most Worshipful their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Kent and Duke of Sussex for the gracious condescension with which they yielded to the prayer of the United Fraternities to take upon themselves the personal conduct of the negotiation for a Re-union, which is this day, through their zeal, conciliation, and fraternal example, so happily completed. To state to them that the removal of all the slight differences which have so long kept the Brotherhood asunder, will be the means of establishing in the Metropolis of the British Empire one splendid edifice of Ancient Freemasonry, to which the whole Masonic World may confidently look for the maintenance and preservation of the pure principles of the Craft, as handed down to them from time immemorial under the protection of the illustrious branches of the Royal House of Brunswick; and may their Royal Highnesses have the heartfelt satisfaction of long beholding the beneficent effects of their work, in the extension and practice of the virtues of loyalty, morality, brotherly love, and benevolence, which it has been ever the great object of Masonry to inculcate and of its laws to enforce."

This was also unanimously approved; and was followed by a motion, made by John Dent, Esq., Grand Treasurer—

"4. That the thanks of this Grand Lodge be given to the Right Worshipful James Perry, James Agar, and Thomas Harper, Past Deputy Grand Masters; the Right Worshipful Waller Rodwell Wright, Provincial Grand Master; the Right Worshipful Arthur Tegart and James Deans, Past Grand Wardens; Commissioners appointed by the two Fraternities to assist the illustrious Princes in the said negotiation—for the zeal, conciliation, and ability with which they discharged their important trust therein."

The following Resolutions were also severally put, and carried in the affirmative unanimously:—

"5. That Books be opened by the Grand Secretaries for the regular entry and record of the proceedings of this United Grand Lodge; and that there be inserted therein, in the first instance, an account of all the Resolutions and Proceedings of both Grand Lodges with respect to the Negotiation for the Union, and of the conferences of the Commissioners thereon; together with a copy of the Articles of Union, and the confirmation thereof; also copies of Letters written by their Royal Highnesses the two Grand Masters, and Grand Secretaries, addressed to the Most Worshipful the Grand Masters and Grand Secretaries of Scotland and Ireland, announcing the same, together with the Resolutions of those Grand Lodges in reply.

"6. That the proceedings of this day be communicated to the Grand Lodges of Scotland and Ireland, and to express to them that this United Grand Lodge feels with the most sensible satisfaction the Fraternal interest which they take in the important event of this day. To assure them that it is the anxious desire of this Grand Lodge to maintain the most constant, cordial and intimate communion with the Sister Grand Lodges of the United Kingdom, to which end they are persuaded that nothing is so essential as the preservation of one pure and unsullied system founded on the simple and ancient traditions of the Craft.

"7. That all the Rules, Orders, Regulations, and Acts of the two Grand Lodges, previous to their consolidation and union, be upheld, maintained, and enforced, by the United Grand Lodge, subject to reconsideration on the establishment of a new code

"8. That a New Code of Laws, By-laws, Rules and Regulations for the Grand Lodge, for private Lodges, and generally for the whole government of the Craft, together with a Book of Constitutions for the same, be made out with all convenient speed, and submitted to the Grand Lodge for their consideration and approval. And that the Commissioners for the Union be empowered to take the necessary steps for the preparation of the same, by engaging such assistance as they may deem expedient thereto."

"9. That there be established Committees, or Boards of Grand Officers, for the administration of Finances, of the Works, of the Schools, and of General Purposes, who shall meet on days to be fixed and announced. And that the Most Worshipful the Grand Master, Past Grand Masters, Deputy and Past Deputy Grand Masters, Grand Treasurer, Grand Register, Grand Secretaries, and the Grand Wardens for the time being, together with the other three Commissioners of the Union, be Members of all the Boards; The Senior Grand Officer present to take the chair; that one of the two Grand Secretaries shall attend these Boards, to keep regular minutes of the proceedings, and that the same shall be reported to the Grand Lodge ensuing for their consideration and approval."

Several other Resolutions were also passed relative to the internal management of the Grand Lodge; and the Most Worshipful Grand Master announced, that in order not to interrupt the course of Masonic benevolence, he should direct summonses to be issued to twelve Masters of Lodges, to assemble on the third Wednesday of every month as a Committee of Benevolence agreeably to Article XIX. of the Act of Union, to take into consideration such petitions as might be presented to them for Masonic aid. And that it would be expected, in case either of the said twelve Masters so summoned could not attend, he should delegate a Past Master of his own Lodge to represent him, properly clothed in the insignia of Master.

And further the Grand Master announced, that he should permit and authorise his own private Seal of Arms to be used on the issuing of Certificates and other documents, until the new great seal should be prepared.

The United Grand Lodge was then closed in ample form, and with solemn prayer.

The Grand Officers and the Brotherhood then repaired to the Crown and Anchor Tavern, where a grand banquet was provided. His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex in the chair; supported on the right by his Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, and on the left by his Excellency Count De Lagardje, and other distinguished foreigners. The auspicious day was concluded with the most festive harmony and brotherly love.

Bro. Geo. Tedder, who has for so many years been an old favourite of the public, announces a benefit in the New Assembly Room, Bath-place, Upper Holloway, lately opened by him, on May the 10th and 17th. The programme is of a very attractive nature, embracing the names of some very excellent singers, namely, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Mde. Florence and Miss Susan Pyne, Miss Blanche Reeves, Bros. W. J. Fielding, G. Buckland, and G. Tedder; Miss F. Crellin, Messrs. Ferguson, Massey, Fairbairn, Charles Braid, &c.

We have been informed that Captain Warren, R.E., and Sergeant Bertie, who are now exploring the subterranean chambers of Jerusalem, and the ancient water supply of the Holy City, have been invited to become hon. members of St. Kew Lodge, No. 1272, at Weston-super-Mare. A resolution to that effect was proposed by Capt. Irwin, and seconded by Gen. Gore Munbie, R.E., and the Secretary has communicated with those gentlemen (and brothers) through H.M. Consul. An answer is expected daily, the result of which shall be communicated to THE FREEMASON. Bros. Warren and Bertie have made most interesting and important Masonic discoveries, which cannot be fully disclosed at the present time.

DRUMBO CHURCH ERECTION FUND, ONTARIO, CANADA.

AN examination of the official papers set forth below will sufficiently explain, and, I venture to think, justify, my bringing to the notice of my fellow-churchmen the object which I have at heart in visiting England at this time.

The Mission of which I have the charge, situated at Princeton, in the diocese of Huron, covers a very large area, and is, at present, provided with but one church—a provision utterly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of the district.

This church, a very small one (being but 30 by 60), I was enabled to build by the proceeds obtained from lectures delivered by me, and appeals made by sermons and other agencies, supplemented by free gifts of sand, stone, and other material, most liberally contributed by the members of the mission, who gave, in addition, their personal services, both in digging the foundations and bringing to the site the whole of the material required—a distance, in some cases, of twelve miles.

Before leaving Princeton I had the great consolation of seeing this church (St. Paul's) free from debt, and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

My present object is to provide a second church for Drumbo, the northern portion of my mission, distant about seven miles from St. Paul's Church, Princeton.

In this district are many settlers, mostly emigrants from Great Britain, who are very anxious to have the great blessing of a place of worship in their midst, and who, although too poor to help much financially, are both ready and willing to contribute, as their neighbours in Princeton have done, in labour and material.

The amount required for this good end is but trifling, £1,200 to £1,500 being amply sufficient (with the labour and material given) to provide a suitable church and mission-house; and I appeal with all confidence to God's stewards of wealth in England who are happy in the full enjoyment of all Christian privileges, to extend to their fellow churchmen for whom I plead, the blessings so liberally poured out upon themselves.

"Lambeth Palace, February 27th, 1869."

From the Lord Bishop of Huron.

"The Rev. Henry Bartlett has been, since his ordination Missionary at Princeton, in the Diocese of Huron. Within the limits of his extensive Mission, the village of Drumbo is situated. Mr. Bartlett is desirous to erect a church in this village, and, the people being very poor, he is under the necessity of seeking assistance from Christian friends for that object. He is going to England to visit his friends, and he hopes to be able to interest some of those to whom the Lord has committed the stewardship of the goods of this world, to aid him in the good work which he has in hand. I would recommend this cause to the liberal assistance of members of the church.

From the Ven. Archdeacon Utterton, Commissary of the Diocese of Winchester.

"The Rev. H. Bartlett, of Princeton, Upper Canada, appears to be well accredited, and I shall rejoice to hear that he has been successful in his endeavours to raise funds for the erection of a church at Drumbo.

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

“Thus saith Cyrus the king, since God Almighty hath appointed me to be king of the habitable earth, I believe that He is that God which the nation of the Israelites worship; for indeed he foretold my name by the prophets, and that I should build him an house at Jerusalem in the country of Judea.’ This was known to Cyrus by his reading the book which Isaiah left behind him of his prophecies, for this prophet said that God had spoken thus to him in a secret vision:—‘My will is that Cyrus, whom I have appointed to be king over many and great nations, send back my people to their own land, and build my temple.’ This was foretold by Isaiah one hundred and forty years before the temple was demolished. Accordingly, when Cyrus read this and admired the divine power, an earnest desire and an ambition seized upon him to fulfil what was so written, so he called for the most eminent Jews that were in Babylon, and said unto them, that he gave them leave to go back to their own country, and to rebuild their city, Jerusalem, and the temple of God, for that he would be their assistant, and that he would write to the rulers and governors that were in the neighbourhood of their country, Judea, that they should contribute to them gold and silver for the building of the temple, and, besides that, beasts for their sacrifices. When Cyrus had said this to the Israelites, the rulers of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with the Levites and priests, went to Jerusalem—yet did many of them stay at Babylon, as not being willing to leave their possessions—and when they were come hither all the king’s friends assisted them, and brought in for the building of the temple—some, gold, and some, silver, and some a great many cattle and horses. So they performed their vows to God, and offered the sacrifices that had been accustomed of old time; I mean this, upon the rebuilding of their city, and the revival of the ancient practices relating to their worship. Cyrus also sent back to them the vessels of gold which King Nebuchadnezzar had pillaged out of the temple, and carried away to Babylon. So he committed these things to Mithridates, the treasurer, to be sent away, with an order to give them to Sanabassar, that he might keep them till the temple was built, and when it was finished he might deliver them to the priests and rulers of the multitude, in order to their being restored to the temple. Cyrus also sent an epistle to the governors that were in Syria, the contents whereof here follow:—

“‘King Cyrus to Sissinnes and Sathrabuzanes, “‘Sendeth greeting,

“‘I have given leave to as many of the Jews that dwell in my country as please to return to their own country, and to rebuild their city, and to build the Temple of God at Jerusalem, on the same place where it was before. I have also sent my treasurer, Mithridates, and Zerobabel, the governor of the Jews, that they may lay the foundations of the temple, and may build it sixty cubits high, and of the same latitude, making three edifices of polished stones, and one of wood of the country, and the same order extends to the altar whereon they offer sacrifices to God. I require also that the sacrifices for these things be given out of my revenues. Moreover I have also sent the vessels which King Nebuchadnezzar pillaged out of the temple, and have given them to Mithridates, the treasurer, and to Zerobabel, the governor of the Jews, that they may have them carried to Jerusalem, and may restore them to the temple of God. Now, their number is as follows:—Fifty chargers of gold, and five hundred of silver; forty Thericlean cups of gold, and five hundred of silver; fifty basins of gold, and five hundred of silver; thirty vessels for pouring the drink offerings, and three hundred of silver; thirty vials of gold, and two thousand four hundred of silver; with a thousand other larger vessels. I permit them to have the same honour which they were used to have from their forefathers; as, also, for their small cattle, and for wine and oil, two hundred and five thousand and five hundred drachmæ; and for wheat flour, twenty thousand and five hundred artabæ. And I give order that these expenses shall be given them out of the tributes due from Samaria. The priests, also, shall offer the sacrifices, according to the laws of Moses, in Jerusalem; and when they offer them they shall pray to God for the preservation of the King and of his family, that the kingdom of Persia may continue. But my will is, that those who disobey these injunctions and make them void shall be hung upon a cross, and their substance brought into the King’s treasury.’ And such was the import of this epistle. Now the number of those who came out of captivity to Jerusalem were forty-two thousand four hundred and sixty-two.”

It may be interesting at this stage of our history to glance at certain obsolete degrees, in which the name and character of Cyrus were commemorated to a greater extent than in modern Royal Arch Masonry.

In one of these degrees the lodge-room represented the council chamber of Cyrus, king of Babylon, and was lighted by 70 lamps, to denote the 70 years of the Jewish captivity. The Master represented Cyrus; the senior warden, Nebuzaradan; the junior warden, Mithridates; and the candidate, Zerubbabel, chained as a captive with fetters formed of triangular links. Zerubbabel presents himself before the king and prays him to grant freedom to the Israelites who desire to return to Jerusalem; this Cyrus promises to do if Zerubbabel will reveal to him the mysteries of Freemasonry. The captive, as a matter of course, rejects the condition, stating, "If my liberty can only be obtained at the price of dishonour, I prefer captivity and the sufferings of servitude." The noble Cyrus is greatly impressed by the courage and discretion with which Zerubbabel guards the secrets of the Order, and agrees to restore the Jews to liberty if Zerubbabel will submit to certain proofs, which the candidate submits to with cheerful fortitude. Zerubbabel is then permitted to set out for Jerusalem, where he announces his arrival to the princes and rulers of Israel, who recognise him as their appointed chief, and form a grand Sanhedrim under his authority.

In another of these degrees, the candidate prefers a complaint against the Samaritans for refusing to pay the tribute imposed on them for defraying the expense of the sacrifices offered to God in the temple. The Master refers him to Darius, to whom the candidate then repairs, and the king issues the following decree: "We Darius, king of kings, willing to favour and protect our people at Jerusalem, after the example of our illustrious predecessor, King Cyrus, do will and ordain, that the Samaritans, against whom complaints have been made, shall punctually pay the tribute money which they owe for the sacrifices of the temple; otherwise they shall receive the punishment due to their disobedience." The candidate returns to Jerusalem, where he is received with great joy as the bearer of so important a mandate, and the princes and rulers of the people reward his zeal and courage by admitting him as a member of their secret council, &c.

These degrees were doubtless based upon the historical fact, that after the death of Cyrus the work at Jerusalem was retarded and interrupted by the malice of the Samaritans, who not only used open violence to hinder the Jews in their arduous undertaking, but also represented them to Cambyses as a seditious and disloyal people. However, upon the accession of Darius Hystaspes to the throne, Zerubbabel took the earliest opportunity of reminding the king of a vow he had formerly made to rebuild the city and temple of Jerusalem, and restore the worship of the true God throughout Judea. Darius at once promulgated the following edict, in which he not only granted the Jews full permission to proceed with the work but also ordered that every assistance should be afforded them by his subjects for that purpose:—

"We have seen the decree of Cyrus, our predecessor, in which permission was granted to the Jews to rebuild their temple and city of Jerusalem. Now, therefore, let the work of the House of God alone; let the governor of the Jews, and the elders of the Jews, build this House of God in its place. Moreover, I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of the King's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men that they be not hindered. And the God that hath caused His name to dwell there, destroy all kings and people that shall put their hand to alter and to destroy this House of God which is at Jerusalem. I, Darius, have made a decree, let it be done with speed."

"A Letter to the R. W. Brother J. Rankin Stebbing, P.G.D., &c., on Brother Clabon's proposed scheme of Masonic Confiscation." By Brother MATTHEW COOKE, 30°, P.M., P.Z., &c.

In the first number of THE FREEMASON our readers will remember we sounded a note of warning as to the nature and character of Brother Clabon's scheme for the appropriation of the Fund of Benevolence to certain purposes not only foreign to its original design, but calculated to deprive the Craft of all control over moneys which it is our sacred duty to dispense for the relief of the poor and distressed. We then remarked that at the last meeting of Grand Lodge, Bro. Stebbing vigorously protested against the adoption of such a perilous course, and we appealed to the Freemasons of England to oppose this invasion of their rights and privileges. Upon the same subject Bro. Cooke has written a pamphlet in the form of a letter to Bro. Stebbing, in which he denounces the scheme in no measured terms. Speaking of the Fund of Benevolence, he says:—

"It is the sole property of Grand Lodge, raised from the accumulation of many years' dues of honour; fines; negotiations; and a poll tax of the whole Craft. And it is charged with the relief of the poor and the expenses of the Order. The Schools have no interest in it, nor have they the most remote moral claim upon it, either in its regular or surplus amounts. It is a sacred and venerable trust and inheritance—fluctuating from time to time."

We also extract the following account of the origin of the Fund, which we hope the brethren will bear in mind:—

"The Committee of Charity—the forerunner of what was afterwards termed the Board, or Fund of Benevolence—first came into operation on the 21st of November, 1724, and was founded by twenty seven lodges, under the Grand Mastership of the Duke of Richmond. It commenced with 'a general fund for the support of faithful brethren who had met with reverses of fortune, or become poor.' If one argued for a month, I think no plainer definition of the Fund, its objects, and restrictions, could be arrived at. It was to 'support,'—not relieve,—faithful brethren who had met with reverses of fortune or become poor."

"That organization, modified from time to time by the admission of widows and children, as petitioners,—not children only claiming, because they are in schools founded by the private beneficence of individual brethren,—has come down to our own day, and so jealously is the right of petition still guarded, that, even now, a widow once relieved cannot petition again."

"That organization is the undoubted place of aid and assistance, from which every Craftsman has the right to demand relief."

We could have wished that Bro. Cooke's letter embodied fewer references to extraneous topics which serve only to confuse the main question, but we are bound to add that, when directed to the point, his arguments are exhaustive, and his denunciations amply warranted by the spoliating nature of the scheme. Bro. Cooke refutes the illogical dictum of the Committee, "That no reason exists for continuing this accumulation" (of the Fund of Benevolence), by quoting the 18th article of union between the two Grand Lodges in 1813 as follows:—

"The Fund appropriated to the objects of Masonic Benevolence, shall not be infringed on for any purpose, but shall be kept strictly and solely devoted to charity; and pains shall be taken to increase the same."

This, we conceive, is unanswerable, and unless the Act of Union be repealed, we are unable to see how any presiding officer in Grand Lodge can allow Bro. Clabon's scheme to be submitted to the vote at the next quarterly communication. But admitting even that the sense of the brethren is taken, we are not in any dread of the result; the authorities have done their duty in circulating the Report of the Confiscation Committee, and as the Craft are now thoroughly alive to the specious character of the proposed innovations, the whole scheme will doubtless be summarily rejected.

Bro. Cooke has done good service by his well-timed letter, which we commend to all our readers who may desire to be thoroughly acquainted with so important a subject.

"Le Monde Maconnique." Paris.

"Le Franc-Macon." Paris.

"L'Action Maconnique." Paris.

The chronicle of our French contemporary, the Masonic World, for April, contains accounts of several Masonic fêtes in Paris. One of these festivals took place on Sunday, the 14th March, in connection with the Lodge Mars et les Arts. The lodge was opened at two o'clock in the afternoon, and four gentlemen were initiated according to ancient custom; at five o'clock the celebrated Frère Eugene Pelletan delivered a brilliant oration, in which he defined the objects and character of Freemasonry, and alluded to "Abraham Lincoln, who abolished slavery in America, and Joseph Garibaldi, who freed Italy," as "two of the most illustrious Masons of our era." We confess frankly that, until we read Bro. Pelletan's speech, we were not aware that either of those eminent men had ever specialised himself in connection with Freemasonry, and we were not quite clear that the martyred American President was even a member of the Craft. To resume, we are glad to find that the oration of Frère Pelletan was greatly applauded; he is an able man, although perhaps too much of a theorist to suit the conservative principles of English Masons.

A banquet followed, at which 270 guests of both sexes sat down. Then the Frère Bancel delivered a discourse on the origin of the Revolution (fancy a scene like this in an English lodge), and a concert succeeded, after which M. Jules Simon spoke for an hour on education. The three lodges, "les Cœurs Unis," "l'Etoile Polaire," and the "Vallées Égyptiennes," celebrated their "Feast of Spring" on the 20th March, at which the programme was similar to that described above, except that the proceedings were wound up with a ball. Among the foreign lodges in "Le Monde Maconnique" we note that the Frère P. Van Humbeck, representative for Brussels, has been elected Grand Master of the G.O. of Belgium; but we regret to observe that both in Belgium and in Germany a movement appears to be gaining ground which has for its object the abolition of the prescribed profession of belief in T.G.A.O.T.U. required from every candidate before his initiation into Freemasonry. Our contemporary notices with just praise the labours of the "Masonic Archaeological Institute of England," and refers with admiration to the fine inaugural address of Bro. Hyde Clarke, and to the papers subsequently read by Bros. Lambert and Besant. The "Monde Maconnique," we may remark, strenuously supports the views of the advanced school of Masonic freethinkers, whose philosophy is evidently regarded with horror by the Ultramontane party on the Continent; and we may add that the dogmas of those pantheistic brethren are by no means in consonance with the ideas which obtain among English Masons.

"Le Franc-Macon" is the oldest French Masonic print, having been established in 1847. The editor analyzes a book written by M. de Saint Albin, who attacks Freemasonry, and especially the high grades, which he says are "consecrated to Satanic mysteries." There is also a voluminous account of the recent Masonic Congress at Havre, when various questions relating to the progress and utility of Freemasonry were debated by those who attended. There is also an interesting account of the late Bro. Berryer, the great French advocate, who was, it appears, initiated on the 23rd December, 1848, in the Lodge "Chevaliers-Croisés," and the "Franc-Macon" closes with an account of the funeral honours paid to Voltaire in the Lodge of "Nine Sisters" on the 28th October, 1778.

"L'Action Maconnique" alludes, in strong terms of reprobation, to the facility with which improper persons obtain admission into the Craft. This is an evil against which we have inveighed in THE FREEMASON. Our contemporary points out that in France men are induced to become Freemasons by appeals to their imagination or to their mercenary interests, instead of having their attention directed to the true objects of the institution. The "Action Maconnique" is in favour of the suppression of the high grades; but its views are combated in a letter from Frère Alexandre Roy, to which insertion is given in the number under review.

MASONIC LITERATURE.

We understand that Bro. D. Murray Lyon (of Ayr), the accomplished Masonic author, has just received permission from the members of the St. Mary Chapel Lodge, No. 1, Edinburgh, to examine their ancient records with a view to publishing such extracts as may tend to throw any light on the history of that old lodge, which has existed for upwards of three centuries.

We expect great things from such valuable documents being placed in the hands of so worthy and distinguished a mason, and although the promised history of "Mother Kilwinning" is likely to be deferred until the spring of 1870, in consequence of this fresh investigation being opened up, we feel sure that the result of Bro. Lyon's researches will more than compensate for the delay, and prove to be worthy of him and of the Lodge that has granted an opportunity for the Masonic Historian of Scotland to do justice to Masonry in Edinburgh.

Bro. DRUMMOND, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, has compiled a table in which he sums up the statistics of Freemasons in North America for the year 1868, as follows:—

42 Grand Lodges.
387,403 members.
52,930 initiations.
14,192 affiliations.
16,771 resignations.
696 expulsions.
4,267 deaths.
9,342 candidates rejected.

Truly our Order has made vast strides of late in America.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

VIII.—MASONRY AND PRE-HISTORIC MASONRY.

"In those days there was no Melech (King) in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes."—Judges xxi. 25.

If my memory serves me right, although I have not the book at hand, the philosophic Thomas Carlyle somewhere defines kings and the kingly office as denoting greater astuteness and capacity for reconciling differences and governing men than is evinced in those who are governed. This implies intelligence; intelligence argues physical comfort; physical comfort leads to civilization. To be cunning, or cunning (in the elder sense of our language), signified kingship; and such a position, derived from virtue and merit, any M.M. may be called upon to exercise. To assume, even symbolically, the chair of King Solomon—who, by a species of wonderful intuition, decided the question between the adverse mothers—requires great firmness, promptitude, and decision. Hence, in Universal Masonry, we hail as leader and king that man who most possesses discretion and discrimination. The divine right is thus given by T.G.A.O.T.U.

But when we come to consider what may be concisely called Pre-historic Masonry we are led to the conclusion that ages must have been passed through ere the human mind attained a sovereignty over itself, and knew rightly how to wield that sovereignty. It was necessary that there should be an infancy of the Royal art of reconstructing the building of the human mind; and here archæology comes in to assist us.

Modern research has led to much which in itself has a tendency to disenchant us respecting the wisdom of the ancients. Egyptian hieroglyphics, so long the theme of poet's song and of the mystic's rhapsodical interpretation, turn out very commonplace affairs. The astrolabe of Bro. Henry Melville is nothing more than the rude picture of the domestic arrangements of an Assyrian cooking-house, with the stable hard by where grooms are cleaning horses (carefully omitted by that learned (?) brother in his description). Dinner, we learn from ancient monuments, was a great institution of antiquity; but mysticism makes mountains of molehills, and discovers mares' nests innumerable amidst the relics of antiquity. It is very sad to be obliged to own that our forefathers were cannibals, and no better than they should be; but if we are to be loyal to facts we must admit the soft, but somewhat unpalatable, impeachment. We now certainly do not feast upon the aggregation of nastinesses which formed the staple of a Roman cæna. The civilization of our present day is infinitely higher than that of Athens or Persia, and, humiliating as it may be, we must abandon much that seemed very dear to our imaginations. As Longfellow sings, "Things are not what they seem;" and all the learning possessed by Egypt and the Magi, the Brahmins, and the Gymnosophists, dwindles into meagre stature beside the colossal proportions of modern science. Yet, while we have a right to rejoice at our present surroundings, there is no occasion to undervalue antiquity. We do not build pyramids now-a-days; the gigantic walls of the Peruvian Andes point to a constructive power not surpassed in our era; Roman road-making has not been equalled since the epoch of the Cæsars; and the wall of China remains to prove what antiquity could accomplish.

All these great remains point to a skill and capacity in our predecessors on this planet to which we must give honour. What is the corollary to the proposition? There might be many answers to such a question, but to me the obvious one is—that an almost incomprehensible antiquity is to be assigned to the human race, during which, by the slowest and surest of processes, a gradual advancement has been made. From the rude lake dwellings of Switzerland, from the kitchen middens of the North, to our times there is a great leap; and every intelligent Freemason cannot but perceive that, pari passu, with symbolisms of a more or less mystical character there has been a steady battle fought with Nature and the elements to promote the personal comfort and security of mankind. But the arts come, from time to time, to definitive periods of settlement; they seem arrested at certain points, and so petrified. Thus it is that at given times in the world's history the text I have written at the head of this article seems to be reverified—that there is really no king in Israel, and that every man does that which is right in his own eyes.

If the Master be away, the work can, it is true, be continued by the Warden; but the eye and authority of the Master is best to give the work increase and fruition. If it be true of "operative" Masonry, how much more so of "speculative!"

To reconstruct the temple of the human mind, to revivify the dead bones in the valley of Ezekiel, so that they shall be clothed with Charity as a garment, supported by Strength, and illustrated by Beauty, is a task demanding the utmost vigilance of a powerful mind. Hence the necessity, in some shape, of authority as absolute as it should be accurate and merciful. Hence the excellence of the square as a symbolic instrument.

And here I am reminded that some exception has been taken to expressions used in one of my former papers. I said that, in the middle ages, the operative masons being at war with the superstitions of Papal Rome, commemorated in sarcastic caricatures the vices and abuses of their era in the sacred edifices they raised for public worship. It was alleged that such caricatures were not executed without the impersson of the ecclesiastical authorities. The only reply to such an assumption that I can give, in print, consists in the following extract, from perhaps the best History of Freemasonry yet in existence. I allude to that of Findel, who gives the following instances of such a tendency to satirize in stone. He says (History of Freemasonry, p. 65. Asher & Co., London):—

"Intimations of their secret brotherhood and of the symbols known to them are to be found on all their monumental buildings, as well as of their religious views, which were entirely opposed to the prevailing corruption of morals of the clergy everywhere, as well as to the strict orthodox doctrines of the Church. In the St. Sebaldus Church in Nuremberg is a carving in stone, representing a nun in the lewd embrace of a monk. In the large Church at Strasburg, in one of the transepts opposite the pulpit, a hog and a goat may be seen carrying a sleeping fox, as a sacred relic; a bitch is following the hog; in advance of this procession is a bear with a cross, and before the bear a wolf holding a burning wax taper. Then follows an ass, who is reading mass at the altar. In the Cathedral of Würzburg are to be found the significant columns J and B which were in the porch of Solomon's Temple. In the Church of Doberan, in Mecklenburg (consecrated 1368), there are many double triangles placed in a significant manner, three vine leaves in Masonic fashion, united by a cord, and symbolic ciphers on the columns; there is further a beautifully preserved altar-piece which apprizes us of the religious views of the architect. In the foreground there are priests turning a mill, grinding dogmatic doctrines therein. In the upper part of the picture is the Virgin Mary with the child Jesus, having a flaming star on the lower part of her body. At the bottom of the picture is a representation of the Lord's Supper, in which are the Apostles in the well-known Freemasons' attitude, &c. In another Gothic Church is a satirical delineation of the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost; a picture of Mary, from beneath whose dress issues a leathern pipe up to the picture of the Holy Ghost; in the Cathedral of Brandenburg a fox in priestly robes is preaching to a flock of geese; in the Minster at Berne, in a picture of the Last Judgment, the Pope is amongst the damned."

Now, I will appeal to the common sense of Freemasons in general, whether it is likely that the consent of the superiors of these churches could have been obtained to the setting up of emblems and symbols such as these? It is very certain that no man would consent to his own ridicule; and yet these are palpable proofs that the "operative" Masons of the middle ages, when "there was no king in Israel," set up, in defiance of priestly authority, such emblems. Anyone who goes into the Cathedral at Aix la Chapelle, or Aachen, will see two disembowelled wolves sitting outside the side door; and the number of instances in which this tendency to satirize is evinced might be multiplied ad nauseam. "Orthodoxy," said the wise and witty Sydney Smith, "may be my doxy; heterodoxy is another man's doxy." Or, as it has been put very well, there is exactly the same relation between Dryads and Hama-Dryads as there is between bishops and archbishops.

If the Freemasons of the present day desire to make use of the symbolisms of the past they are free to do so; but let them beware, in the presence of archæologists, to claim any exclusive title to the origination of symbolism. Symbolism existed before Freemasonry; nor is that Order the only Order which uses it to instil lessons of good into the human mind—to educate the heart—to eradicate vice—to maintain right—to extend the hand of charity, and to put forth foot in the path of progress. Yet it must be admitted that the organisation of the Masonic Fraternity is as perfect as, in the nature of things, it can be. There are two sides to the shield, and the misinterpretation of the outer world reduces the whole question to an equation. In fact, to use algebraic language, Freemasonry and institutions of a similar nature essentially seek the value of x , and desire to raise humanity, in the plenitude of its strength, to the n th power.

CRYPTONYMUS.

THE QUEEN AND THE CRAFT.

BY J. E. CARPENTER, P.M., 284 and 1196.

AIR—"Here's a health to the King, God bless him."

Fill high! for whatever the liquor may be,
The glass at the brim should run o'er,
Let every true brother now take it from me,
If he never drank bumper before.
Though politics ne'er in our meeting have shar'
We still to be loyal endeavour,
So I'll give you a toast that a Mason may boast,
Here's 'the Queen and the Craft for ever.'

The ancients to whom for our science we turn,
Were kings, if our records prove true,
And the Craftsmen who first raised the temple, we learn

Gave homage where homage was due;
Then let us unite, ev'ry true son of light,
(Is there one who'd refuse it, oh never!)
In this the best toast, that a Mason can boast,
Here's the 'Queen and the Craft' for ever.

MASONIC ANTHEM.

BY J. E. CARPENTER, P.M., 284 and 1196.

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen.
May peace and plenty reign,
Through all her wide domain,
May we her laws sustain,
God save the Queen.

Oh! Lord above, who sees
Our hidden mysteries,
On Thee we call;
So rule our hearts that we May in Freemasonry,
Faithful and loyal be,
Oh, save us all.

May Heaven's Great Architect,
Our gracious Queen protect,
Long may she reign;
O'er her Thine arm extend,
May she the Craft befriend,
And we her throne defend,
God save the Queen.

METROPOLITAN CHAPTER OF INSTRUCTION, No. 975.

This Chapter of Instruction so celebrated throughout the Craft for its working, under the able instruction of Companion Brett, who by his able working has perfected more companions to enable them to fill the important chairs, met on Tuesday, May the 18th, at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury. The ceremony of exaltation was very ably worked by Companion S. Foxall, acting M.E.Z.; Nicholl, H.; Tanner, J.; Dr. Woodman, N.; Smith, P.S., who worked the ceremony in a very perfect manner. Companion Tippet acting Candidate. Present Companions Brett (Preceptor), H. M. Levy, Keyworth, C. Hosgood, Barrett, Visitor, Comp. Wm. Day Keyworth, of Hull. The 1st clause of the 1st section was very ably worked by Companion Brett, on the explanation of the jewels and solids. We should recommend all who wish to gain instruction in R. A. Masonry to pay a visit to this excellent Chapter.

BRO. HENRI DEAYTON has been engaged by Bro. Pennoyer, to appear in New York, as Primo Basso of the Riching's Grand Opera Troupe, in September next.

ROYAL ARK MARINERS' LODGE.—A Royal Ark Mariners' Lodge was opened on Monday, 17th inst., within the Lodge Rooms, 170, Buchanan Street. (Holding of the S. Grd. Chap., of Scotland.) The Lodge was opened by M.E.P.Z., Thomas M. Campbell, N.; William Rae, J.; and William McEwan, S., when the following Companions were admitted and instructed in the degree viz.:—Thomas Darwin Humphries, 69; Capt. John A. McDonald, 69; and William Murray, 79.

BABYLONISH PASS OR RED CROSS DEGREES.—A Council of Knights of the Red Cross, consisting of the three points, viz.:—Knights of the Sword; Knights of the East, or Princes of Jerusalem; and Knights of the East and West, was held within the Council Rooms, 170, Buchanan-street. Sir Knight Thomas M. Campbell presiding, assisted by Sir Knights James Balfour, Thomas Gordon, William McEwan, Geo. W. Clarke, David Ramsay, and T. P. Mullins. Companions Neil McCallum, Wm. Rae, Thos. Niblo, Thos. D. Humphries, Capt. John A. McDonald, Edward Crosher, and William Murray, were duly installed as Knights of the above degrees. The ceremony was ably performed, and of a very imposing character.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Friendship, No. 206.—This old and prosperous lodge met on Thursday, May 13th, at four p.m. precisely, at the Ship and Turtle Hotel, Leadenhall-street; Bro. Henry Mann Collier, W.M., in the chair. The lodge being opened and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Mr. Charles Townsend Parsons, the well-known Government contractor, which proved unanimous for his admission, and the W.M. proceeded to initiate his first candidate, which ceremony he performed in the most masterly manner, being ably assisted by his officers, Bro. Alfred Harris, S.W., pro. tem.; Geo. Collier, J.W.; and P. Henry Earles, J.D., who conducted his candidate admirably. Pursuant to notice, the brethren then proceeded to make arrangements for the "summer dinner" and it was finally resolved that it shall be held at the King's Head Hotel, Chigwell, Essex, on the last Thursday in June. After reading and discussing the Grand Lodge and other letters and communications, the lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to the banquet, which was served in Bro. Geo. Painter's usual superb style; then the loyal and Masonic toasts enlivened by harmony, the National Anthem being executed by the Bros. W. and J. Rumsey, and Bro. A. Turner. Several other brethren also contributed, and after passing an evening in such delightful fellowship as is only known to the Craft in general, and this lodge in particular, the proceedings were brought to a close.

Merchant Navy Lodge, No. 781.—This lodge held its usual and last monthly meeting for this season, on Wednesday, the 12th inst., at the Silver Tavern, Burdett Road, Limehouse. The officers present were Bros. E. T. Read, W.M.; Helps, S.W.; Bradbury, J.W.; Armstrong, S.D.; Reeves, J.D.; Daniell, P.M., pro. tem.; Wright, P.M. and Treasurer; Medland, Sec.; and Kellich, Davies, and Branbridge, P. Masters; and many brethren and visitors, amongst whom were Barlow, P.M., Sincerity; Stevens, P.M., Yarborough; Schofield, P.M., Zetland; and Toole, Neptune. The minutes of the last regular lodge were read and confirmed, and the lodge opened in the second degree, and Bros. Evans, Delalle, and Laslitt (of the Zetland Lodge) being candidates for the third degree were instructed and withdrew. Lodge was then opened in the third degree, and the three brethren were raised to the sublime degree of Master Masons. Lodge resumed to the second degree, and Bro. Newport passed to degree of F.C. Lodge resumed to the first degree, and the ballot having proved unanimous in favour of Mr. W. Hallett and Mr. Wakeham, they were duly initiated into Freemasonry. It was then proposed by Bro. Killick, P.M., and seconded by Bro. Daniel, P.M., that a P.M.'s jewel be presented to Bro. Bracebridge, I.P.M., which was carried unanimously. A recommendation was put to, and signed by the officer and members of the lodge, to a petition for relief for a widow of a deceased sea-faring brother. Lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment, and the repast was served in a manner which our Bro. Holt is so deservedly proverbial for, and with which every brother expressed himself as well pleased. After the removal of the cloth the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and duly responded to. Bro. Bracebridge, I.P.M., then proposed the health of their W.M., and in doing so expressed the great pleasure he experienced in seeing him in his present position, and the admirable manner in which he had rendered the whole of the ceremonies this evening. He felt assured the lodge would prosper under his rule. This toast having been enthusiastically responded to by all the brethren present, the W.M., Bro. Read, then said he thanked Bro. Bracebridge, and the brethren generally, for this mark of their approval, and he trusted that when his year of office had expired, he should carry with him the same kind and fraternal feelings that he had at all times experienced from the brethren of Merchant Navy Lodge. "The Newly Initiated Brethren," was then given, and responded to by Bro. Hallett, who expressed his gratification in having been initiated into Masoury by Bro. Read, whom he had known for many years. "The Health of the P. Masters," was given and responded to by Bro. Bracebridge. The visitors' toast was then given, and briefly responded to by Bros. Barlow, Barry, Schofield, Toole, and Stevens; the latter took occasion to express the gratification he felt at seeing the W.M. restored to health, and augured a prosperous year to the Merchant Navy Lodge under his presidency. The "Treasurer and Secretary" was then given, and (the W.M.) took occasion to express the great respect he had for their Treasurer, Bro. Wright, which he was sure was shared in by every brother of the lodge; he felt it was only due to him to say that whatever knowledge of the rituals of Freemasonry he (the W.M.) possessed, he was mainly indebted to Bro. Wright for. The W.M. concluded by passing a high encomium upon his many excellent qualities as a Mason, a friend, and a father; to which Bro. Wright replied in very feeling and suitable terms. The officers' and Tylers' toasts brought this very pleasant evening to a close. Several brethren contributed much to the evening's enjoyment by some excellent songs, particularly by Bros. Stevens, Toole, Wright, Bradbury, &c.

Lily Lodge, No. 820.—On Wednesday se'nnight the installation of Bro. George Townsend as W.M. took place at the Greyhound Hotel, Richmond, the Installing Master being Bro. Wm. Cooper, assisted by Bro. Rogers. After the ceremony the brethren presented the immediate P.M., Bro. Thomas James Carless, with a jewel bearing the following inscription:—"Presented May 12th 1869, by the Lily Lodge, Richmond, No. 820, to Bro. Thomas Carless, I.P.M., as a slight acknowledgment of the valuable and efficient services rendered by him to the lodge, during his past year of office, 1868-1869." At seven o'clock an adjournment was made to the new Banqueting Hall, where a most riche dinner was served to the brethren by Bro. Noyce. The chair was ably occupied by the Worshipful Master, Bro. Townsend. During dessert, the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly honoured. Amongst the visitors was Bro. Colonel F. Burdett, Representative of the Grand Lodge of Ireland at the Grand Lodge of England, and who, in responding to the toast of the Grand Officers, spoke in warm language of the good Freemasonry had wrought in Ireland. There (he said) may be seen men of every shade of political feeling mixing and fraternising as only that brotherly love which fills the heart of every true Mason can understand. In alluding to the manifesto of Cardinal Cullen interdicting the presence of those under his jurisdiction at the grand Masonic ball in Dublin, the gallant brother said he considered it should be called an "Irish bull," for it had done more good than harm to the Craft.—The evening was enlivened by some choice music and singing under the direction of Bro. John Tolley (musical director of the lodge) assisted by Bros. Marriott and Briggs, from the Chapel Royal, Windsor.

Montefiore Lodge, No. 1017.—This new but increasing lodge met on Wednesday, 12th inst., at Freemasons' Hall, the W.M., Bro. the Rev. M. B. Levy, in the chair. A ballot was taken for the admission of the following gentlemen, namely, L. H. Moore, Charles Wertheimer, M. De Groot, and J. Carlebach, and being unanimously in their favour, they were regularly initiated into the mysteries of the Order. Bro. George Moore was raised to the sublime degree of a M.M., by the W.M., in a very solemn and impressive manner; indeed the lodge may congratulate themselves on having so efficient and excellent working officers. The brethren then sat down to a very splendid banquet provided by Bro. Gosden. After the usual formal toasts, the W.M. gave the health of the newly-initiated, to which Bro. Wertheimer responded. Bro. Eskell, P.M., proposed the W.M., expressing the great pleasure it gave him to propose the health of one for whom he had so great a respect, and who had filled that important office for two successive years to the great satisfaction of the brethren.—The W.M. responded in eloquent terms, and then gave "The health of the Visitors," who were Bros. Mann (P.M. 186), Henri Drayton, Le Casse (590), E. Kelley (22), A. S. Pennoyer (U.S.), H. M. Levy (P.M. 188), Worrell (J.W. 795), Pierce (25), D. H. Jacobs (P.M. 27), C. Gammon (W.M. 793), Glaisher (P.M. 382), Coote (P.M. 205), and Reiss (Batavia).—Bro. Mann returned thanks for the visiting brethren in a few but expressive sentences.—There was some excellent harmony by Bros. Henri Drayton, Kelley, H. De Solla, and H. M. Levy, a delightful evening being spent by all present.

Perfect Ashlar Lodge, 1178.—On the 6th inst., Bro. G. Drapper's (Gregorian Arms, Jamaica-street, Bermondsey), this young and prosperous lodge held its regular meeting. In consequence of the unavoidable absence of the W.M., Bro. H. F. Ebsworth, the lodge was opened by Bro. Frederick Walters, P.M. 73, and Secretary of this lodge. There were present Bros. J. W. Avery, P.M., S.W.; J. Donkin, I.P.M.; G. J. Grace, I.G.; J. W. Dudley, D.C.; J. H. Harmsworth, W.S.; J. H. Fudge, G. Drapper, P. Fry, L. Ashton, J. Joseph, T. W. Cox, J. A. Axtell, and several others. Amongst the visitors were Bros. C. R. Sloman (25), M. A. Loewenstark (J.W. 73), G. J. Sayer (1050), and others. The minutes of the last lodge, as well as those of the two emergency meetings, were read and unanimously confirmed. Bro. Charles Deakin, after going through the usual formalities was raised to the degree of M.M., the entire ceremony being given, including a lecture on the tracing-board of the third degree. In consequence of his arduous duties as secretary, Bro. Walters solicited Bro. J. W. Avery, P.M. 619 and S.W. of this lodge, to occupy the Solomonic chair, which he did by initiating Mr. Frederick Ware into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. As might be expected, all the ceremonies were well and ably rendered by the two P.M.'s who did the work. One gentleman was proposed for initiation at the next meeting of the lodge. An apology was received from the candidate for passing, and also from the candidate for initiation. Then came the all-important event of the evening, which was the presentation to Bro. John Donkin, the I.P.M., first with a twelve-guinea Past-Master's jewel, and secondly with a Past-Master's collar and jewel, which was done by the acting W.M. in an able and fluent manner. Bro. Donkin, in suitable terms, acknowledged these handsome presents. The first-named jewel is of elegant design and superior workmanship; made of 18-carat gold and hall-marked, it is about the size of a crown-piece, and bears in front the motto, "Merit alone commands esteem," in a border of raised letters on a frosted ground, and enclosed within a twisted cord. In the centre is the Euclid and square, surmounted by the five points of fellowship on an enamelled ground. The inscription, unlike those of the majority of presentation jewels, is brought, in this instance, in the front, so as to be seen and read easily, and is introduced on the two hangers, or suspenders, in raised letters, as follows: "Presented by the Perfect Ashlar Lodge to Bro. John Donkin, the first W.M.; 1868," and, in order to make the jewel more effective and render it emblematical, the Perfect Ashlar, exquisitely mounted and finished, is attached to the ribbon between the suspenders, and is an exact representative in every respect; and, to make it complete, on the front of the Ashlar is the square and compasses enclosing the number of the lodge, 1178. It was manufactured by Bros. Loewenstark & Sons, Devereux-street, Strand, and is a splendid specimen of their workmanship. On the silver Past-Master's jewel is this inscription, viz: "Presented by the Brethren of the Perfect Ashlar Lodge, No. 1178, to their first W.M., Bro. John Donkin, as a token of their esteem and respect, together with a gold jewel." Bro. John William Dudley, D.C., having withdrawn and resigned as being the steward to represent this lodge at the anniversary festival of the Girls' School, which was to be held on Wednesday, May 12, Bro. F. Walters, P.M. and Sec., proposed, and it was duly seconded and carried unanimously in favour of its being confirmed, that Bro. John Donkin be elected and accepted as the steward to represent this lodge at the Girls' School Anniversary Festival. All the business being ended the lodge was closed, and it was ordered to be summoned to meet on July 1st, at six o'clock p.m. After labour followed refreshment, and the amusement of the evening was increased by the capital improvised verses of Bro. Charles R. Sloman. After a few hours of mutual enjoyment the brethren separated to enjoy "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep."

PROVINCIAL.

HERTFORDSHIRE.—Gresham Lodge, No. 869.—T first regular meeting of this lodge took place at the "Four Swans," Waltham Cross, on Saturday, the 8th instant, at which a large number of brethren attended, amongst whom were Bros. R. Mitchell, W.M.; W. E. Gomperby, S.W.; Dr. R. Bruce, J.W.; H. J. Thompson, P.M., and a founder of the lodge; also, Bros. O. F. Vallentin, Treasurer; C. Swan, Secretary; W. H. Warr, P.P.S. Wks., D.C.; &c. The lodge was opened, and the ballot being in favour of Mr. J. Lewis, he was initiated by the W.M. in a manner that reflected great credit upon the lodge for his assiduous attention to the duties of the chair; after which Bro. Etherington was duly passed to the degree of F.C. This being the period of election for the W.M., a ballot was taken, and passed unanimously in favour of Brother Gomperby, S.W., as W.M. elect, and Brother O. F. Vallentin was unanimously re-elected Treasurer for the eighth time. The brethren then retired to a very nicely prepared banquet, presided over by the W.M., who gave the usual toasts, &c., and every one returned to town evidently pleased by the day's enjoyment.

LANCASTER.—Rowley Lodge, No. 1051.—An emergency meeting of this lodge was held on Friday last, the 14th inst., at the Masonic Rooms, Athenæum. The chair of K.S. was occupied (in the unavoidable absence from home of the W.M.) by W. Bro. Dr. Moore, P.M., Prov. G. Sup. of Works, who was supported by the following officers and brethren:—Bro. Bagnall, P.M., as I.P.M.; Bros. Hall, S.W.; Mercer, J.W.; J. Hatch, S.W. 281, as S.D.; Ley as J.D.; Taylor, I.G.; Armistead; W. J. Sly, E.A.P.; Watson, Tyler. The circular convening the meeting having been read, and other business transacted, Bro. W. J. Sly was passed to the degree of F.C. by the Acting W.M. Other business connected with the lodge was then transacted, and the lodge closed in due form.

BISHOP AUCKLAND, DURHAM.—Wear Valley Lodge, No. 1121.—The regular meeting of this lodge was held at the Savings' Bank on Friday evening, May 14th. In the unavoidable absence of the W.M., Bro. the Rev. G. P. Wilkinson, Bro. G. Canney, M.D., P.M., presided, and was supported by Bros. G. Stillman, S.W.; J. Wyld, J.W.; T. B. Thwaites, Treas.; W. Pawson, Hon. Sec.; J. Robson, I.G., &c. Visitor: Bro. John Bowes, 129, 148, 1,051, 1,250, P.M., P.Z., P.P.G.D.C.; P.P.G. Reg. Cumberland and Westmorland. The lodge was opened in due form, when the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. One brother was passed, and two raised by the acting W.M., in a correct and impressive manner, under the deaconate of Bro. John Bowes. The lodge was duly closed.

IRELAND.

BANDON.—The Ancient Boynes.—A lodge of emergency assembled at the lodge rooms, Devonshire Arms Hotel, on Wednesday, May 12, at 7 p.m., to elect officers for the ensuing six months. The attendance was large, and included Steward R. Trevilian, W.M.; Williams French, S.W.; Robert Sutton, J.W.; R. Sargeant Topham, S.D.; Carroll Dawson, J.D.; Matthew Lee, I.G.; Joseph Morris, G. Hagarty, W. Belcher, E. Olliffe, W. Joyce, R. W. Doherty, T. Ruddock, R. Payne, R. Bright, Alexander Appleby, Wingfield Corley, Walter Bullen, W. Waugh Fuller, Thomas Peters, S. Cotterall, J. Strahan, Wilson, Bevin, Henry G. Bennett, &c. Brother Williams French was unanimously voted to the chair, and the other officers all got a step forward. Bro. Wm. Belcher was elected I.G. Mr. Benjamin Dawson was balloted for, admitted, and initiated to the degree of Entered Apprentice. Before the termination of the usual routine of lodge business, it was proposed, seconded, and carried with all the honours, "That our Right Worthy and Worshipful Master be presented with a silver tea service, in recognition of the many valuable services he has rendered 'Old 84' during the last thirty years;" and a committee was appointed to carry out this desirable object.

BELFAST.—Lodge of Truth, No. 22.—An emergency meeting of this old and flourishing lodge, was held in the Masonic Rooms, Donegal-place, on Tuesday evening last, 18th inst., in the absence of the W.M., Bro. J. Gelston, P.M. occupied the chair, the Lodge being opened on the E.A. degree, Mr. Robert Reid was initiated in the same by Bro. Gelston. The Lodge was then passed to the F.C. degree, when Bros. Thos. Craig, Henry Semmend, and James Brown, who had served a lawful time as E.A.'s, and having gained sufficient proficiency in the same were passed to the degree upon which the lodge was working by Bro. John Ireland, P.M., 59. The lodge was then raised, and Bro. Cherry was in a very solemn and impressive manner raised to the sublime degree of M.M. A number of visiting brethren were present during the evening. The proceedings terminated shortly after 11 o'clock, when the lodge was closed in due form.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

British Chapter, No. 8.—This chapter held a convocation on Friday evening, May the 7th, under the presidency of Companions Jabez Tepper M.E.Z., Companion John Thomas Griffith, (M.D.) H., and Companion John Braddick Monckton, J., when the M.E.Z. ably worked the Pedestal and gave the charges to the Companions. The summer banquet was fixed for the last day of June at the Crystal Palace. The Companions afterwards had their usual sumptuous banquet at the tavern; but many of them were absent, in consequence of an entertainment given by one of the members of the Lodge, and which the M.E.Z. was prevented from attending owing to his duties at the Chapter.

Panmure Chapter, No. 720.—The quarterly Convocation of this Chapter was held at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, whither it had been removed from Balham, on Monday, the 10th inst., when a good attendance of Companions gave much interest to the proceedings. The Chapter was opened by the M.E.Z., Companion J. Thomas, supported by nearly all his Officers. Bros. Samuel Haddock, P.M., Charles Milner Haddock, P.M., Abel Perrot, B.A., Christopher R. Weguelin, and Joseph Nixon, were exalted into Royal Arch Masonry. Companion Samuel C. Davison, B.A., P.H.D., P.Z., No. 198, was elected a joining member. Companion John Read, P.Z., then most ably installed the principal officers for the ensuing year, viz:—Companion H. C. Levander, M.E.Z., Companion E. Worthington, H., Companion J. M. Gates, I. The remaining officers were appointed as follows, Companion James Stevens, P.Z., Scribe E., Companion Harvey, N., Companion J. Nunn, P.Z., Treasurer, Companion H. Smith, P.S. The Chapter being then closed, the Companions adjourned to a most excellent banquet at which the usual Royal Arch toasts were given and heartily responded to, the evening's entertainment being interspersed with some capital singing. We congratulate this Chapter upon the great advantages they have secured by their removal from so distant a neighbourhood as Balham to a locality so much more easily reached by its members and visitors.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—Chapter of Fortitude, No. 279.—A quarterly convocation of this chapter was held at the Freemasons' Hall, on Friday, the 15th inst., among the Companions present were W. Kelly, P.Z. and P.G.H., as M.E.Z.; W. Wear, M.E.Z. as H.; H. Kinder, P.Z., as J.; Rev. John Spittal, H. and M.E.Z. elect; L. A. Clarke, J. and H. elect; and various other officers and companions. The minutes having been read and confirmed on the opening of the chapter, a board of installed principals was formed, when the Rev. Comp. Spittal, was presented, and was regularly installed into the Chair of M.E.Z., by Comp. Kelly, and had the various charges, &c., addressed to him. The installation of the other principals (Comps. L. A. Clarke and G. H. Hodges,) was unavoidably postponed; the former not arriving until after the board of installed principals was closed, and the latter being in Paris. The Comps. being admitted, a ballot was taken for Bro. Edwin J. Crow, of St. John's Lodge, No. 279, and for Bros. J. G. F. Richardson, and F. Parsons, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 523, who were duly elected. The following Comps., who had been elected at the last convocation, were invested as the officers for the ensuing year:—W. Kelly, P.Z., and P.G.H.; Treas., C. Stretton, E.; S. S. Partridge, N.; G. Toller junr., P.S.; E. W. S. Stanley, A.S.; C. Bembridge, Janitor. Bro. Crow being in attendance was then admitted, and was regularly exalted; the ceremony being, for the first time, most efficiently performed by the Rev. Comp. Spittal, M.E.Z.; and Comp. Toller, P.S. On the conclusion of the ceremony, Comp. Kelly delivered the Historical, Symbolical and Mystical Lectures. The Chapter was closed in solemn form and with prayer, and the Comps. adjourned to refreshment, and spent an hour or two very pleasantly under the presidency of the newly-installed M.E.Z., the highly respected Vicar of St. Andrew's, Leicester, an active Mason, and a son of the late Sir James Spittal, formerly Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and Deputy Grand Master of Scotland.

LANCASTER.—Rowley Chapter, 1051.—The regular meeting of this Chapter was held at the Masonic Rooms, Athenæum, on Monday, 17th May. There were present the following Companions: Dr. Moore, M.E.Z.; Bagnall, H. Mason, J. Hall, Scribe E.; Whimfray, as Scribe N.; Mercer, P.S.; Bell, Assist. Soj.; Taylor, and Watson, Janitor. The minutes of the last meetings were read, confirmed and signed by the principals. The following Candidates for exaltation were then balloted for, and unanimously elected:—Bros. C. S. Hope, Linderley Lodge, No. 3074; Bros. W. N. Kilburn; Edmund Simpson P.M.; and William Heald, all of the Lodge of Fortitude, Lancaster, No. 281; and Bro. Heald being in attendance, was duly exalted to the degree of Royal Arch. There being no other business before the Chapter, it was closed in due form.

MARK MASONRY.

METROPOLITAN.

New Lodge of Mark Master Masons.—A meeting of this lodge was held at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, on Tuesday evening, the 11th inst., under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. Thomas Meggy, and which was well attended, every officer being in his place, and there being several visitors and candidates for advancement. The lodge having been duly opened, and minutes read, ballots were taken for five out of seven candidates proposed, all of which proved unanimous. Bros. A. L. Irvine, P.M., the W.M.; James Stevens, P.M., the S.W.; and Eugene Cronin, the Treasurer of the Macdonald Lodge (Craft), No. 1216, were then introduced, and duly advanced to the degree of Mark Masters. We hear it is the intention of these brethren to form a new lodge of Mark Masters in connection with their most excellent Craft Lodge, the high repute of which is now attracting considerable attention amongst metropolitan Masons. Bros. Driver and Ewins were also subsequently introduced, and duly advanced. Bro. T. Meggy, the W.M., then, in a most able manner, installed his successor, Brother Warr, who appointed his officers according to rota, and the brethren, on the lodge being closed, adjourned to refreshment, the usual toasts being given and responded to; and a most satisfactory evening having been spent by all present, the company separated.

PROVINCIAL.

MELTON MOWBRAY.—Howe Lodge, No. 21.—The annual festival of this lodge was held at the George Hotel, on Thursday, the 13th instant, when, among the members present, were Bros. Rev. W. Kay Robinson, W.M.; Rev. W. Langley, S.W. and W.M., elect; H. Douglas, J.W.; H. Sharman, Sec., Bright, Park, Markham, Mann, Selby, Ferneley, Turville, and others. The Provincial Grand Master attended the meeting for the purpose of installing the W.M. elect. The lodge having been opened by the W.M., and the minutes read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Bro. Rippin, of the Rutland Lodge, No. 1130, who was duly elected, but was prevented attending for advancement. Bro. Kelly, P.G.M., then took the Chair, and, having addressed the preliminary questions to the W.M. elect, the brethren below the rank of P.M., retired, and a board of installed masters having been opened, the Rev. Bro. Langley was installed in due form, after which, on the return of the brethren, he was proclaimed and adulated. The concluding address having been delivered, the W.M. proceeded to appoint and invest his officers. Votes of thanks having been passed to the P.G.M. and the I.P.M., the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to the banquet.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.
KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Temple Crossing Encampment.—The Knights of the above assembled on Thursday, the 13th, at their field of encampment, Horns Tavern, Kennington, under the banner of the E.C., Sir Knt. W. N. Rudge, Prov. Grand Captain, when the Em. Sir Knt. W. F. Mitchell, Prov. Grand Captain, in his usual impressive style inaugurated and enthroned Sir Knt. Major H. F. Smith, Past Prov. G. Capt., as E.C., who appointed and invested as his officers, Sir Knt. Biron 1st Capt. Sir Knt. George Harrison, Prov. Grd. Capt. of Lines, second Capt.; Sir Knt. Dr. Lillie, Prov. Grd. Sub-Prior, Prelate; Sir Knt. R. Farran, Prov. Grd. Registrar, Registrar; Sir Knt. W. F. Mitchell, P.E.C. as Expert pro tem; and Sir Knt. Vesper, Prov. Grd. E., as Equerry. The Knts. then adjourned to one of Bro. Wittel's elegant banquets. The only visitors on this occasion were the Em. Sir Knt. Blankin, Dep. Prov. Grd. Commander, and Sir Knt. Chas. Swan, Past Grand D.C. We cannot omit noticing Bro. Whittel's constant attention to the requirements of his Masonic patrons, he is now building a new and convenient ante-room, with store room for Masonic furniture, &c.

RED CROSS OF ROME AND CONSTANTINE.

IRELAND.

St. Patrick's Conclave.—On Thursday evening, May 10th, a meeting of this Conclave was held at the offices of Eminent Sir Knt. Woodward. Present the Illus. Sir Knt. Horner, Inspector General for Norfolk; Eminent Sir Knts. McGovern, Forsythe, Carleton, and Woodward; Sir Knts. Watcock, Styles, Scott, Edwards, and Bouchier. A College of Viceroy's was opened, and Sir Knts. Bouchier and Edwards were duly consecrated Priests Masons. A Council of Sovereigns was then opened, and Sir Knts. Edwards and Bouchier were duly enthroned as Sovereigns and Prince Masons. The Conclave was then opened in due form, and the Illustrious Sir Knt. Inspector General for Norfolk placed Eminent Sir Knt. Thomas McGovern, on the throne of Constantine, stating that pro tem he commissioned Sir Knt. McGovern, to act as Deputy Inspector General for Norfolk. The following Officers were then appointed to act in the meetings of the Order in Dublin. V. Em. Sir Knt. Forsythe, Eusebius; Em. Sir Knt. Woodward, Senior General; Em. Sir Knt. Edwards, Junior General; Em. Sir Knt. Bouchier, High Prelate; Em. Sir Knt. Carleton, Treasurer and Recorder; Sir Knt. Scott, Prefect; Sir Knt. Watcock, Standard Bearer; Sir Knt. Molloy, Herald; Sir Knt. Styles, Sentinel. It was resolved: That as the Grand Imperial Council granted a special jewel, that a golden shamrock be embroidered in the Aprons, Sashes, and Ribbon of the Knts. of the Saint Patrick's Conclave. It was resolved: That the Most Illus. Grand Sovereign, Lord Kenlis and Ill. Sir Knt. Col. Burdett, be invited to dine with the Dublin Knts. It was resolved: That Illustrious Sir Knt. Horner, and Eminent Sir Knts. McGovern, Forsythe, and Woodward, form a committee to prepare bye-laws. It was resolved: That in future two guineas be charged on the Installation of each Knight. It was resolved: That the names of all Candidates for installation at the next meeting be sent to Em. Sir Knt. Carleton fourteen days from this date. It was also resolved, That immediately the charter is granted each Sir Knt. is expected to procure his proper regalia. The Conclave was then closed in due form. The Charter for this Conclave has since been granted, and we congratulate the Order upon its successful debut in the sister isle.

WHITTINGTON LODGE OF INSTRUCTION
No. 862.

We paid a flying visit on Thursday, the 13th inst., to this Lodge of Instruction, which is now held at the Crown Tavern, High Holborn. Bro. W. Long, W.M. 435, occupied the chair, and assisted by Bros. Littaur and Berger, worked several of the sections in an admirable manner. About 25 brethren were present during the evening.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

[Announcements of Births, Marriages, and Deaths relating to the Craft, or their families, will be inserted, free of charge, if properly authenticated.]

BIRTH.

GOOCH.—On the 11th instant, at Drummond-cottage, Bournemouth, the wife of Bro. George Gooch (Sec. 195) of a son.

DEATH.

MUNTZ.—Accidentally killed by a fall, at Guernsey, Bro. William Henry Muntz, son of the late G. F. Muntz, Esq., M.P. for Birmingham.—[Brother Muntz was initiated in the Doyle's Lodge of Fellowship, No. 84, Guernsey, on the 12th July, 1867, and installed as a Knight of the Order of Constantine at the formation of the Doyle Conclave, No. 7, on the 20th July, 1868. As a token of sorrow for his melancholy end both the Lodge and Conclave were draped in black at their meetings last week.—Ed. F.]

THE NEGRO AND THE CRAFT.

FOR some time past our brethren in America, and especially in Massachusetts, have been debating and agitating the question, "Can a negro be a Freemason?" and "Are the members of coloured lodges in the United States entitled to recognition as brethren?"

These who take the negative side in the debate affirm that the negro lodges are clandestine and spurious, inasmuch as they are not chartered by any of the existing Grand Lodges in America. An unprejudiced statement of the facts of the case may therefore be deemed opportune, and, from the broad humanitarian point of view, we are satisfied that their disclosure will add another laurel to the chaplet which adorns the brow of our venerable Mother Grand Lodge, which has ever been the champion of toleration, of justice, and of freedom.

In the year 1784 the Grand Lodge of England, in the exercise of its undoubted powers, granted a charter to Bro. Prince Hall and other coloured men, residents in the City of Boston, and State of Massachusetts, empowering them to meet as a regular Lodge, under the distinctive title of "The African Lodge, No. 459."

The Lodge was established, and worked successfully for many years under Bro. Hall, who appears to have been a thorough Mason, and a man of great intelligence. It is well known that, after the conclusion of the War of Independence, and, in one instance, during its progress, the Provincial Grand Lodges in the United States disclaimed all allegiance to the foreign grand bodies from which they derived their existence; and, in taking this step, they were perfectly justified, not only by the exigencies of the political situation, but by every principle of international Masonic law. The question, however, arises, and Canada furnishes recent illustrations of the doctrine, "Are lodges to be considered spurious or clandestine because the members prefer working under their original warrants from a foreign Grand Lodge to joining a newly erected Masonic jurisdiction in the state or dominion in which such lodges may be situated?" or, in other words, "Was the African Lodge bound to surrender its warrant from the Grand Lodge of England, and to apply to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts for authority to work as a lodge?" We contend it was not, and hold that the Alma Lodge at Quebec, and other lodges in Canada, owing allegiance at the present day to the Grand Lodge of England, notwithstanding the existence of the Grand Lodge of Canada, might, with equal reason and equal justice, be denounced as illegitimate. We have now before us a charge delivered by Bro. Prince Hall, Right Worshipful Master, to the African Lodge, on the 25th June, 1792, from which we deduce the melancholy conviction, that if our coloured brethren had, at that period, sought recognition or support from the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts they would not have obtained it, so powerful was the demon of prejudice in those days, and so invincibly rooted was the senseless antipathy to the oppressed children of Africa. We must next consider a point of vital importance, and, if our negro brethren can offer a satisfactory solution, we apprehend that their position as Masons will be legally demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt.

In the first place, "Can they prove the continuous existence of the African Lodge from its formation in 1784 down to the union of the two Grand Lodges of England in 1813, at which latter period the lodge was undoubtedly borne upon the roll of regular lodges? and has the lodge been working independently ever since?"

As far as our own information extends we believe that the lodge has had an uninterrupted existence since 1784, and its non-affiliation to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts does not in anywise affect its Masonic status or legitimacy; indeed, its right to exist independently is illustrated by the fact that, in Boston itself, the St. Andrew's Lodge, originally chartered by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, for many years remained aloof from the territorial jurisdiction of Massachusetts, until, at length, its members sought admission into the State fold, and were joyfully received, without any ugly question being raised as to the legality of their previous position.

The whole subject in dispute, we greatly fear, is the eligibility of negroes to the privileges of the Craft, and upon this view of the question we side at once with the men of colour. Caste has been beaten down by the influence of Freemasonry, liberty of conscience has been secured by the steady adoption of Masonic principles, and shall we now deny to men of different hue a participation in those rites which are symbolical of the thousand triumphs of right over wrong, or those glorious teachings which proclaim to all mankind brotherly love, relief, and truth? Happily, on this question, the whole moral power of English Freemasonry is in accord with the action taken by our forefathers in 1784, when they chartered the African Lodge, and the claims of our coloured brethren in the United States will never be ignored by English brethren, or, we may add, by any "true and worthy Freemason, of whatever country, colour, or clime, throughout the universe."

Chapter Centenaries.—We hear a great deal now-a-days about lodges celebrating their centennial anniversaries, but as yet I have not heard of any chapters having claimed the privilege of wearing the centenary jewel. What are our friends of the Chapter of the Nativity, No. 126, Burnley, doing, for instance, or those of the Cana Chapter, No. 116, Colne, both of which, I have an impression, were founded in 1769?—ANTIQUARIUS.

The Rite of Misraim.—A brother lately enquired in THE FREEMASON respecting the rite of Misraim. Any "Tailleur" of the "Eccossais" degrades will give him the signs, words, and "attonnements," and a work is, I believe, published in New York which fully explains the bizarre pretensions of the system. There are only two members of the rite existing in Ireland, and it may be said to have died a natural death in that country.—VIATOR.

EXCERPTS FROM A MASONIC SCRAP-BOOK.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 131, TRURO.

No. 1.—MASONIC KNIGHTS TEMPLARS.

Although the degree of Masonic Knights Templars is virtually a Christian organization, and recognizes the "Prince of Peace" as its Chief Captain, the following letter from its first Grand Master to worthy knights, is confirmatory of the fact that the Order had, notwithstanding, a considerable amount of warlike enthusiasm about it, which, though contrary to the spirit of Jesus Christ, was after all but proving them to be genuine followers of the old Knights Templars, whose delight was in battle, and whose courage was only surpassed by their zealous attachment to Christianity.

Extract of a circular letter from the Grand Master of the Religious and Military Order of Knights Templars in England, to the Chapters of that Confraternity.

Dear Brother and Knight Companion,—As the nation is preparing to guard against an invasion of our enemies, if they should have the temerity to make an attempt, it is become my duty, at this important crisis, to request and require that such of you as can, without prejudice to your families, do hold yourselves in readiness (as Knights Templars) to unite with, and be under the command of the officers of the military corps stationed in your respective counties, as may be most convenient, taking the name of "Prince Edward's Royal Volunteers." When the important moment arrives, I shall offer my services in the navy or army; and, whenever I have the honour to be received, shall inform you of my address and, although, we are prevented by adverse circumstances from assembling together, where I might have had the honour and happiness of commanding in person, yet our hearts will be united in the glorious cause, in conformity to the sacred obligations we are under. Let our prayers be addressed to the Throne of Grace, that, as Christ's faithful soldiers and servants, we may be enabled to defend the Christian religion, our gracious sovereign, our laws, liberties, and properties, against a rapacious enemy. Let the word of the day be "The Will of God;" and let us remember that a day—an hour—of virtuous liberty, is worth a whole eternity of bondage.

The Knights Companions are required to wear the uniform of the corps in which they serve as volunteers, with the Cross of the Order of the Knights Templars, on a black riband between two button-holes, on the breast of the waist-coat.

Your faithful Brother and Knight Companion,
 THOMAS DUNCKERLEY (G.M.)

The following is the copy of a letter from Redruth, in Cornwall, in answer to the preceding.

Southampton, April 11th, A.D. 1791. A.O., 676.

Most Eminent and Supreme Grand Master,—Agreeable to your desires, signified to me by your esteemed favour of the 11th ultimo, I held a Conclave of the Order of Knights Templars in our Field of Encampment, at this place, on Monday the 28th ultimo, where I laid your letter before the Knights Companions. I have the happiness to inform you that I found them steadfast in their religious principles, and unanimous in their loyalty and patriotism to their king and country. Two of the Knights Companions are officers in the Penryn Volunteer Corps, and I will follow your directions in wearing the Cross of the Order, &c. The rest of the companions, residing at a distance from any established corps, will be ready on any emergent occasion to unite with them; and they have entered into a subscription (as Knights Templars) to be applied towards the defence of the country; and as there is a general subscription at Bodmin, for the county, and several volunteer corps on the coast for local defence, we beg your opinion and advice how to apply the money we have subscribed.

I am (M.E. and S.G.M.),

Your faithful and affectionate Brother and K.C.,
 Redruth, 3rd May, 1794. J—K—
 Thos. Dunckerley, Esq., Hampton Court Palace.

MASONIC ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—The last meeting of the session will be held on Friday evening, 28th May, at eight o'clock, when a paper will be read by Brother Hyde Clarke, Hon. Treasurer, on "The History and Relations of Freemasonry in France." Masons not members may apply to Brother W. T. Marchant, Hon. Sec., 106, Great Russell-street, W.C.—Advt.

INSTALLATION FESTIVAL OF THE GREY FRIARS' LODGE, READING, No. 1101.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

The Installation Festival of this highly flourishing Lodge, established some four or five years ago, took place on Tuesday under most auspicious circumstances. The Lodge, held in the Masonic Hall, Geffries-road, was attended by nearly 70 of the brethren. The chief business was the initiation of Mr. Alfred Gooch (son of Bro. Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart., M.P. and Prov. Grand Master), and the installation of Bro. R. C. Hurley as W.M. Bro. W. Biggs, of Reading (whose labours and enthusiasm in the cause of Masonry are well known), performed both ceremonies most impressively. The musical arrangements for the day were under the direction of Bro. Tolley, P.P.G.O., assisted by Bros. Marriott, Briggs, and Barrett, of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor, and afforded much pleasure to the brethren.

After the W.M. had been duly installed, he proceeded to invest the following officers of the Lodge: Bro. J. Weightman, S.W.; Bro. G. Chancellor, J.W.; Bro. H.J. Simpson, Chaplain; Bro. J. Greenfield, Secretary; Bro. E. J. Tabor, S.D.; Bro. Godsmark, J.D.; Bro. J. T. Brown, I.G.; Bros. Stranson and Freeman, S. A Past Master's Jewel was presented to Bro. Alexander Beale, I.P.M., in recognition of the zeal, efficiency, and courtesy which he displayed during his year of office.

In the evening a banquet took place at the George Hotel, and the room was almost inconveniently full. The banquet was admirably served by Bro. George Pontin. The chair was taken by Bro. R. C. Hurley, W.M., of the Grey Friars' Lodge, and amongst those present were Bros. Sir D. Gooch, Bart., M.P., P.G.M., the Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, Bart., P.G.C., J. R. Stebbing (Southampton), P.M., P.G.D., of England; R. J. Spiers (Oxford), P.G.S.B., the Rev. R. J. Simpson, P.G.C., E. G. Bruton (Oxford) P.M., S. Whittey, D.P.G.M. for Wilts, R. S. Hulbert (Basingstoke), P.P.G.S.W., Hants, F. A. Bulley, P.M., W. Biggs, P.M., G. Botly, P.M. (414), John Dew, Basingstoke, P.M., J. W. Blowers, W.M. (414), J. W. Wynne, P.M., John Ellis, P.M., A. Sellar, P.M., James Harris, W.M., W. W. Wynne, W.M. (101), Lovatt, (528), J. W. Hounslow, J. W. 414, C. W. Wyndham, P.M., P. Stokes, S. (414), R. Cave, Arthur Welch, Alfred W. Gooch, G. Anns, R. C. Shettle, H. P. Dowson, R. Bradley, S.D. (414), F. C. Warner, F. D. Awbery, W. C. Jameson, F. Warrcott, W. Simpson, G. Parfitt, W. A. Danett, J. W. (1044), &c.

The W. M. first proposed "The Queen and Craft," remarking that as loyal citizens and as good Masons they would drink the toast with the greatest pleasure and the most hearty enthusiasm.

The W.M. next gave "The Right Hon. and the Most Worshipful the Grand Master, and the Grand Officers of England, past and present." The Earl of Zetland had now held his high position as a Grand Master for a quarter of a century. It was thought that at the termination of the present year he would retire from that position, and should he do so he would carry with him the gratitude and the respect of the Craft.

Bro. SPIERS, D.P.G.M., (Oxford), responded on behalf of the Grand Officers. They had reason to feel proud of being connected with such a body, and they had especial reason to be proud of their Grand Master, whose service to the Craft had been so great, and so numerous for many years. (Cheers.) The position which the Earl of Grey and Ripon, their Deputy Grand Master now held, showed that they were able to attract to their order men eminent in the State. The President of the Council (Lord de Grey and Ripon) had worked as a Mason with that thoroughness, for which our countrymen were distinguished. Mr. Dodson, Chairman of the Committee of the House of Commons, had also taken office in Grand Lodge. The Prov. Grand Master (Sir Daniel Gooch,) also though his duties were so multifarious, though he had charge of that wonderful undertaking, the Great Western Railway Company, though he was one of those who were engaged in casting a girdle round the Earth, and though he took part in the legislation of the country, had yet found time to devote to the interest of Masonry. (Cheers.) In conclusion Bro. Spiers expressed the gratification it had afforded him to be present, and observe how admirably the work was done in Greyfriars Lodge. He hoped the Lodge would continue to prosper. (Cheers.)

The W.M. rose and said the next toast might be truthfully designated the toast of the evening, it was "The Health of the Provincial Grand Master, Bro. Sir Daniel Gooch." Loud cheers. He, (the W.M.) regarded it as a very great privilege to have the honour of occupying the chair on the occasion of the Provincial Grand Master's first visit in that capacity to the town of Reading (cheers), and in the name of the Grey Friars Lodge, he begged to give him a hearty welcome (cheers), and to thank him, not only for being present, but also for giving his name as a honorary member of the lodge. (Cheers.) For the last ten years, ever since the resignation of the late Marquis of Devonshire, the provinces of Berks and Bucks, had been represented by the Grand Registrar. Br. McIntyre had discharged the duties of the office with great ability, but he had other counties to attend to as well as a great deal of other Masonic business. They hailed, therefore, with peculiar pleasure, the appointment of the office of so excellent a mason and so good a man as Sir Daniel Gooch. (Loud cheers.) He, (the W.M.), sincerely hoped that it might please the Great Architect of the Universe long to spare the life of their distinguished Brother, Sir Daniel, in health and strength. (Loud cheers.)

The P.G.M., SIR DANIEL GOOCH, who on rising was most warmly cheered, said that he was extremely obliged to the brethren for having received the last toast in a manner so cordial and so kind. It had been to him a great pleasure to be present that day. He could assure them that he had not taken upon himself the responsibilities of the office to which the Grand Master had appointed him without a thorough determination to perform his duties in a way which should, he hoped, meet with their approbation and respect. (Cheers.) In order to do his duties to the satisfaction of the province and himself, he felt that he must have extended to him that Masonic charity for his short comings, and that cordial support in his efforts, which he was confident he should not fail to receive. (Cheers.) Under such circumstances he believed that the province would continue to prosper, and would hold no mean position amongst the provinces of the land. (Cheers.) But the present had been to him a most gratifying occasion for a personal reason, because he had seen his own son initiated into Masonry. (Cheers.) It was many years since he (Sir Daniel) was initiated and he was pleased to say he had never regretted that step. (Cheers.) The ceremony had made a deep impression on his mind, and he did not doubt that it had also done so on the mind of his (Sir Daniel's) son, seeing that that ceremony had been performed by Bro. Biggs with the utmost accuracy of language, and the most perfect correctness of feeling. (Cheers.) Now that his son had been initiated, he (Sir D. Gooch,) felt that as his father, and also as his brother (cheers and laughter), he should be able to teach him some of the mysteries of science. He (the P.G.M.) would conclude by thanking him for the kind invitation they had sent to him, and for the hearty welcome they had given him. He hoped to visit the other lodges in the province, and make himself, as far as he could, acquainted with the whole Craft.

P.M. ELLIS gave the next toast, "The Very Worshipful the Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, Bart., the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and Grand Officers of the Province, past and present." Sir John Hayes held a distinguished position in the province, and he was also a member of the Grand Lodge. He had shown himself fully equal to the requirements of his office, and his qualifications were so high that he had filled, in the absence of Lord Zetland, the office of Grand Master. (Loud cheers.)

Bro. Sir J. W. HAYES, P.G.C., in responding, said that it ought to be the laudable ambition of all the Brethren to aspire to hold office in the Provincial Grand Lodge. There were not many offices at the disposal of the Provincial Grand Master; but he was quite sure that Sir D. Gooch would take every means to ascertain who were the most fit to fill the offices. (Cheers.) He begged to propose "The Right Worshipful P.G.M., the Deputy P.G.M., and the Grand Officers of the Province of Wilts." They were very much obliged to the Province of Wilts for sending to this Province the P.G.M. elect (cheers and laughter); it was a very great kindness, and the Province of Berks and Bucks would endeavour to show itself grateful. (Cheers and laughter.)

Bro. S. WITTEY, D.P.G.M. for Wilts, in responding to the toasts, alluded to the loss which that province would sustain in consequence of the services of Sir D. Gooch being transferred to another province. Brother Wittey then referred, in very complimentary terms, to the working of the Greyfriars Lodge, and expressed the pleasure which it had afforded him to be present.

Bro. the Rev. R. J. SIMPSON, Grand Chaplain, said that as "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and therefore they would allow him, before he proposed the toast entrusted to him, to digress for a minute or two. He could not but express the deep satisfaction which he felt at seeing the admirable way in which the work of the lodge was done, and he could not but think that the manner in which the ceremony of installation had been performed by Bro. Biggs must have impressed them with a sense of the generous sentiments and the lofty principles of the brotherhood to which they belonged. He must thank them for having again elected him as Chaplain to the lodge. He felt this honour the more because he was not able to do more than to attend, as he always did with great pleasure, their annual gatherings. He begged now to propose "The Masonic Charities." He was pleased to see this toast take so good a position in the programme of the evening, coming as it did even before the proposal of the toast of the W.M. of their own lodge. This evidenced that they thought of the Masonic Charities first and of themselves afterwards, which was only what was to be expected of a lodge which had sent a steward to the Girl's School and festival, and had sent that steward tenth on the list in respect of the amount of the donations entrusted to him. (cheers.) He had taken the opportunity on a former occasion, and he would now do so again, of recommending those who were interested in those Masonic Charities to go and see them themselves. He believed that the Girls' School was the first school of the kind in England. For the Boys' School a sum of £12,000 had been raised through the munificence of Masons, and the school was most admirably conducted. There was also provision made for the comfort and the support of aged Freemasons. He believed that if they could only read the history of some of these children and of their families; if they could trace the career of some of these poor aged Masons—(what struggles they had had, what reverses they had experienced, what distress they had endured)—they would learn to value even more highly than at present the work which these charities were doing. They had reason to believe that in no case had the children, educated in these schools, turned out otherwise than well. This was a most eloquent fact. It showed that the money was not misspent, and that the labour was not thrown away. And when Brethren were enjoying themselves in social harmony he trusted they would never forget the claims of the poorer brethren, for Masons should never cease to remember that charity was the sun, the centre around which all Masonic action should revolve. He hoped that they would not only hear of these charities, and read of them, and see them, but that they would value, admire, and support them. (Loud cheers.)

Bro. STEBBING responded on behalf of the Masonic Charities in an eloquent speech.

Bro. Sir D. GOOCH next, in complimentary terms, proposed the health of the W.M., Bro. Hurley.

The W.M. suitably responded.

The health of the Installing Master, Brother W. Biggs, was next proposed, and responded to by that gentleman in suitable terms.

One or two other toasts having been drunk, the proceedings terminated. The banquet was acknowledged to be one of the most agreeable and successful gatherings of the kind ever held in Reading.

The whole arrangements were carefully and completely made, and admirably carried out.

LODGE OF BEVEVOLENCE.

The monthly meeting of the Lodge of Benevolence, was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 19th instant, under the presidency of Brother J. Newton Tomkins, P.G.D. Seventeen cases were relieved to the extent of £150, and 3 were recommended to Grand Lodge for grants of £30 each. Among other Grand Officers present, we noticed Bros. J. Nunn, J. Brett, J. M. Clabon, J. Hervey, J. Smith, W. Ough, E. Busher, Rev. C. J. Martyn, E. H. Patten, J. Savage, and J. Udall.

PLANTAGENET PRECEPTORY OF INSTRUCTION.

A monthly meeting was held at the Lyceum Tavern on Thursday, the 20th inst. Sir Knights Major-Genl. G. B. Munbee, Hon. E. Roper-Curzon, J. G. Marsh, R. W. Little, A. J. Lewis, T. Smale, J. Brett, J. Mayo, J. Boyd, G. S. Statea, C. Haigh, F. Walters, Dr. Bringloe, W. Adams, D. R. Still, and T. Cubitt were amongst those present. The ceremony of installation was ably worked, Sir Knight Lewis being the presiding officer. Four new members were elected.

DOMATIC CHAPTER OF INSTRUCTION, No. 177.

This Chapter of Instruction was formally reopened on Saturday, the 15th inst., at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, under the auspices of Comp. R. Wentworth Little, as Preceptor, who officiated as M.E.Z; assisted by Comps. C. Hosgood, as H. J. Nunn, as J.; W. Dodd, S.E.; H. Webb, S.N.; J. Mayo, P. S.; J. Brett, P.Z.; President of the Metropolitan Chapter of Instruction, E. Clark, H. Allman, J. G. Marsh, W. West Smith, &c. The ceremony of exaltation was rehearsed, after which Com. Brett, worked the first clause of the first section. Five new members were elected, and the officers chosen for the next meeting on the 29th inst., were Comps. Hosgood, Z.; Nunn, H.; Clark, J.; and Dodd, P.S. The Companions residing in the Southern districts of the metropolis, have now therefore an opportunity of obtaining instruction in the Royal Arch ceremonies, in their own locality, and we hope they will attend the Domatic Chapter of Instruction in large numbers.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—I am glad to observe that Bro. Hemsworth has led the way to an exposé of the shameful manner in which the stewards and their guests were treated at the recent Girls' School Festival by the incompetent persons who apparently had charge of the festival arrangements. I can bear testimony to the fact that I had to leave my seat to go in quest of wine for the brethren at my table, when upon handing my card to the waiter in charge of the wine, the fellow absolutely refused to attend to it, and told me in a most flippant and insolent manner that "he knew nobody and would know nobody," although at the same moment he supplied another steward whose name I am prepared to state, with all that he required. I am bound to add, and I do so with pleasure, that Bro. Gosden, the Manager, when appealed to in the course of the evening respecting the scanty supply of wine, very readily did all in his power to remedy matters, but it is too bad that the stewards should be placed at the mercy of his petty subordinates, and insulted when asking for what is fair and proper.

I take this opportunity of stating that the amount of my list was incorrectly announced at the Festival as £47 5s. 0d., when it was in reality £55 13s. 0d.

Yours fraternally,

THOMAS CUBITT,
P.M., and Steward, Bedford Lodge, No. 157.

CELESTIAL MYSTERIES.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

SIR,—Though not a brother, perhaps you would allow me the liberty of saying my say anent Mr. Henry Melville's discoveries, to which it appears you have commenced to call public attention. First, allow me to remark that I do not think your defence of the Grand Registrar legitimate, inasmuch as that he appears to have been commissioned by the D.G.M. to examine into the worth and value of the so-called mysteries, and that after a cursory review of the same he ignored their worth. Now, it appears to me that if any records ever kept by men are of value, these that Brother McIntire ignores are of the highest. Mr. Melville appears to possess a key to the groundworks of all establishments and to all sublimary customs; and, I am told, can give chapter and verse for the foundations of every religion. I say that I am told so, as I have not had the opportunity of making Mr. Melville's acquaintance, and only know him through the representations of a mutual friend; but though I differ from some of his statements (for instance, his assertion that Sagittaries is a white horse, though he opens the year at black midnight), yet so high is my opinion of the value of the mysteries, that, if the Freemasons decline to receive them, I shall be only too happy to offer £20 towards a public subscription, which I trust will be raised, to purchase them from Mr. Melville; and I see no reason why the subscription should not run up to fifty, or even a hundred thousand pounds, when it becomes known that the different peoples of the earth are entitled to hold peacefully their several religions, and that this position can be proven by Brother Melville's discoveries.

Allow me, Sir, the honour of remaining,

Your obedient servant,

A TUDER.

MASONIC RITUAL.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—Your readers will find little of either pleasure or profit in a war of mere contradiction between "Leo" and myself, on a matter which any well-informed Mason is equally qualified to decide. I referred to the Ritual of Craft Masonry as being preserved "by tradition only," and I conceive, in spite of "Leo's" repeated contradictions, that I have amply justified my assertion. However, for "Leo's" satisfaction, and to close an unprofitable controversy, I beg respectfully to refer the question to you. The correspondence is before you, and I shall be greatly obliged by your expressing your opinion on the point at issue in the columns of your paper.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Very fraternally yours,

DELTA.

THE ROMISH ANTI-MASONIC BOGLE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

SIR AND BRO.—I fear your correspondent "Anti-Humbag" as he appears in yours of the 8th, labours under the disadvantage of not being fully informed on the state of Masonry in Ireland, and (as I presume he is a Mason), will be glad to learn that although Cardinal Cullen did publish a manifesto interdicting any one under his jurisdiction to attend our late Masonic Ball, that those of his flock who have the honour to be Freemasons, had from their experience good sense to know that his eminence, although he may control them in his own circle of rights, could not affect them as Freemasons, and that, therefore, there was not "an universal skedaddle," but that many good and worthy Roman Catholic brethren and their families did attend to enjoy the festive scene; 'tis true some outsiders may have invented imaginary sick aunts or may have suddenly have afflicted an old grandmother with imaginary rheumatics as an excuse to avoid making "one of the party;" but even those were very few, and many of our most anxious working stewards were from our Roman Catholic brethren, whose families were heard to express their admiration for Masonry, and to wonder how so respectable an old gentleman could express a sentiment antagonistic to such splendour, order, and regularity. I have thus far intruded on your space fearing our brethren elsewhere might think Masonry in Ireland, and especially in Dublin, was screwed together so loosely as that any one man not in authority could interfere with its wisdom, strength, and beauty. Our position will be readily understood when I state that, independent of Cardinal Cullen and "all his merrie men," we mustered 3,000 at our Ball, and by the reception given to our royal guest, proved that Masons have for a motto, "Fear God, honour the King," and that peace, love, and charity, are amongst our precepts.

Again, at the presentation of premiums to our orphan girls a week later, we numbered 5,000. These little facts will explain to "Anti-Humbag" that no matter how we may be classed amongst Fenians, Ribbon-men, &c., it has not impeded our progress, although I am free to admit that the sanction of His Eminence might make us even more numerous but less respectable. As to "A.H.'s" allusion to the "Latini crucis," I think that good taste ought to prevent the introduction of sectarian matters into Masonic writings. Such us strictly forbid—and we cannot forget that amongst us are many brethren Israelites, whom we respect; also I object to the emblems of Christianity being burlesqued by being made to represent the acknowledgment to the Cardinal for "success" he never attained.

Yours faithfully,

Dublin, May 12th, 1869. T. B., P.M., 171.

MASONRY AND THE NUMBER SEVEN.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—There seems at present to be a strong wind blowing towards our Masonic camp from the mystical world. We have been favoured with a current of "Masonic celestial mysteries," and now, as above, we have also had a taste of "Masonic numerical mysteries." These might have been of some use had whatever was intended to be deduced from them been brought to a definite point, or to some logical conclusion, or had they been laid down so as to properly illustrate some definite or particular Masonic idea; but no! the subjects were mysterious, consequently they, I would suppose, served their purpose if they mystified their readers; they might therefore perhaps pass as being interesting, not instructive. After perusing them, I can only exclaim, with Dominie Sampson, "Prodigious!"

In regard to "The scale of the Number Seven," Bro. "Cryptonymus" says: "I can only beg my readers to ponder well the profound symbolism contained in the above table." I can see nothing particularly "profound" in it—e.g., "seven planets" are mentioned; but there are more than "seven planets" in our Solar system, and the "Moon" is not a Planet. "Seven animals" are named; but why give the "Lion" and the "Cat" when they are both of the same species? "Seven members" are given; but what about the omission of the tongue, the stomach, the liver, &c.? and as to the "name of God with seven letters," I find a writer saying—"The Assyrians called him Adad; the Egyptians, Amun; the Persians, Syre; the Greeks, Theos (the th forming one letter); and the Latins, Deus." All four letters.

As to my remark about the "Moon" not being a planet, "Cryptonymus" may say that the ancients only knew of the above as "the seven planets;" but I answer, supposing that to be the case, what about the "seven members?"

Then, coming to more immediate Masonic matters, we are told "it has always been within the power and discretion of the Master for the time being to ordain who shall bear these select and honourable burthens." Now, that may be the case in England, but it is not so in Scotland, where all the officers are elective, only in some lodges the R.W.M. has the privilege of appointing either his S.W. or his Depute. I shall not say which system may be the best, as both may have particular advantages. Again, the Secretary and Treasurer are set aside, not being "contemplated in the original plan." That must surely be a mistake, as the Treasurer, e.g., is one of the most important officers, seeing that in all well regulated societies the labourer is worthy of his hire, which he of course cannot receive unless money for that purpose be collected and taken charge of by some one. However that is simply a suggestion; but I may observe that last century some lodges had no such officers as the "two deacons," having, e.g., a Master; S.W.; J.W.; S. St.; J. St.; Secretary, Treasurer, and Tyler; in all eight. I might suggest the following arrangement as perhaps a giving-in to the number seven idea. Master (1), Wardens (2), Deacons (3), Secretary (4), Treasurer (5), I.G. (6), Tyler (7). However, in looking at it from a Scottish point of view, I would ask what authority there is for saying that "a Senior and a Junior Deacon" date from "Operative Masonry?" The old Operative Scottish Lodges, if I remember correctly, had only one Deacon, who was the Master. "Dekin" being the title of the principal office-bearer, therefore, it would seem that the selection given by "Cryptonymus," instead of being an old "landmark," is simply a new arrangement of last century; however, if Bro. "Cryptonymus" can give the name of any lodge which had that arrangement of officers, and set them to work, previous to A.D. 1700, I shall be glad to hear of it.

I am, yours fraternally,
LEO.

PRESENTATION OF ADDRESSES TO SIR R. A. S. ADAIR, BART., R.W.P.G.M.

A large gathering of the Brethren of the Craft belonging to the Lodges in the province of Suffolk met at the Masonic Hall, Ipswich, on Saturday last, for the purpose of honouring their highly-esteemed P.G.M., Sir Robt. Alex. Shafte Adair, Bart., A.D.C. to the Queen, &c., &c. Several addresses of condolence on the death of the P.G. Master's father, and congratulation on the accession of the present Baronet to the family titles and estates, had been voted to him by the Lodges of the province, but it was thought that a meeting of the representatives of each Lodge should be held at Ipswich, when all the addresses should be presented to their worthy chief in person.

This arrangement was carried out as above, when between sixty and seventy Brethren assembled in the beautifully decorated Lodge-room, which was on this occasion greatly admired by those who saw it for the first time since its completion.

Amongst those present we observed many present and past Provincial Grand Officers, as well as many of the present Worshipful Masters of Suffolk Lodges.

The R.W.P.G.M. having been escorted from the reception room by his P.G. Officers, to the Hall was received by the Brethren with the usual Masonic salute, and having taken his seat on the dais, the presentation of the addresses, accompanied by suitable observations from each brother having charge of the same, were presented in the following order:—

From the Officers of the Prov. Grand Lodge, by the W.D.P.G.M.

Unity (Lowestoft), by Bro. Major Allez, P.P.S.G.W.
Doric (Woodbridge), by Bro. Grissing, P.P.J.G.W.
British Union (Ipswich), by Bro. Roby, W.M.
St. Luke's (Ipswich), by P. M. Davy.
Virtue and Silence (Hadleigh), by Bro. Pettit, P.P.G.S. of W.

Perfect Friendship (Ipswich), by Br. Staddon, W.M.
Prudence (Halesworth), by Br. Strathern, P.P.J.G.W.
Phoenix (Stowmarket), by Bro. Freeman, P.G. Treas.

Fidelity (Framlingham), by Bro. Jennings, W.M.
Waveney (Bungay), by Bro. Able, W.M.
Prince of Wales (Ipswich), by Bro. Rev. R. A. Sanderson, P.P.G.C., W.M.
Royal St. Edmunds (Bury St. Edmunds), by Bro. Thompson, W.M.

Brother Norman, P.P.G.O., Norfolk, in the absence of the P.G. Organist, kindly presided at the organ.

At the conclusion of the presentation the R.W. P.G.M. briefly addressed the Brethren, thanking them for their sympathy in the loss he had sustained, and for their good wishes towards him, and he trusted that he should be able to faithfully discharge the duties of the responsible position he had been called upon to fill.

The P.G.M. was then escorted to the banqueting room, where an elegant collation had been set out, the tables being very nicely decorated with flowers. A massive silver fountain (which had been kindly lent for the occasion by Bro. Callaway), occupied the centre of the table, throwing out a jet of "Masonic Bouquet."

The D.P.G.M. occupied the chair, and was supported by about fifty Brethren.

The repast was considered by the Brethren to be the choicest seen for some time, and was supplied by the brother appointed by the "Prince of Wales" Lodge, whose members erected the Hall.

The Brethren having done justice to the good things, and grace said by the P.P.G. Chaplain Bro. Sanderson, the Chairman gave the usual loyal and masonic toasts, followed by the health of their honored guest, which was suitably responded to by the P.G.M. Several other toasts followed, and it was a general remark that the assembly had been a most successful one.

THE ORIGIN OF FREEMASONRY AND MR. DENNEHY.

The following letter appeared in The Irish Times of the 5th instant:—

(To the Editor.)

"Sir,—Mr. Cornelius Dennehy has done his best to convince the public that on the above subject, at least the oracle has spoken all throughout his letter, which was evidently prepared as an appendix to certain denunciatory epistles. At the outset Mr. Dennehy says, 'It will be a surprise to some Freemasons to be told what was really the origin of Modern Masonry.' No doubt they have been surprised and amused too. Surprised at Mr. Dennehy becoming a public instructor on such a subject, and amused at his cool assurance in supposing that his unsupported assertions will be taken as historic facts. Of course Mr. Dennehy has a right to form, hold, and propagate his opinions on this and on other subjects. He is a J.P., a very useful T.C., and a most respectable man, but if he knows anything he must know that all these things combined do not suffice to constitute him an authority on history. He has written as such, disdaining to give any reference by which his statements can be verified. His assumption and opinion are valuable in their way. But opinion and fact are two very different things. The two points in Mr. Dennehy's letter are—first, that Modern Masonry was founded in the seventeenth century by one Elias Ashmole, a trooper in Cromwell's army, and a dabbler in astrology. Second, that the guilds of Freemasons which undoubtedly existed in the early ages had nothing in common with Modern Masonry. If I prove the latter assumption to be false, Mr. Elias Ashmole may safely be left to take care of himself. 'The Priests of Dionysius,' says Dr. Mackey in his valuable work on Freemasonry, 'having devoted themselves to architectural pursuits, established about 1,000 years before the Christian era, a society of builders in Asia Minor, who are styled by the ancient writers 'the Fraternity of Dionysian Architects, and to the society was exclusively confined the privilege of erecting temples and other public buildings.' This is the origin of those 'travelling guilds,' the existence of which at an early date is conceded by Mr. Dennehy. That they had something in common with modern Masonry is evident, for instance, 'the more opulent were sacredly bound to provide for the exigencies of the poorer brethren, a leading characteristic of Masonry as it exists now. They were divided into lodges, and governed by wardens and masters, just as the Masons of to-day, and in their ceremonial observances used many of the implements which are still to be found among the Order, and above all, they used a universal language, by which one brother could distinguish another in the dark as well as in the light, which is also one of the attributes of Masonry of the present time. This Order existed at the time of the building of the Temple, and numbered amongst its members Hiram, the widow's son, to whom Solomon entrusted the superintendence of the workmen of this great work. Their architectural priests mingled with Jewish workmen, and invited them to join the Order. This was done for long after the completion of the work and dispersion of the builders. We find the Order existing in Judea under the name of Essenian Fraternity. From Judea it is said to have been introduced into Greece by the Grecian sage Pythagoras. Whether this be accurate, or whether the frequent and continued communication between Europe and Palestine led to its introduction, I cannot say, but it is certain, and Mr. Dennehy admits it, that at a very early period bodies of travelling Masons existed on the continent for a long time. They received the protection and enjoyed the patronage of the church and the nobility, until the former, becoming alarmed at the increase of their numbers and the extension of their privileges, began to persecute them, which eventually led to their repression. Many lodges, however, had been established in Great Britain, notably those at York, in England, and Kilwinning, in Scotland, from which places the Order has continued to be disseminated from that day to this. At York, in 926, Prince Edwin assembled the English Masons, and constituted the first English Grand Lodge. From this assembly, convened a long time before Mr. Elias Ashmole was born, all the existing English and American lodges derive their authority. This is the real history of Freemasonry, of which Mr. Dennehy has given a burlesque. As to the reasoning which follows the 'historic narrative it is equally fallacious. No Freemason ever said that Protestantism required to be aided by Masons in teaching the fundamentals of religion and morality. The idea is a creation of Mr. Dennehy's brain—a mere play of fancy. Again, Mr. Dennehy says he is convinced all secret societies have been a curse and a calamity. Assertion again convinced. What evidence is Mr. D. prepared to show in support of his indictment of Freemasonry? Where is the mischief that has ever been wrought? Where the calamities that have followed in its train? Mr. Dennehy knows he cannot lay any charge against the order, therefore he simply says—I am convinced! I don't care about a man being convinced. I want to know that which convinced him, to get at his facts. The real truth of the matter is that every tree must be judged by its fruits. If the fruit be good, let the tree be carefully tended; if the fruit be bad, let the tree be hewn down and cast into the fire. Secret societies are not crushed amongst the peasantry unless they are treasonable societies. Therefore, the answer to Mr. D. is, that no one asks to crush secret societies as such. Fancy the Foresters, the Oddfellows, the Templars, the Rechabites, and other societies being crushed because they are secret—the idea is ridiculous. Mr. D. may rest assured, when he expresses his convictions that the time has arrived for the abolition of all secret societies, that he has the luxury of living before the age. The time has not yet come; and although he prefers to let his good actions be seen, he must remember there are still a few men in the world who prefer to do good by stealth, and who blush to find it false.

ROYAL MASONIC BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

We are informed that the next Anniversary Festival of this deserving Institution; will be held on the 26th January, 1870, under the presidency of the R.W. Bro. Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart., M.P., Provincial Grand Master for Berks and Bucks. In the meantime the names of brethren desirous of acting as Stewards at the festival, will be thankfully received by Bro. Wm. Farnfield, P.A.G. Sec., and Secretary to the Institution, Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, or by Bro. Jas. Terry, the Collector, 10, Symond's Inn, Chancery-lane.

The increasing number of applicants, and the urgent nature of their claims, render it most desirable that even greater liberality should be extended by the Craft to all our Masonic charities, and when the helpless orphan, or the way-worn pilgrim appeal to us for aid, who that is worthy of the name of a Mason will refuse his mite?

METROPOLITAN.

Panmure Lodge, 723.—The annual meeting and Installation Festival of this Lodge, took place on Monday last at the Ballham Hotel. After the passing of two E.A.'s by the retiring W.M., Br. Gates, the chair was taken by Bro. Thomas, P.M., the father of the Lodge, to whom was presented for Installation Bro. J. B. A. Wolpert, S.W., the W.M. elect. The ceremony was admirably performed, the orations and proclamations given with great effect, and producing an excellent impression upon the minds of all present and especially many young masons who had never before witnessed the interesting and solemn rite. By special request Bro. Hodges, P.M., officiated as acting Secretary, and Director of Ceremonies, and Bro. Gates, P.M., and Bro. Frances also rendered valuable services. A vote of thanks to Bro. Thomas, for the able discharge of the duties of Installing Master, was entered on the minutes, and the newly installed W.M. closed the lodge in the various degrees in a manner which corroborated the statement current that he was a most accomplished and correct worker. At the banquet which followed due justice was given to his merits, as well as to those of his immediate predecessor Bro. Gates, and the Past Masters represented by Bro. Thomas and Hodges. Bro. Frances P.M. responded for the Visitors, and Bro. Young S.W. for the newly appointed officers.

PROVINCIAL.

OVER-DARWEN.—Lodge of Harmony and Industry, No. 381.—On Thursday last a lodge of emergency was held for the purpose of affording the brethren an opportunity of attending the funeral of the late Bro. Ralph Ellison, who had been a member of the lodge for nearly forty years. The lodge was opened in due form by the W.M., Bro. Benson Wood, when the dispensation was read granting the privilege to the brethren of joining the cortege in the regalia of their respective ranks, after which a procession was formed of about fifty brethren; amongst whom were the officers of the lodge, viz.: Bros. Benson Wood, W.M.; Geo. Hargreaves, S.W.; Dr. Stephens, J.W.; Dr. Wraith, S.D.; D. Ainsworth, J.D.; Geo. Smalley, P.M., Treas.; Bentley, P.M., Sec.; L. Roberts, P.M., Director of Ceremonies; G. Wood, P.M.; and Statter, I.G. Bros. Eastwood, P.M.; Thorner, P.M., and others, Perseverance Lodge, Blackburn. Bro. Townley, P.M., and others, Fidelity Lodge, Blackburn. Bro. S. P. Bidder, P.M., Manchester. Bro. Rev. Mr. Hughes, Vicar of Tockholes, &c. On arriving at the residence the procession filed off in the usual manner, to allow the W.M. to visit the bereaved relatives, when the line was reformed and proceeded to St. Thomas's Church, where the burial service was most impressively read by Rev. Bro. Hughes. The thirty-ninth Psalm and "Vital Spark" were effectively rendered by Bros. Denis, Towers, Birkett, and Hindley, assisted by Mrs. Howarth, who, at the grave, also sang "Rest in Peace," amid the almost breathless attention of a large concourse of the inhabitants who had assembled to witness the ceremony. oration by Bro. Hughes, and the invocations by the W.M., were the subject of deep admiration and comment. Returning, the brethren on reaching the lodge room again filed off on each side of the street and uncovered, allowed the carriages containing the relatives to pass through on their way home. The WHITHAVEN.—Lewis Lodge, 872.—The brethren of this lodge met on Monday evening, May 17th, at 7 o'clock, in the Freemasons' Hall, College-street, W.M., John Spittal taking the chair of King Solomon. Brother J. Spittal was supported by his officers Brother Walker Whittle, S.W.; Brother Robert Foster, J.W.; Lancelot Hugh Ellis, S.D.; Brother E. G. Hughes, Prov. G.T., Secretary; Brother William Gill, I.G.; Brother George Fitzgerald, T. Present, Brother C. Morton, P.P.S.G.W.; Brother J. Stade, P.P.G.S.; G. W. Kenworthy, P.P.G.J.D.; Brother Cooper, P.P.G.O. The Lodge was duly opened, and the minutes of the previous meeting were read by the Honorary Secretary, Brother E. G. Hughes, and confirmed. Brother George Harker was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. Brother C. Morton proposed that Brother J. Slade be appointed Treasurer, which was seconded by Brother Foster, and carried by the Brethren unanimously, he was duly invested. W.M. J. Spittal read a letter from Brother Little, resigning the office of Almoner, which place will be filled up by the Committee there being no other proposed. Brother C. Morton read a petition in favour of establishing a lodge at Egremont, to be called the "Kenlis Lodge," he to be W.M. for the first twelve months. Brother Spittal proposed that the petition read by Brother C. Morton be entertained, which was seconded by Brother Foster, signed by the Wardens, and carried unanimously. Brother Spittal proposed that a letter of condolence be sent to the widow of our late esteemed Brother Fisher, Treasurer of 872, which was seconded by Brother Kenworthy, and carried unanimously. The Lodge was closed with the usual solemnities.

ROYAL ATHELSTAN LODGE, No. 19.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

The last meeting of the season of the Royal Athelstan Lodge, No. 19, was held on Thursday, the 13th of May, at the Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, City. Bro. T. H. Potter, W.M., presided; J. Pollard, S.W.; W. Williams, J.W., Starling, Treasurer; Bywater, P.M. and Secretary; Stevens, S.D.; Gale, P.M. and Father of the Lodge, Director of the Ceremonies; Daley, Tyler; and the following other members of the lodge:—Bros. Campion, P.M.; Nicholson, J.P.M.; John Savage, P.G.D.; George Rice Loveday, P.M.; Fox, P.M.; Palmer, P.M.; Pound Cox, P.M.; Stone, P.M.; Dix, P.M.; Harker, Henry Black, Watkins, Medley, J. Harker, Levenson, P.M., Horner, Maughah, Phillips, Dr. Whitmore, Simpson, and a number of visitors, amongst whom were Bros. Murray, D. Grand Master for China; Clabon, P.G.D.; Caulcher, P.M.; Whitley, D.P.G.M. for Wilts; Williams, 753; Ward, Apollo, 305; H. Thompson, P.M., 177 and 1158; C. E. Thompson, S.D., 1158; &c.

The lodge having been opened in due form and with solemn prayer, the minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

A Brother was brought forward for raising, and having answered the usual questions, the lodge was opened in the Third Degree, Bro. Savage, P.G.D., taking the chair, and the brother was in a most impressive manner raised to the degree of M.M.; and in the course of a long experience we never saw that important ceremony performed in a more correct, impressive, or careful manner, and it truly afforded to aspiring Masons, candidates for the Master's chair, a pattern how that ceremony ought to be performed. The whole of the ritual was given without abridgement, and several veteran Masons expressed the high gratification they had experienced in seeing Freemasonry carried out in all its original purity by so worthy a member of the Royal Athelstan Lodge. After some other business the lodge was closed in due form, and with solemn prayer.

An excellent dinner followed, and at its termination, on the withdrawal of the cloth, the W.M. proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts. In reference to the Most Worshipful Grand Master, the Earl of Zetland, he said he hoped the success which had attended his reign over the Craft would be continued for many years to come.

The W.M. proposed "The health of the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers." He coupled with the toast the name of Brother Clabon, P.G.D.

Bro. CLABON, P.G.D., returned thanks on behalf of the Deputy Grand Master, and said he deserved all that was said of him. He thanked the brethren for the welcome he had received; and as he had not for some time past been in the habit of visiting lodges, if he was treated in the same way he had been received that evening he hoped to be a frequent visitor.

The W.M., in a complimentary manner, proposed "The health of Bro. Murray, the District Grand Master for China," and congratulated the lodge in having for the second time been honoured by his presence.

Bro. MURRAY, in a very eloquent speech, returned thanks for the honour conferred upon him, and assured them on his return to a distant land he should cherish with the deepest feelings of affection the welcome he had received from the brethren of the Royal Athelstan Lodge, believing the seed they had sown would produce abundant fruit, and if any heart could beat in unison with theirs that heart was his own.

Bro. GALE, P.M., proposed "The health of the W.M.," and alluded to the time when he saw him initiated in the lodge, and how he had marked his after career.

The W.M. returned thanks, and expressed his determination to do all in his power to merit their approbation.

Bro. SAVAGE, P.G.D., having been utmost with the W.M.'s gavel called upon the brethren to fill bumpers to the toast he was about to propose, which having been done, he turned to Brother Bywater, P.M. and Secretary, and thus addressed him:—Bro. Bywater, I have been requested by the W. Master and my brethren of the Royal Athelstan Lodge to acknowledge publicly, on their behalf, the many kind services you have rendered the lodge, and to present to you a memento of their esteem and regard. Though not eloquently, yet sincerely, shall I discharge this pleasing duty. It might, indeed, have fallen into abler hands, but at least I have this advantage, that I am able to speak of you from the time of your admission into the lodge; nor will I deny that, having been on terms of intimacy with you for many years, without any differences to mar our friendship, this occasion is to me a very pleasurable one. You were initiated into our lodge, No. 19, in the year 1846, by my esteemed but now departed brother, Charles Robb, the then W.M., and having subsequently filled several of the offices, it fell to my lot, in 1853, to install you into the chair. With great ability, and with much courtesy, you discharged the duties of W. Master, as several of us present to-day can well remember, and from that time you continued to win your way in the lodge, and to increase the esteem in which you were justly held. Having done us good suit and service, after the lapse of another ten years you kindly undertook the duties of honorary secretary. How well and how ably you have discharged those duties I will not enlarge upon, because the fact is patent to us all. But our recent centenary meeting has put the crowning stone upon your services, and its great success, without a breakdown of any kind—gratifying to us all, and spontaneously acknowledged by our numerous and distinguished guests on that joyous occasion—was largely due to your judicious counsels and valuable assistance. No marvel, then, that your brethren should desire to record their feelings in something more substantial than words; and none will say nay when I assert that we are about to do the right thing to-day. (Brother Pound, P.M., here read the vote of thanks engrossed on vellum, and the inscription on the clock, which was as follows:—"This timepiece was presented by the Royal Athelstan Lodge of Freemasons, No. 19, to Brother William Matthew Bywater, P.M. and Hon. Sec., in token of the high esteem in which he is held by his brethren, and of their best wishes for his happiness and prosperity. 13th of May, 1869.") Brother Savage then proceeded: "The foundation of this testimonial was a vote of the lodge by acclamation; it has been supplemented by the subscriptions of 50 members of the lodge, and as a matter of fact none have refused to co-operate. The vote of thanks is expressive of the feelings of your brethren towards you. The timepiece will bring with it many pleasing reminiscences, for memory loves to dwell on the sunny spots of the past. But to your thoughtful mind it will not only be suggestive of by-gone days, but also of the present and the future. While it will call to remembrance happy years of the past, it will mark the stirring present, and point to a hopeful future. Though not with your bodily eye, yet with your mental vision you will readily read, as if engraven on that timepiece, the trite, yet expressive words, "Tempus fugit," conveying to your mind a moral beautiful couched in the language of one whose wisdom is immortal in our Craft, "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." And now, my good Brother, it only remains for me to present you, in the name of my brethren of Lodge No. 19, this vote of thanks (handing it to Brother Bywater), and to beg your acceptance of this timepiece in acknowledgment of your many—very many—kind services, and to mark the esteem and respect in which your brethren hold you. I have also to express their fervent hopes that there yet remains for you a lengthened career of usefulness and prosperity. Long may your life be spared, as a blessing to your family and as an ornament to your lodge; and when at a distant day the hands of that timepiece shall no longer move visibly before your eyes—its bell shall cease to strike its dulcet tones upon your ear—when, in the overruling Providence of the Great Architect of the Universe, you shall be summoned to doff this mortal coil, and to quit the Royal Athelstan Lodge, may you leave behind a name fragrant with praise—an example worthy of imitation—and receive for yourself a better and more enduring reward. (Loud and prolonged cheering.)

Bro. BYWATER returned thanks in a short but expressive speech.

A Past Master's jewel was presented to Brother Nicholson, I.P.M., which he gratefully acknowledged.

The health of the officers was proposed, for which Bro. Pollard, S.W. returned thanks, remarking that when he came to the chair, he should have great difficulty in following the talented brethren, who had preceded him. On the part of the officers he thanked them for that kind acknowledgment of their services. Other toasts were given, and the very harmonious meeting was brought to a close at an early hour.

ON WEDNESDAY, the 12th instant, Mrs. Stirling gave another of her readings, from Shakespeare's play of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. Mrs. Stirling's acting is well known on the stage, but her really beautiful reading took the audience by surprise, and she received from an enthusiastic and fashionable audience several well-merited rounds of applause. In addition, the whole of Mendelssohn's music was performed by the members of the Orchestral Union, by artistes from the Royal Italian Opera House, the solo parts being sung by Miss Fanny Holland and Miss Marie Stocken, with a very excellent choir of ladies. The whole was under the direction of Bro. F. Kingsbury, the well-known talented conductor, who has the entire management of these charming readings. Another reading is announced for June 11th, in the evening, from Shakespeare's Play of "The Tempest."

DRUMBO CHURCH ERECTION FUND,
 ONTARIO, CANADA.

AN examination of the official papers set forth below will sufficiently explain, and, I venture to think, justify, my bringing to the notice of my fellow-churchmen the object which I have at heart in visiting England at this time.

The Mission of which I have the charge, situated at Princeton, in the diocese of Huron, covers a very large area and is, at present, provided with but one church—a provision utterly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of the district.

This church, a very small one (being but 80 by 60), I was enabled to build by the proceeds obtained from lectures delivered by me, and appeals made by sermons and other agencies, supplemented by free gifts of sand, stone, and other material, most liberally contributed by the members of the mission, who gave, in addition, their personal services, both in digging the foundations and bringing to the site the whole of the material required—a distance, in some cases, of twelve miles.

Before leaving Princeton I had the great consolation of seeing this church (St. Paul's) free from debt, and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

My present object is to provide a second church for Drumbo, the northern portion of my mission, distant about seven miles from St. Paul's Church, Princeton.

In this district are many settlers, mostly emigrants from Great Britain, who are very anxious to have the great blessing of a place of worship in their midst, and who, although too poor to help much financially, are both ready and willing to contribute, as their neighbours in Princeton have done, in labour and material.

The amount required for this good end is but trifling, £1,200 to £1,500 being amply sufficient (with the labour and material given) to provide a suitable church and minister's house; and I appeal with all confidence to God's stewards of wealth in England who are happy in the full enjoyment of all Christian privileges, to extend to their fellow churchmen for whom I plead, the blessings so liberally poured out upon themselves.

BRO. HENRY BARTLETT,

(Incumbent Princeton, Canada), Senior Curate (pro tem)
 St. George the Martyr, Southwark.

March 17th, 1869.

From His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

"I have examined the papers of the Rev. Mr. Bartlett which seem to me to be quite correct.

(Signed) "A. C. CANTUAR.

"Lambeth Palace, February 27th, 1869."

From the Lord Bishop of Huron.

"The Rev. Henry Bartlett has been, since his ordination Missionary at Princeton, in the Diocese of Huron. Within the limits of his extensive Mission, the village of Drumbo is situated. Mr. Bartlett is desirous to erect a church in this village, and, the people being very poor, he is under the necessity of seeking assistance from Christian friends for that object. He is going to England to visit his friends, and he hopes to be able to interest some of those to whom the Lord has committed the stewardship of the goods of this world, to aid him in the good work which he has in hand. I would recommend this cause to the liberal assistance of members of the church.

(Signed) "BENJAMIN HURON.

"See House, London, Canada, July 10th, 1868."

From the Ven. Archdeacon Utterson, Commissary of the Diocese of Winchester.

"The Rev. H. Bartlett, of Princeton, Upper Canada, appears to be well accredited; and I shall rejoice to hear that he has been successful in his endeavours to raise funds for the erection of a church at Drumbo.

(Signed) "J. S. UTTERTON, Archdeacon of Surrey.
 "Farnham, August 21st, 1868."

The "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge,"

At its Monthly Meeting, held December 1st, 1868, made, at the suggestion of the Standing Committee, a grant of £25 towards the above object, on the condition that the residue be raised.

The undermentioned gentlemen have kindly consented to receive contributions towards the "Drumbo Church Erection Fund," and an acknowledgement of all subscriptions received will be forwarded to the Times, by the Lord Bishop of Huron, immediately after my return to Canada (D.V.) in June next:—

Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler, & Co., Bankers, 50, Cornhill; Br. John M. Clabon, P.G.D., P.M., 235, Z, 2, 21, Great George Street, Westminster; and Br. Edward Bullock Watts, 412, Rolls Chambers, 89, Chancery Lane.

[Br. Henry Bartlett, G. Orator of Canada, stands well with the Order there, comes fully accredited, and highly recommended, therefore, the object of appeal being a very deserving one, we hope the brethren will support the Rev. Brother with liberal contributions.—Ed. F.]

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]

The return of Zerubbabel and the liberated captives to Jerusalem is thus exhaustively described by the celebrated American Mason, Dr. Albert Mackey, in his "Book of the Chapter:"—

"We have now arrived at that portion of the history of the Babylonish captivity which is allegorized in the concluding ceremonies of the Royal Arch Degree. And here we may incidentally observe that the same analogy which exists in the Master's degree to the ancient mysteries, is also to be found in the Royal Arch. The Masonic scholar, who is familiar with the construction of those mysteries of the Pagan priests and philosophers, is well aware that they inculcate by symbolic and allegoric instruction, the great lessons of the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul. Hence they were all funereal in their character. They commenced in sorrow, they terminated in joy. The death or destruction of some eminent personage, most generally a god, was depicted in the beginning of the ceremonies of initiation, while the close was occupied in illustrating, in the same manner, the discovery of his grave, the recovery of the body, and the restoration to life eternal. The same religious instruction is taught in the Master's degree. The evidence of this fact, it is unnecessary for us here to demonstrate. It will be at once apparent to every Mason who is sufficiently acquainted with the ritual of his Order.

"But is it not equally apparent that the same system, though under a thicker veil, is preserved in the ceremonies of the Royal Arch? There is a resurrection of that which has been buried—a discovery of that which had been lost—an exchange of that which, like the body, the earthly tenement, was temporary, for that which, like the soul, is intended to be permanent. The life which we pass on earth is but a substitute for that glorious one which we are to spend in eternity. And it is in the grave—in the depths of the earth—that the corruptible puts on incorruption, that the mortal puts on immortality (I. Corinth. xv. 53), and that the substitute of this temporal life is exchanged for the blessed reality of life eternal.

"The interval to which we alluded in the last lecture, and which is occupied by the captivity of the Jews at Babylon, is now over, and the allegory of the Royal Arch is resumed with the restoration of the captives to their home.

"Five hundred and thirty-six years before the Christian era, Cyrus issued his decree for the return of the Jews. At the same time he restored to them all the sacred vessels and precious ornaments of the first temple, which had been carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, and which were still in existence.

"Forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty of the Jews repaired, in the same year, from Babylon and the neighbouring cities to Jerusalem. The leaders of these were Zerubbabel, Joshua, and Haggai, of whom, as they perform an important part in the history of this event as recorded in the Royal Arch, it is incumbent on us to speak more particularly.

"Zerubbabel was, at the time of the restoration, the possessor of the regal authority among the Jews, as the prince of the captivity and a descendant of the house of David, and as such he assumed at Jerusalem the office of king. He was the son of Shealtiel, who was the son of Jeconiah, the monarch who had been deposed by Nebuchadnezzar and carried away to Babylon. He was the intimate friend of Cyrus, and, indeed, it is supposed that it was principally through his influence that the Persian monarch was induced to decree the liberation of the captives.

"Joshua, the High Priest, was, like Zerubbabel, entitled to his office by the indisputable claim of direct descent from the ancient hierarchy. He was the son of Josedech, and the grandson of Seraiah, who had been the High Priest when Jerusalem was taken by Nebuchadnezzar.

"Of Haggai, the Scribe, but little is known that can be relied on. We know nothing of the place or the time of his birth, but it is supposed that he was born at Babylon during the captivity. He was the first of the three prophets who flourished after the captivity, and his writings, though few (so few, indeed, that some theologians have supposed that the larger portion of them has perished), all relate to the building of the second temple. The office of scribe, which is the one assigned to him in the Royal Arch degree (as practised in Ireland and America, S.S.) was one of great importance in the Jewish economy. 'The sophers or scribes constituted,' says Dr. Beard, 'a learned, organized, much esteemed and highly influential body of men, recognized and supported by the State.' They were learned in the laws, and it was their duty to expound them to the people. Horne says, that the scribe seems to have been the king's secretary of state, and as such to have registered all acts and decrees. It is, perhaps, in this capacity that we are to suppose that Haggai claims a place in the Grand Council of the Royal Arch.

"Zerubbabel, assisted by these advisers, proceeded to arrange his followers in such a form as would enable them most safely and expeditiously to traverse the long and dangerous road from Babylon to Jerusalem, which latter place they reached after a journey of four months, on the 22nd of June, 535 years before the birth of Christ.

"The first object of the Jewish leader was, we may well suppose, to provide the means of shelter for the people who accompanied him. We are irresistibly led to the conclusion that for this purpose it was found necessary to erect tents for their temporary dwelling. Extensive and populous as was Jerusalem at the commencement of the captivity, after the ruthless devastation of its unsparing conqueror it could hardly have retained sufficient means for the convenient accommodation of the fifty thousand souls who were thus suddenly and unexpectedly brought within its walls. Tents, therefore, afforded rude and temporary dwellings until, in the course of time, more substantial buildings could be erected.

"The next thing was to restore the ancient sacrifices and religious services, and for this purpose to provide a temporary place of worship until the second temple could be completed. Accordingly, a few months after their arrival, they met together at Jerusalem and celebrated the Feast of Trumpets, and a few days subsequently, the Feast of Tabernacles. It was probably the celebration of this latter observance, as well as the necessity and expediency of the measure, that led the Grand Council of leaders to the erection of a temporary tabernacle near the ruins of the ancient temple, the existence of which is so familiar to us from the traditions and ceremonies of the Royal Arch.

"Having thus furnished dwellings for the workmen, and a sacred edifice for the celebration of their religious rites, our Masonic traditions inform us that Joshua, the High Priest, Zerubbabel, the king, and Haggai, the Scribe, daily sat in council, to devise plans for the workmen, and to superintend the construction of the new temple, which, like a phoenix, was to arise from the ashes of the former one.

"It is this period of time in the history of the second temple, that is commemorated in the concluding portion of the Royal Arch. The ruins of the ancient temple are begun to be removed, and the foundations of the second are laid. Joshua, Zerubbabel, and Haggai are sitting in daily council within the tabernacle; parties of Jews who had not left Babylon with the main body under Zerubbabel, are continually coming up to Jerusalem to assist in rebuilding the house of the Lord.

"During this period of laborious activity a circumstance occurred, which is alluded to in the ritual of the Royal Arch. The Samaritans were desirous of assisting the Jews in the construction of the temple, but their propositions were at once rejected by Zerubbabel. To understand the cause of this refusal to receive their co-operation, we must for a moment advert to the history of this people.

"The ten tribes who had revolted from Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, and who had chosen Jeroboam for their king, rapidly fell into idolatry, and having selected the town of Samaria for their metropolis, a complete separation was thus effected between the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. Subsequently, the Samaritans were conquered by the Assyrians under Shalmanezar, who carried the greater part of the inhabitants into captivity, and introduced colonies in their place from Babylon, Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, and Sepharvaim. These colonists, who assumed the name of Samaritans, brought with them, of course, the idolatrous creed and practices of the region from which they emigrated. The Samaritans, therefore, at the time of the rebuilding of the second temple, were an idolatrous race, and as such abhorrent to the Jews. Hence, when they asked permission to assist in the pious work of rebuilding the temple, Zerubbabel, with the rest of the leaders, replied, 'Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as King Cyrus, the King of Persia, has commanded us' (Ezra, iv. 3).

"Hence it was that, to avoid the possibility of these idolatrous Samaritans polluting the holy work by their co-operation, Zerubbabel found it necessary to demand of every one who offered himself as an assistant in the undertaking, that he should give an accurate account of his lineage, and prove himself to have been a descendant (which no Samaritan could be) of those faithful Gilemites who worked at the building of the first temple.

"It was while the workmen were engaged in making the necessary excavations for laying the foundation, and while numbers continued to arrive at Jerusalem from Babylon, that three worn and weary sojourners, after plodding on foot over the rough and devious roads between the two cities, offered themselves to the Grand Council as willing participants in the labour of erection. Who these sojourners were, we have no historical means of discovering; but there is a Masonic tradition (entitled, perhaps, to but little weight) that they were Hananiah, Misael, and Azariah, three holy men, who are better known to general readers by their Chaldaic names of Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego, as having been miraculously preserved from the fiery furnace of Nebuchadnezzar.

"Their services were accepted, and from their diligent labours resulted that important discovery, the perpetuation and preservation of which constitutes the great end and design of the Royal Arch degree.

"This ends the connection of the history of the restoration with that of the Royal Arch. The works were soon after suspended, in consequence of difficulties thrown in the way by the Samaritans, and other circumstances occurred to prevent the final completion of the temple for many years subsequent to the important discovery to which we have just alluded. But these details go beyond the Royal Arch, and are to be found in the higher degrees of Masonry, such as the Red Cross Knight and the Prince of Jerusalem."

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

By A. LEWIS.

IX.—MASONRY AND ITS MISSION.

"And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down."—1 Kings xviii. 30.

It is certainly true that by combination more can be accomplished towards the successful realization of the ideas of some individual person than could, in the natural course of things, be wrought out by the single originator. How many most rare and beautiful edifices of use and advantage do not start up in the "mind's eye," from which the seer of them is forced unwillingly to turn away with a sigh of regret! We may call them what we like, "Castles in the air," "Châteaux d'Espagne," or what not; but the fact of their extinction fills us with sorrow. They "come like shadows, so depart," and we turn back to the hard realities of everyday life with lingering looks and mournful faces. Were it possible to photograph the emotions, to record the mutations of thought, we should find that even in the worst and most ill-regulated minds there are transient gleams of good, generous sympathies loving the great mass of humanity, and aspirations towards sentiments of charity and benevolence. Is it not also true that the visions of many a social schemer—such as Fourier and St. Simon—lacked only the essential necessities of combination and means to have been fairly and perhaps successfully tried? I do not in these cases speak of the merits or demerits of these schemers, but of the fact in the main. In some parts of the Orient it was the custom of the natives when things went somewhat wrong—when a war terminated unsuccessfully, or a famine visited the land—for the idols they worshipped to be overthrown and dragged about as a punishment in the mud and mire of their streets. Do we not sometimes imitate this childish conduct with reference to other matters? Are we not continually confounding cause and effect, and laying the blame in the wrong quarter?

Do we not therefore sometimes need an Elijah to call us together, to witness the process of the reconstitution of the altar of the Lord?

In one way or another we are continually overthrowing that altar on which we should be offering oblations of gratitude to T.G.A.O.T.U. But the power of reconstituting it remains ever with us, and we can rebuild it, without fear of reproof, whenever we are in the proper frame of mind.

One of the most consistent and effectual ways in which to effect this important purpose is to be found in the catholic-spirited institution of Freemasonry. Whatever opinions may be entertained by many as to its scientific value or significance, no one, even of its bitterest opponents, can deny that its charities are nobly supported and well administered. The altar is being worthily reconstructed, with due diligence and care. Recent events have evinced in a most satisfactory way that the spirit of emulative charity is universally spread. The funds of the Boys' School, the Girls' School, and other Masonic establishments, are now swelling up in a most gratifying manner, and that at a time, too, when there exists an unparalleled prostration of commercial enterprise and confidence. That the noble aim of the Royal Art is now better understood is evidenced by the increasing number of lodges, and the constant additions to the numerical strength of the members. Even the futile persecution of the Roman Catholic authorities is indirectly a benefit. Persecution and opposition always bring about as much good as they do harm.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable phenomena connected with the spread of Freemasonry is to observe the enthusiastic devotion exhibited to it in the United States of America, in which vast confederation Masonic Halls and Grand Lodges are continually being raised into existence. And it is to be hoped that this Masonic enthusiasm has some effect in moderating those singular political jealousies existing on the part of our American cousins towards ourselves. This, it may be safely assumed, is no doubt indirectly the case, and those bursts of acerbity sometimes heard from across the Atlantic may pass harmlessly away when passion is still. By a diligent reconstruction of the altar of Peace and Goodwill, long may Harmony and Happiness prevail between the sister nations.

Another point of great interest in relation to Freemasonry in America consists in the extensive periodical Masonic literature possessed by that country. It is hardly necessary to specify the newspapers by name; but all over the Union monthly and weekly magazines are being issued to record the progress of the Craft, and discuss the Masonic history of the age. These papers are also, for the most part, conducted in a liberal and excellent spirit of forbearance and charity, seldom varied by anything but courteous differences of opinion, and presenting a marked contrast to the ordinary run of political journals in that country. They also afford an outlet to much of the racy humour of the United States.

If we turn to the Continent and to the East we see great strides taking place in every direction, both as to practical Masonry and Masonic literature. It is especially interesting to see with what zeal and enthusiasm our Indian fellow-subjects of different creeds are receiving the institution. "One touch of Nature," says our greatest poet, "makes the whole world kin;" and it would indeed appear now that the mystic tie is destined to unite all nations in a common bond, and bring about the long-desired reign of peace and harmony. The people are coming near, and the broken-down altar is being repaired.

It is indeed a satisfactory reflection to feel that, amidst the struggles and eventualities of life, amidst the turmoil of battle, and the combat with care, there remain institutions such as Masonry, in which men of all parties and opinions can meet in a true fraternal spirit, to promote the advancement of humanity, and alleviate the distress of our social state.

The cause of true liberty and enlightenment is thus substantially and lastingly served. Freemasonry is identified with all that is most excellent and salutary for mankind, and it is beyond all things desirable that its sphere of action should be continually enlarging wherever men desire to humanize themselves and strive for improvement.

Thus alone can we realize some part of the visions presented to us by the "mind's eye;" draw down from the air some of those castles visible to the intelligence alone, and aim at assisting Elijah in repairing the altar of the Lord which was broken down, in the presence of all the people.

CRYPTONYMUS.

P.S.—Masonry and the Number Seven.—Brother "Leo" is good enough to make some remarks on my recent paper. I have not much to say in reply. The scales of numbers extend, in occult philosophy, from one to seventy-two (with the exception of the number eleven), and even higher than that. I transcribed the table from Agrippa, because it was one of the most curious we possess, and because, if rightly apprehended, it contains much of an interesting character. Bro. "Leo" may not be aware of it, but the names of God are written in all numbers—from the lowest to the highest, from unity to Schemhamphorath. Therefore he is right in alluding to the name of God in four letters, but wrong in limiting himself to the consideration of that number only. I am not at all anxious to emulate the example of Bro. Melville, whose discoveries must be taken at their own value. I only should advise that brother to defer the publication of any more of his articles until he has learnt a little of the rudimentary part of astrology, which would lead him to some results very instructive to him. A deceased friend of mine, a very learned scholar, years ago made similar researches to those of Bro. Melville, but, perhaps fortunately for his fame, did not rush into print. As to Bro. "Leo's" remark about the moon not being a planet, I may say that in all occult matters, in which certain influences are attributed to that body, the moon is considered a "planet," i.e., a celestial body which continually changes its position in relation to other celestial bodies. "Leo" should read: Bro. Ragon's famous work "Maçonnerie Occulte," Paris, 1853, S. (Brit. Mus. Pressmark, 4783, c.); he will there find what relation the seven planets bear to Masonry. Perhaps, if opportunity is afforded me, I may yet publish the scales of the numbers right through. They are worthy to be known.

THE NEGRO AND THE CRAFT.

The following is the Charge alluded to in our last week's leader :—

A CHARGE, delivered to the Brethren of the African Lodge, in Charlestown, U.S., on the 25th of June, 1792, by the R. W. M. PRINCE HALL.

Dear and well beloved Brethren of the African Lodge, as through the goodness and mercy of God we are once more met together, in order to celebrate the Festival of St. John the Baptist; it is requisite that we should on these public days, and when we appear in form, give some reason as a foundation for our so doing, but as this has been already done, in a discourse delivered in substance by our late Reverend Brother John Marrant, and now in print,

I shall at this time endeavour to raise part of the superstructure, for howsoever good the foundation may be, yet without this it will only prove a Babel. I shall therefore endeavour to show the duty of a Mason; and the first thing is, that he believes in one supreme Being, that he is the great Architect of this world, and that he governs all things here below by his almighty power, and his watchful eye is over all our works. Again, we must be good subjects to the laws of the land in which we dwell, giving honour to our lawful Governors and Magistrates, giving honour to whom honour is due; and that we have no hand in any plots or conspiracies or rebellion, or side or assist in them: for when we consider the bloodshed, the devastation of towns and cities that hath been done by them, what heart can be so hard as not to pity those our distressed brethren, and keep at the greatest distance from them? However just it may be on the side of the oppressed, yet it doth not in the least, or rather ought not, to abate that love and fellow-feeling which we ought to have for our brother fellow-men.

The next thing is love and benevolence to all the whole family of mankind, as God's make and creation, therefore we ought to love them all, for love or hatred is of the whole kind, for if I love a man for the sake of the image of God which is on him, I must love all, for he made all, and upholds all, and we are dependant upon him for all we do enjoy and expect to enjoy in this world and that which is to come. Therefore he will help and assist all his fellow-men in distress, let them be of what color or nation they may, yea even our very enemies, much more a brother Mason. I shall therefore give you a few instances of this from Holy Writ, and first, how did Abraham prevent the storm, or rebellion that was rising between Lot's servants and his? Saith Abraham to Lot, "Let there be no strife I pray thee between me and thee, for the land is before us, if you will go to the left, then I will go to the right, and if you will go to the right, then I will go to the left." They divided, and peace was restored. I will mention the compassion of a black man to a Prophet of the Lord, Ebedmelech; when he heard that Jeremiah was cast into the dungeon he made intercession for him to the King, and got liberty to take him out of the jaws of death. See Jer. xxxviii 7—13.

Also the prophet Elisha, after he had led the army of the Eramites blindfold into Samaria, when the King in a deriding manner said, "My Father (not considering that he was as much their father as his) shall I smite, or rather kill them out of the way, as not worthy to live on the same earth, or draw the same air with himself;" so eager was he to shed his brethren's blood, that he repeats his blood-thirsty demand, but the prophet after reproaching him therefor, answers him "No, but set bread and water before them;" or in other words, give them a feast and let them go home in peace. See 2 Kings, vi. 22 23.

I shall just mention the good deeds of the Samaritan, though at that time they were looked upon as unworthy to eat, drink or trade with their fellow-men, at least by the Jews; see the pity and compassion he had on a poor distressed and half dead stranger, see Luke x. from 30 to 37. See that you endeavour to do so likewise. But when we consider the amazing condescending love and pity our blessed Lord had on such poor worms as we are, as not only to call us his friends, but his brothers, we are lost and can go no further in holy writ for examples to excite us to the love of our fellow-men. But I am aware of an objection that may arise (for some men will catch at any thing) that is that they were not all Masons; we allow it, and I say that they were not all Christians, and their benevolence to strangers ought to shame us both, that there is so little, so very little of it to be seen in these enlightened days.

Another thing which is the duty of a Mason is, that he pays a strict regard to the stated meetings of the Lodge, for masonry is of a progressive nature, and must be attended to if ever he intends to be a good Mason; for the man that thinks that because he hath been made a Mason, and is called so, and at the same time will wilfully neglect to attend his Lodge, he may be assured he will never make a good Mason, nor ought he to be looked upon as a good member of the craft. For if his example was followed, where would be the lodge? and besides what a disgrace is it, when we are at our set meetings to hear that one of our members is at a drinking house, or at a card table, or in some worse company; this brings disgrace on the Craft. Again, there are some that attend the Lodge in such a manner that sometimes their absence would be better than their company (I would not here be understood a brother in disguise, for such an one hath no business on a level floor) for if he hath been displeased abroad or at home, the least thing that is spoken that he thinks not right, or in the least offends him, he will raise his temper to such a height as to destroy the harmony of the whole Lodge; but we have a remedy and every officer ought to see it put in execution. Another thing a Mason ought to observe, is that he should lend his helping hand to a brother in distress, and relieve him; this we may do in various ways, for we may sometimes help him to a cup of cold water, and it may be better to him than a cup of wine. Good advice may be sometimes better than feeding his body, helping him to some lawful employment, better than giving him money; so defending his case and standing by him when wrongfully accused, may be better than clothing him; better to save a brother's house when on fire, than to give him one. Thus much may suffice.

I shall now cite some of our forefathers, for our imitation; and the first shall be Tertullian, who defended the Christians against their heathen false accusations, whom they charged with treason against the empire and the Emperor, because of their silent meetings. He proved that to be false for this reason, that in their meetings they were wont to pray for the prosperity of the Empire of Rome, and him also; and they were accused of being enemies to mankind, "How can that be," said he "when their office is to love and pray for all mankind?" When they were charged with worshipping the Sun, because they looked towards the East when they prayed, he defended them against this slander also, and proved that they were slandered, slighted and ill-treated, not for any desert of theirs, but only out of hatred of them and their profession. This friend of the distressed was born in Carthage, in Africa, and died Anno Christi, 202.

Take another of the same city, Cyprian, for his fidelity to his profession was such, that he would rather suffer death than betray his trust and the truth of the gospel, or approve of the impious worship of the Gentiles. He was not only Bishop of Carthage, but of Spain and the east, west and northern churches, and died Anno Christi, 259.

But I have not time to cite but one more (out of hundreds that I could count out of our Fathers, who were not only examples to us, but to many of their nobles and learned), that is Augustine, who had engraven on his table these words,

He that doth love an absent friend to jeer.

May hence depart, no room is for him here.

His saying was, that sincere and upright prayer pierceth heaven, and returns not empty. That it was a shelter to the soul, a sacrifice to God and a scourge to the Devil. "There is nothing," said he, "more abateeth pride and sin than the frequent meditation on death, he cannot die ill, that lives well; and seldom doth he die well, that lives ill." Again, "If men want wealth, it is not to be unjustly gotten, if they have it they ought by good works to lay it up in heaven." And again, "He that has tasted the sweetness of divine love, will not care for temporal sweetness. The reasonable soul made in the likeness of God, may here find much distraction, but no full satisfaction; not to be without afflictions, but to overcome them is blessedness. Love is as strong as death; as death kills the body, so love of eternal life kills worldly desires and affections." He called ingratitude the Devil's sponge, wherewith bewipes out all the favours of the Almighty. His prayer was, "Lord give first what thou requirest, and then require of me what thou wilt." This good man died Anno Christi, 430.

The next is Fulgentius, his speech was, "Why travel I in the world which can yield me no further, nor durable reward, answerable to my pains. Thought it better to weep well, than to rejoice ill; yet if joy be our desire, how much more excellent is their joy, who have a good conscience before God, who dread nothing but sin, study to do nothing but to accomplish the precepts of Christ. Now therefore let me change my course, and as before I endeavoured amongst my noble friends, to prove more noble so now let my care and employment be among the humble and poor servants of Christ, and become more humble that I may help and instruct my poor distressed brethren."

Thus, my brethren, I have quoted a few of your reverend fathers for your imitation, which I hope you will endeavour to follow, so far as your abilities will permit in your present situation and the disadvantages you labour under on account of your being deprived of the means of education in your younger days, as you see it is at this day with our children, for we see notwithstanding we are rated for that, and other Town charges, we are deprived of that blessing. But be not discouraged, have patience, and look forward to a better day. Hear what the great Architect of the universal world saith, Ethiopia shall stretch forth her hands unto me. Hear also the strange, but bold and confident language of F. Huss, who just before the executioner gave the last stroke, said, I challenge you to meet me an hundred years hence. But in the mean time let us lay by our recreations, and all superfluities, so that we may have that to educate our rising generation, which was spent in those follies. Make you this beginning, and who knows but God may raise up some friend or body of friends, as he did in Philadelphia, to open a School for the blacks here, as that friendly city has done there.

I shall now show you what progress Masonry hath made since the siege and taking of Jerusalem in the year 70, by Titus Vespasian, after a long and bloody siege, a million of souls having been slain, or had perished in the city, it was taken by storm and the city set on fire. There was an order of men called the order of St. John, who besides their other engagements, subscribed to another, by which they bound themselves to keep up the war against the Turks; these men defended the temple when on fire, in order to save it, so long, that Titus was amazed and went to see the reason of it; but when he came so near as to behold the Sanctum Sanctorum, he was amazed, and shed tears, and said, no wonder these men should so long to save it. He honored them with many honors, and large contributions were made to that order by many kingdoms; they were also knighted. They continued 88 years in Jerusalem, till that city was again retaken by the Turks, after which they resided 104 years in the Cyrean city of Ptolemy, till the remains of the Holy Conquest were lost. Whereupon they settled on the Island of Cyprus, where they continued 18 years, till they found an opportunity to take the Island Rhodes; being masters of that they maintained it for 213 years, and from thence they were called Knights of Rhodes, till in the year 1530, they took their residence in the Island of Malta, where they have continued to this day, and are distinguished by the name of the Knights of Malta. The first Master was Villaret in the year 1099. Fulco Villaret in the year 1322, took the Island of Rhodes, and was after that distinguished by the title of Grand Master, which hath devolved to his successors to this day.

Query, whether at that day, when there was an African church, and perhaps the largest Christian church on earth, whether there was no African of that order; or whether, if they were all whites, they would refuse to accept them as fellow Christians and brother Masons; or whether there were any so weak, or rather so foolish, as to say, because they were Blacks, that would make their lodge or army too common or too cheap? Sure this was not our conduct in the late war; for then they marched shoulder to shoulder, brother soldier and brother soldier, to the field of battle; let who will answer; he that despises a black man for the sake of his color, reproacheth his Maker, and he hath resented it, in the case of Aaron and Miriam. See for this Numbers xii.

But to return: in the year 1784 (the year in which we received our charter) there were 489 lodges under charge of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland; whose memory will always be esteemed by every good Mason.

And now, my African brethren, you see what a noble order you are members of. My charge to you is, that you make it your study to live up to the precepts of it, as you know that they are all good; and let it be known this day to the spectators, that you have not been to a feast of Bacchus, but to a refreshment with Masons; and see to it that you, behave as such, as well at home as abroad; always to keep in your minds the obligations you are under, both to God and your fellow men. And more so you, my dear brethren of Providence, who are at a distance from, and cannot attend the Lodge here but seldom; yet I hope you will endeavour to communicate to us by letters of your welfare; and remember your obligations to each other, and live in peace and love as brethren. We thank you for your attendance here this day, and wish you a safe return.

If thus, we by the grace of God, live up to this our profession; we may cheerfully go the rounds of this life. Having lived according to the plumb line of uprightness, the square of justice, the level of truth and sincerity. And when we are come to the end of time, we may then bid farewell to that delightful Sun and Moon, and the other planets, that move so beautifully round her in their orbits, and all things here below, and ascend to that new Jerusalem, where we shall not want these tapers, for God is the light thereof; where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

Then shall we hear and see and know,
All we desired and wished below,
And every power find sweet employ,
In that eternal world of joy.
Our flesh shall slumber in the ground,
Till the last trumpet's joyful sound,
Then burst the chains with sweet surprise,
And in our Saviour's image rise.

AT THE GLOBE THEATRE, Mr. W. H. Byron's new burlesque of "The Corsican Brothers" is a genuine success, each actor and actress sustaining the parts allotted to them with great humour. Bro. W. J. Hurlstone is excessively droll as the servant, "Guffo."

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Israel, No. 205.—In the majority of lodge meetings in London there is a very meagre attendance without the temptation of a banquet; it is therefore very much to the credit of the brethren of "Israel" that they mustered nearly as numerous on Tuesday evening as when there is one provided. The emergency was holden for a revision of the Bye-laws, in order to make the General as well as the Benevolent Fund of this charitable lodge still more efficient in the cause of charity, the highest of Masonic virtues. The very efficient W.M., Bro. Chamberlin, initiated Mr. Frank Bishop and Mr. Joseph Kippenhagen passed Brothers Betjeman and Purnell to the second degree, and raised Bros. Barnes and Southgate to the third degree; and after the proposed alterations in the Bye-laws had been carried unanimously, the lodge was closed in harmony and goodwill.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge, No. 279.—It having been found impracticable at the last regular meeting to perform the whole of the work on the summons, six passings were postponed to a lodge of emergency, which was held at the Freemasons' Hall, on Monday last, the W.M., Brother Kelly, D.P.G.M., in the chair, when, besides the members and officers of the lodge present, the following visitors attended, viz.:—Bros. Duff, W.M., and Toller, S.W. and W.M. elect, of No. 523; Mackintosh, of No. 758, Runcorn; and McAllister, of No. 21, N.B. On the opening of the lodge five out of six of the candidates were in attendance, the other, Bro. Dr. Rich, being prevented by professional duties. Bros. Dr. Pearce, Taylor, Porter, Tarratt, and Stannard passed a satisfactory examination in the first degree, after which, having been entrusted, they retired, and the lodge having been opened in the second degree, they were duly passed as Fellow-crafts—the organist, Bro. Crow, assisting during the ceremony with the musical chants. The W.M. concluded by delivering the lecture on the tracing board. It was announced by Brother Kelly, as D.P.G.M., that a warrant having been granted for a new lodge to be opened at Oakham, in the county of Rutland, in which a Masonic lodge did not at present exist, the Most Worshipful the Grand Master had been pleased to place it under the jurisdiction of the Grand Master of this province. The lodge, which is entitled the "Vale of Catmos Lodge, No. 1256," will be consecrated early in September next, at which time it is proposed to hold the annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Leicestershire at Oakham, and thus to celebrate the union of the two provinces. Two gentlemen having been proposed as candidates, the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

LEICESTER.—John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 523.—The members of this lodge met in due course, at the Freemasons' Hall, on Thursday, the 20th instant, under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. A. M. Duff, P.M., 166, and Prov. J.G.D., who was supported by P.M.'s Kelly, D.P.G.M.; Goodyer, P.P.S.G.W.; W. B. Smith, P.P.J.G.W.; and W. Johnson, P.P.G.D. The whole of the officers, except the J.W., were in their places, and the following brethren were present as visitors:—Rev. Nathaniel Haycroft, D.D., 181; Alexander Mackintosh, 758; Louis H. Moore, 1017; J. McAllister, 21, N.B.; L. A. Clarke, P.M. and Prov. G.S.D.; Palmer, and Widdowson, of 279. The lodge having been opened, and the preliminary business transacted, a ballot was taken for Mr. Joseph James Miller, architect, as a candidate for Freemasonry, who was unanimously elected, admitted, and duly initiated into the first degree by the W.M. The D.P.G.M. afterwards delivered the lecture on the tracing-board, and the charge to the candidate.—This being the last regular meeting of the year, a ballot was taken for the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, when the Senior Warden, Bro. George Toller, jun., a young, but most efficient and zealous Mason, received the unanimous suffrages of his brethren, and was warmly greeted on rising to express his acknowledgments of the honour conferred upon him. The installation festival was ordered to take place on St. John's Day, the 24th proximo, also the anniversary of the birth of "Old John of Gaunt, time-honoured Lancaster," the once all-powerful Earl of Leicester, the patron of the lodge.—A letter was read from the Junior Warden, Brother Buzzard, apologising for his absence from the lodge, owing to a severe domestic bereavement (the death of his wife, in child-birth), and on the proposition of the W.M., seconded by the D.P.G.M., a letter of condolence was ordered to be sent to Bro. Buzzard, expressive of the sincere sympathy of the brethren with him in his affliction.—The Rev. Bro. Haycroft, D.D., of the Universal Lodge, 181, was proposed as a joining member; and a gentleman having also been proposed as a candidate, the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

STOKESLEY.—Cleveland Lodge, No. 543.—The last monthly meeting of this lodge previous to the summer vacation was held in the lodge-room, Golden Lion Hotel, on Monday evening, Bros. Stephen Hunter, P.M., W.M.; Henry Fawcett, B.A., S.W.; George Tweddell, jun., J.W.; J. H. Handyside, P.M., Sec.; and William Harrison, Tyler. In the absence of the Deacons and Inner Guard, Brother George Markham Tweddell, F.S.A. Scotland and Newcastle, acted as I.G. during the opening and closing of the lodge, and as Deacon during a raising. Brother Handyside deaconing during a passing. The lodge having been duly opened up to the second degree, Bro. Richardson was passed to the degree of a F.C., and retired; after which the lodge was opened in the third degree, and Brother White was raised to the sublime degree of a M.M. The lodge was then closed, and the meeting adjourned until the Monday nearest the full moon in September, emergencies excepted. The impressive manner in which the W.M. rendered the beautiful ritual of the third degree was the subject of commendation amongst the brethren after his departure for Great Ayton, where he has been for many years a respected resident.

MARK MASONRY.

CARLISLE.—The Cumberland Lodge of Mark Masters, No. 60, met at the Freemasons' Hall, Castle-street, Carlisle, on Tuesday, the 18th inst. The lodge was duly opened under the presidency of Bro. T. Blacklock, W.M. The minutes were read and confirmed, when Bro. Robert James, of 995, Ulverston, being a candidate for advancement, placed himself under the care of Bro. A. Woodhouse, the Secretary (who was acting S.D. on this occasion), who conducted him safely through the intricate windings of the degree to the acting Master. Bro. C. J. Banister, P.M., P.G.M.O., in a very impressive manner advanced Bro. R. James to the degree of Mark Master. This being the annual day, W. Johnston, J.W. and W.M. elect, was duly inducted in the chair of W.M. by Brother C. J. Banister, the Installing Master. Brother Johnston then invested his officers as follows:—Bro. A. Woodhouse, S.W. and Acting-Secretary; J. Porter, of 333, Preston, as J.W.; W. Court, M.O.; F. W. Hayward, P.M., P.G.S.D., as S.O.; W. Murray, P.M., P.G.S., J.O.; W. Pratchitt, S.D.; G. G. Hayward, J.D.; Thomas Blacklock, I.P.M., as I.G.; and I. Barnes, Tyler (for the fourth time). After a charge had been delivered to the officers, Bro. James Porter, J.W., proposed the following brethren to be advanced at the next meeting in August, viz., John Wood and Edwin Hinks, 1073; John Hewitson and Henry Bewes, 327; and Roger Dodgson, 995. The dues were then rendered. The lodge afterwards closed in harmony, and the brethren parted, to meet again at the house of Mrs. Milburn, Lion and Lamb Inn, where a most sumptuous banquet was provided, to which ample justice was done. After the cloth was withdrawn, and dessert placed on the table, the entertainment was turned into a Craft meeting, in consequence of Bros. Dove, of Globe Lodge, Scarborough; G. Roberts, Armoury Sergeant; and Corporal G. J. Weatherall, of the 40th Regiment, now stationed in Carlisle, being present, in addition to those already named. At the dinner the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were drunk, and duly responded to. Amongst the number were, "W. W. B. Beach, M.P., M.W.G.M., and the rest of the Grand Officers, past and present;" "Bro. F. Binckes, Grand Secretary," proposed by Bro. Woodhouse, and responded to by Bro. F. W. Hayward; "The W.M., Bro. Johnston, and Officers of the Lodge, No. 60," Bro. Thomas Blacklock, I.P.M. Bros. W. Johnston, W. Court, G. Roberts, and F. W. Hayward enlivened the evening by singing several songs, and repeating recitations. "God save the Queen" closed the day's labour and evening's entertainment.

RED CROSS OF ROME AND CONSTANTINE.

Lord Kenlis the Grand Sovereign, has granted a Charter for the "William de Irwin" Conclave, No. 17, which will be held at the residence of Capt. F. G. Irwin, 1, Brislington Crescent, Bristol. The first M.P.S. will be Sir Knt. E. T. Inskip, and the first V.E., Sir Knt. the Reverend I. Clare Pigott.

A PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE MEETING will be held at the Clarence Hotel, Pontypool, on Thursday, June 3rd, 1869, at twelve at noon precisely. The D.P.G.M. will, according to ancient form, proceed to open, consecrate, and dedicate the Kennard Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, 1258, and install Bro. Bartholomew Thomas, P.M., 471, and P.G.D.C., as W.M., who will appoint and invest his officers for the ensuing year. The installation ceremony will be performed by Bro. Hellyer, P.M., 471, and P.G. Pursuivant. The banquet will take place at the Town Hall, Pontypool, at 3.30 p.m. sharp. Tickets, including dessert and waiters, five shillings each.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In accordance with the notice given by me in your paper of the 15th inst., I brought forward a complaint against Mr. Gosden, at the meeting of Stewards held yesterday at the Freemasons' Hall; and on my motion, seconded by Bro. Cubitt, P.M., and supported unanimously, the sum of twenty pounds was deducted from the dinner account, for deficiency in supply of wine, and bad provisions, and a rider added conveying a reprimand to Mr. Gosden for his incivility to the Stewards.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

H. W. HEMSWORTH, W.M.

UNIFORMITY OF RITUAL AND CEREMONY.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have watched with much interest the efforts of a few brethren in London, to secure "uniformity of Ritual and Ceremony" in working the different degrees of Masonry. The means adopted to secure that very desirable consummation are undoubtedly the best, and I am sure the approaching "Conference of Past Masters" has the cordial and best wishes of every member of the brotherhood in Great Britain and Ireland, and I doubt not, all over the world.

With your permission, Bro. Editor, I would urge upon the brethren in Scotland, the desirability, nay, the absolute necessity, of this wave of uniformity, reaching to, and spreading over the land "of the mountain and the flood." Our English brethren will not begrudge it, and 'twill be a fitting return for the light we gave them, emanating from Kilwinning, centuries ago.

The bond of brotherhood, north and south, would be drawn closer, while the benefits resulting therefrom to the Craft in Scotland would be incalculable.

I have visited many Scotch Lodges, Bro. Editor, and experience and observation embolden me to say, that, over the length and breadth of the land, not three Masters can be found who give or work any degree alike or the same.

More especially does this hold good with the sublime degree of M.M. Often have I felt the blush of shame crimson my cheek when I witnessed this beautiful degree mutilated and slurred over; while, again, I have been pleased beyond measure with the peculiar, but harmonious and complete working of other Masters.

To obtain the desired uniformity, I would suggest, when the Conference of Past Masters about to meet in London have decided upon and adopted a Ritual and Ceremony, that each Provincial Grand Lodge in Scotland, (Grand Lodge consenting,) send to London an expert brother, noted for his proficiency in Masonry and his devotion to the Craft, there to obtain a complete knowledge of said Ritual, &c., &c., who on his return would impart the necessary information to a general Lodge of Instruction, composed of Past Masters, Masters, and other office bearers, they in turn disseminating the reformed Ritual through the ranks.

I trust these remarks may cause some of the leading members of the Craft in Scotland to ponder over this all-important subject and if not encroaching too much on your valuable space, would you kindly allow it to be ventilated through your columns?

Fraternally yours,

Glasgow, 24th May, 1869. UNIFORMITY.

THE CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—"Leo" seems to think that if one does not entirely coincide with his views, there is a lack of understanding. It would be hard to understand in some things what he means. In my letter in your impression of the 17th ult., page 9, I fully expressed my views on the admissibility of a regularly-installed P.M. into what is called a Board of Installed Masters in England, that should have satisfied him that I was aware of such. He says we need not "speculate," but I can assure him that it is all speculation. He refers to a case in connection with the St. John's Lodge, Glasgow. This is very unwise of him; we all know what authority it is. If "Leo" makes inquiry of any of the office-bearers or members of Grand Lodge, he will find that his conclusions and theirs are widely different. At the time the Grand Lodge so decided regarding the St. John's Lodge, they were not aware that the status they had given them on the Roll was based on a charter since declared to be a forgery. Had they known Cosmo Innes' views of the matter, they would not have been found in "perfect order"—a lodge that has usurped the place it holds on the Roll! Is not this too bad? "Leo" can have his own mind regarding the degrees, but I hold by my former statement—they might as well work the one degree as the other. I am satisfied with "Leo's" explanation in so far that he meant operative lodges—not speculative, as any one would surmise from his remarks in THE FREEMASON, No. 7, page 9.

As for his ideas in reference to Solomon's Temple, I leave your readers to judge.

I am, yours fraternally,
AMMI.

THISTLE LODGE, No. 87.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—In your issue of the 15th inst., Bro. Lawson questions the truth of the paragraph sent you ament the anniversary supper of his lodge by stating that you had been imposed on, and that it was absurd. Now, to prove which of the two imposed on you, let us take a look at Bro. L.'s paragraph that the local press so courteously inserted:—

"MASONIC.—A convivial and truly harmonious refreshment lodge was held by the brethren of the Thistle, No. 87, in their usual meeting-hall, Croy-place, on Tuesday night, the 20th inst., being in celebration of its 107th anniversary. Bro. Thos. Paton, R.W.M., and Wardens John Grieve and John Dobbie officiated, supported by brethren of note in the province. The numerous toasts, songs, and sentiments given and responded to during the evening, relieved by occasional strains on the harmonium, formed a really enjoyable entertainment."—Glasgow Daily Herald, April 33.

Then read Bro. L.'s statement at page 7, No. 10, of THE FREEMASON; compare the two. Who was the impostor? In sending you the paragraph I told the truth, and also sent it to the proper organ for Masonic news. Why did Bro. L. not insert the truth in the local papers? It would have been more honourable to have acknowledged that it was simply a complimentary supper for the purpose of raising a fund to assist their poor old Tyler (who, by the way, is entitled to handsome remuneration, for although only Tyler in name, he has done the Master's work in the lodge for a number of years—surely the labourer is worthy of his hire!) than display it as the 107th anniversary; or have made known, decently, that all their efforts to get up a supper failed, i.e., stickit!

The next time Bro. Lawson wishes to see his name in print, let his would-be corrections be those of errors, not of bona fide facts.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE VERSUS EGYPTIAN ARCHITECTURE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—On the first page of THE FREEMASON, No. 10, I read the following:—"Upon the model of King Solomon's Temple were constructed, we are informed, nearly all those wondrous palaces and temples of the ancient world of which such magnificent remains exist even to the present day." If "The Son of Salathiel" means that Solomon's Temple served as the model of other temples, or that the Egyptians copied their temples, &c., from Solomon's, he makes a mistake; and I must therefore observe that Zerubbabel, alias Shesbazzar, ought to have known better, the fact being that Solomon's Temple was copied from them, not them from it. Further, many of the noble temples, &c., "of the ancient world, of which such magnificent remains exist even to the present day," were erected long before Solomon was born! Solomon's Temple was begun 1012 years B.C.; long after the Augustan age of Egyptian architecture had passed. All that Solomon could manage in architecture was to do a little in copying, and that, too, by the help of strangers, the Jews not being any way remarkable as a nation of builders, their forte lying in a different direction.

Not to go further back at present, we find remains of the eighteenth dynasty of Egyptian kings (say from 1525 to 1340 B.C.), who built the temple of Amen-ra (now known by the name of Karnak), and other great edifices at Thebes. The Queen Amen-nut set up the obelisks in front of Amen-ra, and the time of Thotmes III. is "peculiarly rich in those tomb-paintings which reveal to us the private life of the Egyptians. Our Museum possesses the head and arm of his colossal statue, in red granite, found at Karnak by Belzoni. One of the two colossal statues of Amenoph III., seated in front of the great temple which he built in the western suburbs of Thebes, was the celebrated 'Vocal Memnon.' This vocal Memnon, or 'Son of the Morning,' was used as another piece of priestly imposition, for "Sir Gardiner Wilkinson found in the lap of the colossal stone which on being struck with a hammer emitted a metallic sound. A priest might easily have been concealed in the position occupied by Wilkinson; and thus we find the same spirit of priestcraft 3000 years ago prompting to devices which have their parallel in the blood of St. Januarius and the winking Madonnas of our own age."

Even the other day, a brother holding a position in our Masonic body expressed himself to me somewhat as follows:—Although the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry was false, we should not admit it, but keep up the imposture as long as possible, it being dangerous to disturb the present ideas by examining into its history or the real state of affairs! Could anything be really more unmasonic, ungentlemanly, and suicidal? Truly far too many act upon the foolish motto, "Where ignorance is bliss (?) 'twere folly to be wise." However, I shall leave the individual I refer to, to consider the meaning of the word "hypocrisy" when next he tells a candidate the Masonic lesson to be deduced from the "square."

The grandest period of Egyptian history was under the rule of the Nineteenth Dynasty, and during the reign of Rameses II., or "the Great," about 1300 years B.C. He reigned above 60 years. The reign of the father of Rameses was marked by one of the finest monuments of Egyptian art—the grand "Hall of Columns" in the temple of Karnak, and by the most splendid tomb among those of the Theban kings. As to Rameses himself, who reigned three centuries before Solomon, "great remains of his vast buildings still exist both in Upper and Lower Egypt. He adorned and enlarged the temple of Ptah, at Memphis, the site of which is marked by a beautiful colossal statue of him in granite, but mutilated and fallen on its face. Some idea may be formed of this colossus from the fist, now in the British Museum; its length from the wrist to the knuckle of the middle finger is 32 inches, and its width across the knuckles 30½ inches. Beyond the limits of Upper Egypt he left imperishable memorials in the rock-hewn temples of Abou-Simbel, above the second cataract, faced with his colossal statues—the largest in the world—besides other monuments in Nubia. But his greatest works were in Thebes itself. Besides adding to the temples of El-Kurnak and El-Uksor, he erected a magnificent temple on the western side of the Nile, at the very edge of the desert. This is, doubtless, the edifice described by Diodorus Siculus as the tomb of Osymandyas. It has been called by modern writers the Memnonium, but now, more properly, the Rameseum. Its ruins, near the village of El-Kurnak, though much defaced, still bear the marks of that real beauty, as well as magnificence, which belongs to the best period of Egyptian art. For those who have only seen a few fragments exhibited in half-lighted rooms under a cloudy sky, or the well-meant imitation of a temple in a reduced plaster model, can form no idea of the impression made even by the ruins of these edifices, when seen in the midst of a vast plain, and with the deep shadows cast by a southern sun. Only in their proper place can be seen how gracefully the papyrus-stemmed shafts and lotus-leaved or Isis-headed capitals of the pillars blend with the masses they support, or how the whole style harmonizes with the genius of the people and their religion. Our space does not permit a description of an Egyptian temple, with its towering propylæa, its spacious colonnaded court, its first and second sanctuary supported by many pillars, and its various chambers; the whole approached by an avenue of obelisks and sphinxes; and the details would be scarcely intelligible without a plan. But we must mention the sculptures on the walls, from which we learn the story of the family and reign of Rameses; and the astronomical ceiling in one of the chambers, which forms the most precious monument of Egyptian science. We learn, too, from Diodorus, that the temple contained a sacred library. In the centre of the great hall are the shattered remains of a colossal statue of Rameses himself, which, when complete, must have been no less than 60 feet high."

In Sir Gardiner Wilkinson's "Ancient Egyptians" is a small plan of the Memnonium, or Rameseum, according to which it would seem to have been about 1000 feet long, with two immense towers—each about 200 feet broad by 60 feet deep, and (allowing them to have been half as high again as they were broad) 300 feet high—which flanked the entrance.

I cannot go into this more particularly at present for want of time; but before I leave the Egyptian kings I might refer to Rameses the 3rd of the Twentieth Dynasty, about 1200 B.C., who, "besides a magnificent tomb and a royal residence, built the splendid temple of Medinet-Habon." The above are only a sample of the many beautiful and magnificent edifices which were erected long before Solomon was born. Egypt was old as a kingdom while Israel was yet in her cradle. The Egyptians were a nation of builders and the fathers of art, which the Jews were not. However, while we acknowledge the debt we owe to the Egyptians as architects, we must not forget that to the Jews we owe our faith, which enables us to rise superior to the narrow limits of our poor humanity, and to look forward with hope to attaining a place in that Temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

I must here mention that the above quotations are principally from Mr. Philip Smith's "Ancient History," 1868.

In reference to verse 7 of 1st Kings vi., I consider that it was nothing remarkable then for a temple to be built without "any tool of iron being heard in the house," as it has struck me that this was also the practice in Egypt, the Egyptians preparing all their stones in the quarry, or apart from the temple, when they merely required to be set in their proper places; the presence of iron being contamination, and therefore forbidden, in an Egyptian temple. As an example of the strictness of the Egyptians in this respect, I read lately somewhere that an immense stone which had taken years to transport was set aside because of some trifling accident, or incident, that occurred amongst its transporters.

I have observed that Solomon occupies a more prominent position with us than he perhaps deserves. He was wise, but upon reading 1st Kings ix. 13, I am afraid he was rather mean, else Hiram would not have called them "the land of Cabul"—that is, the displeasing or dirty cities. As a man, I am inclined to admire David far more than Solomon.

I think I could not close these remarks more appropriately than by quoting those fine verses by Mr. Horace Smith:—

ADDRESS TO THE MUMMY IN BELZONI'S EXHIBITION.

And thou hast walked about (how strange a story!)
In Thebes's streets three thousand years ago;
When the Memnonium was in all its glory,
And time had not begun to overthrow
Those temples, palaces, and piles stupendous,
Of which the very ruins are tremendous.

Speak! for thou long enough hast acted dummy,
Thou hast a tongue—come, let us hear its tune;
Thou'rt standing on thy legs above ground, Mummy!
Revisiting the glimpses of the moon,
Not like thin ghosts or disembodied creatures,
But with thy bones and flesh, and limbs and features.

Tell us—for doubtless thou canst recollect—
To whom should we assign the Sphinx's fame?
Was Champo or Cephrenes architect
Of either pyramid that bears his name?
Is Pompey's Pillar really a misnomer?
Had Thebes a hundred gates, as sung by Homer?

Perchance that very hand, now pinioned flat,
Has hob-a-nobbed with Pharaoh glass to glass;
Or dropped a halfpenny in Homer's hat,
Or doffed thine own to let Queen Dido pass,
Or held, by Solomon's own invitation,
A torch at the great Temple's dedication.

I need not ask thee if that hand when armed,
Has any Roman soldier mauled and knuckled;
For thou wert dead, and buried, and embalmed,
Ere Romulus and Remus had been suckled.
Antiquity appears to have begun
Long after thy primeval race was run.

Since first thy form was in this box extended,
We have, above ground, seen some strange mutations;
The Roman Empire has begun and ended,
New worlds have risen—we have lost old nations;
And countless kings have into dust been humbled,
While not a fragment of thy flesh has crumbled.

Dilst thou not hear the pother o'er thy head,
When the great Persian conqueror, Cambyzes,
Marched armies o'er thy tomb with thundering tread,
O'erthrew Osiris, Orus, Apis, Isis,
And shook the Pyramids with fear and wonder,
When the gigantic Memnon fell asunder?

If the tomb's secrets may not be confessed,
The nature of thy private life unfold;
A heart has throbb'd beneath that leathern breast,
And tears adown that dusky cheek have rolled.
Have children climbed those knees and kissed that face?
What was thy name and station, age and race?

Statue of flesh—immortal of the dead!
Imperishable type of evanescence!
Posthumous man, who quitted thy narrow bed,
And standest undecayed within our presence,
Thou wilt hear nothing till the Judgment morning,
When the great trump shall thrill thee with its warning.

Why should this worthless tegment endure,
If its undying guest be lost for ever?
O let us keep the soul embalmed and pure
In living virtue, that, when both must sever,
Although corruption may our frame consume,
The immortal spirit in the skies may bloom.

I am, yours fraternally,
LEO.

THE NAWAB OF BENGAL and suite, the son of the late King Theodore, and the son of the Viceroy of Egypt honoured the Royal Alhambra Palace with their presence on Wednesday, the 19th inst. Bro. Strange, the managing director, received them, and a double line was formed by the employees of the establishment, under the superintendence of Bro. Reeves. Previous to leaving, the distinguished visitors expressed the pleasure they had received by the excellent entertainment afforded them.

Prayer offered up to God for mercy for one's self or others, should be the asking of a mind that is sincere and always of religious thought. The prayer of the blasphemer or any habitually ungodly person, is doubtful when said for a special purpose, without feeling or intention to reform. As in the electric telegraph, if the line is not continuous, like true sincerity in thought, the question may be put, but no answer will be received. An ungodly being is like one in a wilderness. Picture a blind man without a guide, a friend, or provider, and all the horrors of hell appear.—Ellis.

THE UNITY OF FREEMASONRY.

"MAN's task here below, the destiny of every individual man," says the philosophic Carlyle, "is to be in turns apprentice and workman; or, say rather, scholar, teacher, discoverer." Accepting this interpretation of the mission of humanity as one which defines to a remarkable extent the Ingenitis labor of Freemasonry, it may be well to consider the basis upon which we work, and the tendency of Masonic teachings, both in their relations to religion and to civil government.

In reviewing the fundamental principles of our Order, we find, from the ancient charges, that Freemasonry is termed "the centre of union between good men and true." Unity is, therefore, one of the pillars of the Craft—unity of purpose and unity of deed, and, aided by this power of cohesion, Freemasonry has successfully resisted the storms and shocks of ages.

But to secure unity, men must be content to sink their own peculiar idiosyncracies for the common good; they must be prepared to immolate, upon the altar of Masonic universality, their own pet fancies which tend to circumscribe the boundless domains of ancient Freemasonry. We regret, however, to observe that this wholesome rule is frequently disregarded. On the one hand we find brethren endeavouring to limit the circle of Masonic usefulness to followers of the Christian doctrine, which is about as reasonable as to forbid the light of day to shine upon unbelievers.

According to these theorists, all who enter the temple must pass a satisfactory examination in the abracadabra of theology before they can be permitted to practise our peculiar system of morality. With these notions we have no sympathy. The tie which binds our Order together is not a religious bond; within our halls the just and true, of every creed and clime, receive a joyful welcome, and all bow together at the shrine of one Almighty Father. This is Freemasonry as it exists amongst the English-speaking peoples of the earth, and as thus practised it is a source of strength to the nations, and an honour to the age in which we live. But, on the other hand, we remark with sorrow that certain brethren on the Continent are striving to blot out from the illumined statutes of the Craft that first and grandest law, which proclaims that all Masons must believe in the "glorious Architect of Heaven and earth." Upon what is our morality founded, and of what worth are all our professions of truth and virtue, if we deny the existence of a superintending Providence, to whom our actions are known, and who will reward or punish all men according to their deserts? Can the unity, to which we have alluded, be maintained amongst brethren who thus ignore the Source of all union, strength, and goodness? And let us further enquire whether they contemplate the inevitable result of their foolish efforts, should they unhappily succeed in eliminating from the Masonic ritual all recognition of the Being of a Supreme and Overruling Power? We greatly fear that our French and German brethren have not counted the cost of victory, as, instead of enlarging the boundaries of the Masonic empire by enlisting the services of Materialists and Atheists, they will find that all orthodox Freemasons, who cling to the traditions of the Order, will regard their new allies with abhorrence, and resolutely deny recognition as brethren to men who deny their God. There is as wide a gulf between rational freedom of thought and the monstrous anarchy of Atheism, as there is between disciplined knowledge and untutored imagination. The temple of Freemasonry must not be converted into an arena for the war of sects. It is not a Pantheon in which every man may set up his own god and call upon all around to worship; neither is it a forum for the discussion of political dogmas, or for dissertations on the comparative advantages of different forms of civil government. In England, Freemasons perform their social, religious, and national duties, without compromising the Craft by endeavouring to identify their own sayings or doings with the Order to which they happen to belong; and it is this reticence which has won for Freemasonry in England the respect and esteem of all parties in the State. It would be well if some of our continental brethren were to pursue a similar course, and, resting firmly upon the beautiful basis of belief in the Great Architect of the Universe, they may feel assured of the reality of the bond which now unites us—a bond which must of necessity be weakened, if not destroyed, if they rashly resolve to forsake the time-honoured paths of their fathers in the vain hope to consolidate, upon the ruins of Freemasonry, a society destitute alike of faith, hope, and charity.

INSTALLATION MEETING OF THE SOUTHERN STAR LODGE, No. 1158.

The installation meeting of this highly prosperous Lodge, was held at the Montpelier Tavern, Walworth, on Tuesday, the 24th inst., when Bro. G. C. Clarke, S.W., was most ably installed in the chair of K.S., by Bro. T. H. Pulsford, the retiring Master, who is well known as a zealous and efficient Mason. It was resolved to hold the summer banquet of the lodge on the last Wednesday in July, at the Greyhound Hotel, Richmond, a choice which we are satisfied the brethren will not regret, as Bro. Noyce the proprietor has won deserved renown for his excellent catering. Among the brethren present, were:—Bros. H. Thompson, P.M., the father of the lodge; C. E. Thompson, J.W.; J. Thomas, P.M., 507; Rev. D. Shaboe, P.M., 554; Dr. Goldsbro' P.M., 201; R. Wentworth Little, P.M., 975; J. Stevens, P.M., 720; H. Massey, S.W., 619, and about 40 other brethren.

WE HAVE the gratification to place before our readers the opinion of one of our American contemporaries with reference to THE FREEMASON:—

OUR EXCHANGERS.—We welcome to our list the London FREEMASON, No. 7 of which is now before us. It is edited with great ability, and is pregnant with local news and matter of general interest to the Craft in all parts of the world. We have made some extracts from it, which will be found in this department. This weekly will soon give reports of Masonic doings "in every country and clime," and it must soon become a valuable aid to the cosmopolitan Masonic literature of the day.—New York Despatch.

GARIBALDI AND THE CRAFT.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—With reference to your remarks which appeared in last week's FREEMASON, respecting General Garibaldi, I have much pleasure in stating for the information of the Brethren, that when General Garibaldi visited England he was unanimously elected an honorary member of the Polish National Lodge, No. 534. A day having been appointed by himself, he was waited upon at Stafford House (the residence of the Duke of Sutherland) by a deputation of the Brethren, whom he met with true brotherly and Masonic feeling; he was then presented with the Commander's jewel of the lodge (the White Eagle of Poland, suspended from a gold crown), which he received with evident pleasure and satisfaction, and also cordially accepted an invitation to a banquet, but unfortunately was unable to attend.

Yours fraternally,

FRED. H. GILBART.

I.P.M. of the Polish National Lodge, and one who attended the deputation.

A CAUTION.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—I would caution the Craft against Henry Herbert Southcott (about thirty-five years of age, height about 5 ft. 9 in., dark, pitted with small-pox), who obtained assistance by way of loan from us, to take him to Teignmouth (where he said his wife was living), on his way from London, where he had been an inmate of Guy's Hospital.

He had no certificate but his tale was most plausible and he was well up in his work, and said he was a member of the Sun Lodge at Exmouth. Subsequent inquiries showed that such a person had been a member of that lodge in which he had been initiated, but that he had left it in disgrace. He had also some years since lived at Teignmouth, but had committed such offences against the law while at both those places as would render it very unlikely he would ever be seen there again.

Yours fraternally,

W.M., 663.

THE ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE IN INDIA.

Chapter of Sovereign Princes, Rose Croix of H.R.D.M. BOMBAY.

The Sovereign Princes belonging to this Chapter held a meeting on Wednesday, 21st April last, at Cambala Hill, Bombay.

Present, the Illus. Bro. the Hon. J. Gibbs, 32°, P.M.W.S., M.W.S.; Ext. Bro. E. Tyrrell Leith, 18°, High Prelate; Ext. Bro. Andrew Hay, 18°, 1st General; Ext. Bro. J. Percy Leith, 18°, 2nd Genl. The chapter was opened in due form. Brother J. Seager, a M.M., was introduced, and, after having been duly obligated as a Serving Brother, was appointed Outer Guard. Bros. Townley Macartney Filgate, Thomas Edward Taylor, and Henry Edwd. Astley, M.M.'s, who had been duly proposed and seconded at the last meeting, and for whom the ballot appeared clear, having been first made Knights of the East and West by the M.W.S., were introduced, and duly created and installed as Knights of the Pelican and Eagle, and Sovereign Princes Rose Croix of H.R.D.M. The minutes of the last meeting were then read and confirmed. There being no other business before the chapter, it was closed in due form, and the Sovereign Princes adjourned to the banquet, which had been kindly provided for them by Ext. Bro. Percy Leith. The chair was filled by the M.W.S., who gave in due course the usual loyal and Masonic toasts. A most agreeable and successful evening was spent by the Sovereign Princes, who afterwards separated in peace and harmony.—We must not close our report of this meeting without adding a few remarks. The Bombay Chapter is the first Masonic body that has ever worked any of the Ineffable Degrees in India Proper, and we therefore hail its establishment with the most sincere pleasure. We congratulate its members on possessing in their first M.W.S. one who, from his high position in Masonry, and personal qualifications, is so eminently well fitted to fill the regal chair and to support the honour of the Ancient and Accepted Rite in the East. The degree of Rose Croix, from its antiquity, its splendid and solemn ritual, and the beauty of the truths which it inculcates, ranks deservedly high amongst the Orders of Christian Masoury. We earnestly hope that the impetus which has thus been given to the work of higher Masonry in Bombay may be carried still further in the East with the happiest results. We would offer, in conclusion, our warmest wishes for the welfare and success of the Bombay Chapter of Rose Croix. May it ever flourish, an honour to the Order, and may the enterprising labours of its promoters be amply rewarded by the cordial co-operation of its future members.

GRAND INSTALLATION FESTIVAL,
WINDSOR.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

We have pleasure in THE FREEMASON to-day of publishing a report of a Masonic gathering, in the Royal borough of Windsor, of no ordinary interest and importance, the chief object of the same being the installation of one of the most beloved and accomplished Masons in this kingdom as Grand Master of the Province of Berks and Bucks, which office had not been filled since the retirement of the late Most Noble the Marquis of Downshire, the duties having been temporarily, and we may add efficiently, discharged by the Grand Registrar, Bro. Æneas J. McIntyre.

Immediately it became known that Brother Sir DANIEL GOOCH, Bart., M.P., of Clewer Park, Windsor, who for about seventeen years so zealously promoted the interests of the Order in Wiltshire as D.P.G.M. of that province, had been appointed G.M. of Berks and Bucks, great satisfaction was felt by the brethren of the two counties, and Sir Daniel met a most cordial reception at each of the lodges in his new province, which he recently visited. The popularity of Sir Daniel was shown on Friday, the 21st, when some 120 members of the Craft, including several distinguished officers, assembled at Windsor on the occasion of his installation; and there can be no doubt whatever that the worthy Baronet's rule will be attended with results gratifying not only to the Province of Berks and Bucks, but also to the great and influential body of Masons in this kingdom.

The Provincial Grand Lodge was held in the National Schoolroom, Windsor, the use of which had been kindly granted by the Vicar, neither the "Etonian" or "Castle" Lodges being sufficiently spacious to accommodate the brethren who assembled to do honour to the worthy Baronet. The lodge was opened soon after one o'clock by Brother Herve, the Grand Secretary, and having been raised from the first to the third degree, the Grand Secretary stated the chief object for which the lodge had been summoned. A deputation having retired to an anteroom, and returned to the lodge in procession, escorting Sir Daniel, who was received with much enthusiasm, the installation ceremony proceeded, being admirably performed by the Grand Secretary, who, with several other Grand and Provincial Officers, heartily congratulated Sir Daniel upon his accession to the high office.

The GRAND MASTER said it afforded him sincere pleasure to appoint the Rev. Sir John Hyes, Bart., Past Grand Chaplain of England, Deputy Grand Master of the Province; and Sir John was invested amidst general applause.

The appointment and investment of the Provincial Grand Officers was then continued as follows:—S.W., Bro. Geo. Botly, 414; J.W., R. H. Gibbons, 209; Chaplain, R. Simpson, 771; Treasurer, Holden, 771; Registrar, W. H. Cave, 574; Secretary, W. Biggs, 1101; S.D., J. T. Morland, 745; J.D., J. S. Pullen, 209; Supt. of Works, R. C. Hurley, 1101; Director of Ceremonies, A. Lloyd Taylor, 591; Assist. ditto, Strange, 209; Sword Bearer, Blowers, 414; Organist, F. Marriott, 209; Pursuivant, J. Bradley, 414; Grand Stewards: Brown, 1101; J. T. Stransom, 1101; P. Spokes, 414; Geo. Boyer, 574; John Cross, 209; and Croydon, 770.

Bro. J. T. Morland, P.M. of the "Abbey" Lodge, Abingdon, having served as steward to both the Charities, was presented with the jewel to which he had thus become entitled, and which, as the G.M. observed, he had well earned.

The GRAND MASTER, in a feeling speech, expressed his sense of the honour that had been conferred upon him, and thanked the brethren for their attendance. He was fully determined to do his duty to the Craft so far as was in his power, and he hoped that the province would hereafter occupy a still higher position than that which it now held among the provinces of this land. The G.M. subsequently spoke in favour of a more systematic plan being adopted for assisting the Masonic charities, for which purpose proper steps will be taken.

The P.G. Treasurer reported that the balance in hand amounted to £139 14s.

The bye-law requiring fees from P.G. Stewards was rescinded.

A vote of thanks to the Vicar for the use of the schoolroom was cordially adopted, and the lodge voted five guineas towards the funds being raised to restore the parish church.

The thanks of the lodge were also accorded to the Mayor for the use of the Town Hall for the banquet.

At about three o'clock the lodge was closed in due form.

The brethren who attended were—the R.W. the Prov. Grand Master, Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart., M.P.; the V.W. the D.P.G.M., the Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, Bart.; the V.W. the D.P.G.M., S. Wittey, Wilts; the

V.W. the D.P.G.M., R. J. Spiers, Oxford; the R.W. the Past P.G.M., A. W. Adair, Somerset; the R.W. P.D.G.M., W. T. Mercer, China; John Herve, Grand Sec. of England; W. Smith, C.E., P.G.St.; C. W. Wyndham, P.P.G. Registrar, Wilts; E. A. Moore, Grand Registrar, Wilts; R. C. Hurley, W.M., "Greyfriars," Reading; J. T. Morland, P.M., "Abbey," Abingdon; C. C. Ridout, W.M., 209; Blandy-Jenkins, W.M.; Blowers, W.M., 414; J. S. Tolley, W.M.; Col. Richardson-Gardner, 771; J. Toomer, P.P.G.S.D., Wilts; W. Biggs, P.P.S.G.W., Wilts; and a number of past and present Grand Officers and other brethren, numbering rather more than 100, and including Bros. Holden, Beale, W. H. Cave, Gibbons, Turner, Hodges, Whyley, Ritchins, Boyes, Wigginton, Powell, Layton, Martin, Pullen, Fuller, Dempster, Case, Stacey, Pennicott, Briggs, Palmer, G. Boyer, Claydon, Geo. J. Cosburn, J. Smith, Shepherd, T. Chandler, Stransom, Botly, Lovegrove, Bradley, Smith, Reid, J. T. Brown, J. W. Hounslow, Rapson, D'Almaine, E. Morland, J. T. Morland, J. Cave, Tilley, Scott, Saunders, Cair, Fountain, Farrer, Ford, J. Wheeler, Pitt, Driffild, Wale, J. A. Scott, Rogers, Bulley, Moxhay, Weedon, Jameson, Taylor, Portsmouth, Whitehouse, C. J. Cave, Scriven, Desborough, Gray, Maskell, &c.

THE BANQUET

was served at four o'clock in the Town Hall, by Mr. Johnson, of the White Hart Hotel, whose catering afforded thorough satisfaction. The bill of fare was as follows:—

Mock Turtle.	Soups.	Printaniunier.
	Ox Tail.
	Fish.
	Salmon.	Turbot.

The Banquet was not only a success as regard the catering, but also on account of the numerous company, every seat being occupied, and the whole arrangements reflected credit on the Stewards. The G. Master presided and was supported by the principal officers. The vocalists were Bros. Marriott and Briggs (St. George's Chapel, Windsor), Bro. Whitehouse (Westminster Abbey), Bro. Kerr Gedge (St. Paul's), whose efficient services were highly appreciated.

By the kind permission of Col. Duncan Baillie, the splendid band of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) performed a choice selection of music during the banquet, Mr. Charles Godfrey conducting.

In proposing the first toast, that of "The Queen and the Craft," the G. Master said he felt quite sure that meeting as they did in the Royal Borough of Windsor, and under the walls of the magnificent Palace of the Queen, they would drink this toast with special pleasure, although as Masons they were ever true to Her Majesty. (Cheers.)

The G.M. said the next toast he had the pleasure of asking them to drink was "The health of the M.W.G.M., the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland." (Cheers.) If he talked for half an hour, which he had not time to do—(laughter)—he could not say more than tell the fact that the G.M. had been installed on no less than 26 occasions. (Cheers.) After such a display of affection on the part of the Craft he should only weaken the toast if he added any words of his own. (Cheers.)

The G.M. then proposed "The health of the Right Hon. the Earl De Grey and Ripon, D.G.M., and the rest of the Grand Officers, past and present," coupling with it the name of Bro. Simpson, G. Ch. of England. (Cheers.)

Bro. the Rev. R. J. SIMPSON, might say unaffectedly that he felt great diffidence in returning thanks in the presence of the oldest Past G. Chaplain, Bro. Sir John Hayes, and of the G. Sec., Bro. Herve, who had on this occasion so distinguished himself as Installing Master. Nevertheless he felt pleased to return sincere thanks on behalf of the Grand Officers. He thought that Grand Lodge was as well furnished in respect of its Grand Officers as it had been for many years past. (Hear, hear.) Earl Percy and Lord Leigh, who were both good Masons, had desired him to say they were sorry they could not be present to do themselves the honour of supporting the new Grand Master in the chair, but they hoped to be able on an early occasion to pay a visit to the Masons of this Province. (Cheers.) He did not consider long speeches desirable, but he would remark that the Grand Lodge was congenial in its character with our own constitution, for they had, so to speak, their Lords and Commons. They had in Grand Lodge not only some of the first men of the day (among them being the President of the Privy Council), but also some of the best and truest Masons who had been promoted to office in Grand Lodge. The more thoroughly the various Lodges in the country were worked, the more would the cream come to the top, and the more would Grand Lodge be fitted with worth and happiness.

Bro. HERVE, the Grand Secretary, then rose and said he had no doubt the brethren would readily guess the purpose to which he should devote the permission of the G.M. to give the next toast. He had that day enjoyed the distinguished honour of placing their Right Worshipful Bro., Sir Daniel Gooch, in the chair of the province, and he could assure them it had afforded him unfeigned pleasure to have that privilege. (Cheers.) He had had the honour of enjoying the intimate friendship of their Grand Master for the past 20 years, and when Sir Daniel asked him to instal him in the chair, they could readily understand that he most cordially, most willingly, and most gratefully consented. (Cheers.) They had now a Brother to preside over them whom they would all admit to be the right man in the right place. (Loud cheers.) Sir Daniel had everything to recommend him which could constitute a good Provincial Grand Master. (Hear, hear.) He was a good father,—(hear, hear)—a good friend, and a good Mason. (Cheers.) What could he say more for Sir Daniel? He could take every office in the Lodge, from that of I.G. up to the position he now occupied. (Cheers.) In every office Sir Daniel knew his duty well, and therefore in every way he was thoroughly fitted to preside over them. (Cheers.) Independently of that, he had served the Stewardship of every charity, and had been a liberal contributor to their funds, and he (Bro. Herve) was glad to announce that at the annual festival of the Masonic Benevolent Institution to be held next January, Sir Daniel would preside, and he trusted that the Lodges of the Province would liberally support him on the occasion, and show they appreciated and honoured the efforts he made for the good of Masonry. (Hear, hear.) He would not trespass on their attention further, because they knew their man. They knew his virtues, and nothing he could say could add to the respect which he was sure the brethren entertained towards him; but he might remark that in a few short years they would all know by experience what a treasure of a Provincial Grand Master they had. (Cheers.) He felt confident the brethren would join with him in drinking the Grand Master's health, not only with good feeling, not only with pleasure, but also with enthusiasm. He asked them to rise and pay Sir Daniel that mark of respect which he was so well entitled to receive at their hands. (Loud cheers.)

The G.M. said he felt deeply sensible of the very kind manner in which his health had been proposed and drank. He regarded this large meeting as a great compliment to himself, brethren having come from distant places in his own Province, as well as from others, to honour the installation ceremony. He trusted that in future years, when they would be able to look back on what he had done rather than anticipate what he promised, they would not regret the step they had taken this day. He could only assure them that his best efforts should be exerted for the good of Masonry in the Province, and he relied upon the assistance of the brethren generally in advancing the interests of the Order. He thanked them heartily for their kind reception, and would now ask them to drink health and long life to one who had been longer known to them than he had himself. They had in their D.G.M. one to whom he felt a great personal obligation, and he was sure he need not detain the brethren by dilating on the many excellent qualities of Sir John Hayes. (Cheers.) He felt sure they would all show how highly they esteemed their D.G.M. (Cheers.) He gave them "The health of the V.W. the D.G.M. and the P.G. officers." (Cheers.)

Bro. the Rev. Sir JOHN HAYES, in the name of the P.G. officers and himself, offered his sincere thanks for the honour they had done them. He trusted that all the officers who had been invested that day, would consider the appointment not only as reward for past services, but also as an encouragement to disseminate the good principles of Masonry throughout the towns and places in the province. (Cheers.) He felt very happy in serving under Sir Daniel, who came to them with such strong Masonic feeling, and with the full approbation of the brethren. The brethren from Wiltshire bore testimony to the excellence of Sir Daniel's character, and the Berks and Bucks Masons might well congratulate themselves on possessing such a ruler. (Cheers.) He believed the Lodges in this Province were prospering, and in great harmony with each other. In conclusion, he hoped the brethren of the different Lodges would give the officers their hearty support. (Cheers.)

The G.M. said it now gave him great pleasure to propose "The health of Bro. Herve, the G. Sec.," with whom he had been acquainted for—(he was almost unpleasant at his time of life to say how long. (Laughter.) He was sure that those who had known Bro. Herve for twenty-three or twenty-four years as he had, were quite aware how much good he had done, and how much the Craft had been benefited by his acceptance of the office of G. Sec. (Cheers.) When the G.M. did him the honour of appointing him P.G.M., he felt that nothing would afford him greater pleasure than to be installed by Bro. Hervey, as he knew he would instal him with his heart. He sincerely hoped Bro. Hervey would long be spared to fulfil the duties of the important office he now held. (Cheers.) He knew they would all join him in giving Bro. Hervey a hearty welcome into this Province, and in wishing him long life and happiness. (Cheers.)

Bro. HERVEY expressed the great gratification he had experienced in coming down to instal his much esteemed friend, Sir Daniel, and his readiness to perform any duty the Province might require of him, if he could thereby advance the interests of Masonry. (Cheers.) He trusted it would not be long before he should again have the pleasure and happiness of coming among them. (Cheers.)

The G.M. suitably proposed "The health of Bro. Mercer, the P.G.M. of China," who briefly replied, and congratulated the Province of Berks and Bucks upon the appointment of Sir D. Gooch to rule over them. (Cheers.)

The G.M. said he would now give what he considered to be the toast of the evening, "The Masonic Charities." (Cheers.) He knew nothing in Masonry that was apart from their charities. It was quite true that on these festive occasions they enjoyed themselves, and rightly so, but sitting, as they did, around the comforts of life, they must not forget there were hundreds of brethren who, he would not say were starving, but who had little power of reckoning where they would get their next dinner. (Hear, hear.) If they made a contract that for every shilling they spent in banquets they should devote a shilling in charity, he was quite sure the funds of their charitable institutions would be vastly augmented. (Hear, hear.) He hoped the lodges in the Province would show their appreciation of the charitable institutions by regularly sending up stewards to support them. Bro. Harvey had told them it had been proposed to him to take the chair of the Festival of the Benevolent Institution in January next, which he should regard as a great honour, but knowing his incompetency to fill that position, he hoped the brethren of Berks and Bucks and Wilts, would make amends by the way in which they would support him. He would associate with the toast the name of Bro. Smith, who, he knew, took a great interest in the Charities. (Cheers.)

Bro. W. SMITH felt honoured in being called upon to respond to the most noble of all the Masonic toasts, "The Masonic Charities;" but he was sorry they had not the company of the representative of the Boys' School, Bro. Binckes, the result of whose appeal for funds brought in during a short time the handsome sum of £15,000. (Cheers.) In alluding to the officers of the Grand Lodge, Bro. Smith said the members of the Privy Council had shown their tact and good judgment in selecting Earl de Grey and Ripon as their President; and, adverting to the Province of Berks and Bucks, assured the brethren it afforded him sincere pleasure to know that the G.M. had appointed a most worthy Brother to rule over them, and one in whom they had full confidence. (Cheers.) He hoped that the financial result of the festival at which Sir Daniel would preside would be eminently satisfactory, and that the brethren of this province would support their Grand Master in a way that would encourage him, on the occasion alluded to. (Cheers.)

The G.M., in complimentary terms, proposed the health of the G.R., Bro. Æneas J. McIntyre, late acting P.G.M. of Berks and Bucks, a toast which met a most cordial reception.

The G.M. next gave "The health of the Right Worshipful the P.G.M. of Wilts, Brother the Lord Methuen; the D.P.G.M., Bro. Wittey; and the P.G. Officers, past and present." (Cheers.) He felt with regard to this toast a stronger enthusiasm than the brethren around him could feel, as he served as D.P.G.M. during the whole 17 or 18 years that Lord Methuen had filled the office of P.G.M., and he had received from that nobleman the greatest support, and from the brethren of Wilts generally everything he could have wished. He was pleased to see present several Masons from that province, whose faces were as familiar to him as those of his own children. He did not leave that province without very great regret, for it was hard, after 17 years' pleasant association with the brethren, to feel that the link was cut, because he had always received so much kindness and good feeling from all the brethren. He was pleased that the office he held so long in Wilts had been transferred to a brother worthy to fill it. (Cheers.) It was his privilege to initiate Bro. Wittey, and perform several other ceremonies, and the last thing he did was to advise the G.M. to appoint Bro. Wittey in his (Sir Daniel's) place. (Cheers.) He did not think he had done anything of so much value to the Province of Wilts as he had by making that recommendation.

(Cheers.) He was quite sure they would give their Wiltshire brethren a good reception, and drink success to that province, coupled with the name of Bro. Wittey. (Cheers.)

Bro. WITTEY, in returning thanks, said he was indeed glad that the brethren had assembled in such numbers to do honour to their new Grand Master, who, he felt quite satisfied, was "the right man in the right place." (Cheers.) He trusted that in both the provinces strenuous efforts would be made in the cause of charity, and that they would ever show a readiness to help their indigent brethren, placing them free from want and on the road to prosperity. (Cheers.) He thanked them for the honour they had done to the Masons of Wilts, and in their name offered Sir Daniel most hearty congratulations on the occasion of his installation as G.M. of Berks and Bucks. (Cheers.)

"The health of the Visitors" was proposed and responded to by Bros. BOURNE and STERNE, one of whom said he had been a captive in America, and would have been murdered had he not given the sign of distress, which was fortunately recognised by his captor, a Mason, who spared his life; while the other observed that he had travelled in India and other parts of the world, and had often experienced the great advantages of Masonry. The speeches of both gentlemen were well received.

The G.M. spoke of the admirable manner in which the P.G. Treasurer (Bro. Holden) and the P.G. Sec. (Bro. Gibbons) had discharged their duties, and then proposed their healths.

Bro. HOLDEN suitably responded.

Bro. BIGGS, the newly-appointed P.G. Sec., followed, and, alluding to the festival at which Sir Daniel is to preside in January next, expressed his hope that the brethren of the province would rally round him on that interesting occasion, and show their determination to support him in his efforts to promote the welfare of the noble charity. He trusted that stewards would go up from this province, and also from Wilts, with lists that would, from every point of view, be regarded as satisfactory. (Cheers.)

The G.M. expressed the thanks of the province to the "Etonian" and "Castle" Lodges for the very hearty reception they had accorded to the Prov. Grand Lodge, and for the excellent arrangements which had been made. (Cheers.) He felt much pleasure in asking the brethren to drink the health of the W.M.'s of the two lodges. (Cheers.)

Bro. RIDEOUT (W.M. of the "Etonian") and Bro. TOLLEY (W.M. of the "Castle" Lodge) severally responded.

The Tyler's toast was then given, and this pleasant and successful assemblage of Masons broke up. We should mention that the P.G.M. wore the splendid regalia presented to him a short time ago by the Province of Wilts.

IRISH LIFEBOATS.—Captain David Robertson, R.N., the Assistant Inspector of Lifeboats to the National Lifeboat Institution, has during the past two months been engaged in inspecting the 28 lifeboats of the society on the Irish coast. Without a single exception, he found the boats in admirable order, the crews expressing the utmost confidence in them, and the local committees manifesting everywhere considerable zeal in the management of the lifeboat stations. It may be stated that the Institution has expended upwards of £15,000 on these 28 lifeboat establishments, and that the support of the Irish boats involves an annual expenditure of about £1,400, which is partly met by the parent society in London, and partly by local subscriptions.

THE PHILHARMONIC MUSIC HALL, Islington, was opened on Whit-Monday, under the sole management of Bro. Samuel Adams. The entire building has been decorated in a very elegant manner, and may now be considered one of the handsomest Halls in London. Brother W. Saunders, the well-known builder and decorator, of Guildford-street, Russell-square, had been entrusted with the work, and it reflects great credit for the able manner he has carried it out. The entertainment embraces first-class talent, the programme including the names of Miss Louise Sherrington, Miss Fitzhenry, the Sisters Collins, &c., and Messrs. Arthur Lloyd, St. Albyn, Professor Thomas, &c., &c., together with an excellent band. In the course of the evening Bro. S. Adams was called for. On making his appearance, he was quite overcome at his enthusiastic reception. He stated that when he had the pleasure of addressing them on a former occasion he thought it for the last time in that Hall; but he had to thank many kind friends (and many were present) for their influence and assistance, by which he was reinstated in the proud position of lessee and manager; and while he held that position it would be his study to do everything in his power to render the Hall attractive, and promote the comfort of its visitors. Bro. Adams, at the conclusion of his speech, met with a perfect ovation.

SHOWING A FREEMASON'S SIGN.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR.—Your account of how the Mason's word was divulged reminds me of a similar circumstance in relation to the sign.

In the good town of R., in Berkshire, dwell many Quakers, and among them not a few Masons. Mr. — we will call him Jones—also dwelt there. He was a very inquisitive man, and always wanted to know everything. One day he was sitting in the coffee-room of a hotel kept by one of the Craft, and a good many others with him. The conversation turned on Freemasonry, and Mr. Jones pricked up his ears amazingly in hopes of hearing something; however, he was very naturally disappointed, the remarks being so vague and general as rather to mislead than enlighten. There happened to be present a worthy Friend who belonged to the Craft, and who was anxious that Mr. Jones should at least not go unrewarded for his inquiries. Presently he turned to the inquisitive gentleman and said,

"Friend, dost thou really desire to see a Freemason's sign?"

"Indeed I do—very much," was the reply.

"Art thou sure thou canst be secret?"

"Of course! I promise that!"

"And if I show thee the sign of a Freemason, wilt thou honestly state to the brethren here present that thou hast seen it?"

"Yes; sure."

"And thou wilt pay for a bottle of port if I show it thee?"

"Certainly I will."

"But if thou sayest thou art not satisfied, I will pay for a bottle of the same."

"Well, that is only fair."

"The sign must be shown thee in secret; therefore come with me into a private room."

Mr. Jones accompanied Bro. Broadcloth, full of trembling anticipation. Arrived upstairs, the Quaker locked the door, and put paper in the keyhole; he then went carefully all round the room tapping the walls to sound if any person could hear. Mr. Jones trembled, but stood his ground. Having most leisurely made his arrangements, the Quaker Brother took Mr. Jones roughly by the neck and led him to the window. Then he whispered,

"Look forth, and tell me what thou seest."

"I see the front of the house," said Jones.

"Dost thou not see the name of the house on the pole?"

"Yes," replied Jones.

"And is not the sign of the house on it?"

"Yes; the Crimson Hippopotamus," said Jones.

"And is not the landlord of the house a Freemason?"

"Yes, I know he is," said Jones again.

"And is not that his sign?" pursued the Quaker.

"Of course it is."

"Then, Friend, have I not performed my promise, and shown thee a Freemason's sign?"

Jones saw he was in for it, begged the Quaker to be silent, declared himself satisfied, and paid for the wine. But the story somehow got wind, and so, Mr. Editor, perhaps you will print it, in case an incorrect version should appear.

Yours,
CRYPTONYMUS.

PEACE, LOVE, HARMONY, FIDELITY.

(An appropriate Song on closing Lodge.)

By BRO. W. H. SANDHAM, CORK.

AIR—"God Save the Queen."

In peace, love, harmony,

Brethren, we now agree,

This lodge should close.

While absent all of ye,

Good men and Masons be,

View faults forgivingly,

Ease each one's woes.

Fidelity's the word,

Like mighty two-edged sword—

Fidelity!

That man whose heart it rules,

May be despised by fools,

But him for Heaven schools

Fidelity.

If here on Egypt's shore,

This lodge should meet no more

In converse sweet,

May all who saw the light—

That blaze on Horeb's height!—

Good Masons, kind, upright,

In Canaan meet.

BRO. EISTEN, who was killed on the North-Eastern Railway at Thirsk on Sunday week while riding in the Scotch express, was a member of the Glasgow Kilwinning Lodge, No. 4, and once S.W. of it. He was much respected by all who knew him. The coroner's inquest closed on Tuesday, when the jury found that the accident was caused by the negligence of the pointsman; but that the negligence was not sufficiently culpable to amount to manslaughter.

CHAPTER I.—CONTINUED.

THE TWO FRIENDS AND SOCIETY.

Madge has almost given up smoking since he married, but, out of good fellowship, lights his second cigar, and eyeing Frank furtively, at length says,

"Well, old fellow, dropped into a brown study? What's the row?"

"Hang Society, say I. Look here Madge. I was staying once at a place in the north of England, where, in fact, I served my articles. My father, as I dare say you know, died when I was very young; and I was, at the age of sixteen, left to my own resources. I went to a lawyer's at Hartsea, and for the first two years I never made the acquaintance of a single lady in that hospitable place. I was always a social sort of fellow, and had every temptation to go to the dogs; and very little, except my own high principles, as I suppose our worthy vicar would call them, to save me from committing myself, as Forester seems to have done. Since I have been here, people have treated me better, thanks to the kindness of the Wraytons, who themselves have only recently been admitted into the mystic circle."

"I thought you were a Mason, Ashburn, and rather a swell amongst the ancient and honourable fraternity; and I always understood that Masonry was a passport into society."

"So it is in some places; but more abroad than in England, I think. On the Continent, it will admit a fellow almost anywhere, I am told, if you are a Templar or a Rose Croix; but in England it depends very much upon circumstances. Masonry introduced me to your uncle, Mr. Brigham; and I dare say I owe much to it as to anything in being so well received in Marton as I have been."

"You don't want, I suppose, to make me think that people are everywhere the same as at Hartsea?"

"No, thank God, they are not, or else I am sorry for any poor beggar who has nothing to recommend him but his education, his family, and his good breeding. I do know one or two houses where young men are admitted as friends of the family, if only they bring a gentlemanly bearing and a decent character as their recommendations. There were some charming people whom I once met at a party at Hartsea, who immediately gave me an invitation to go over to Strandhern, where they lived. Strandhern is an old town and boasts its abbey. I went. Mrs. Cokeleigh received me as if I were a son. Her daughters (there were four or five, I forget which) treated me almost as if I were a brother. I never enjoyed myself so much in my life, I think, as I did the first time I went there. I used often to go to their house, starting from Hartsea on Saturday evening and spending the Sunday with them, and I have come home on Monday morning a happier, and, I think, a better man."

"I wonder you did not fall in love with one of the fair daughters."

"So do I, my boy. I think I should have done so, only I was too poor to think of anything of the kind."

"Now, look at Forester," Frank continued, "he came here to the Marton Bank, a year ago. Neither the manager of the bank nor anyone else, except the Wraytons, who are connexions of his, I believe, took any notice of him. Having no particular hobby to keep him out of mischief, and not being, intellectually, a very bright specimen of humanity, he feels himself very dull in his lodgings of an evening—as I have all before now (and you too)—and so spends his time at the billiard-rooms, concert-halls, the theatre, and all that sort of thing. I daresay he's been drunk once or twice. I've seen him once myself, awfully tight; and, because he falls in love with a barmaid, whom he means to marry, I fully believe, society, which has given him no chance of falling in love with a lady, is disgusted. He is not to be invited any more to the few houses which he was allowed to attend once a year, on the occasion of the annual dance (when any bachelor is an acquisition—I may say, a god-send), and society gives him the cut direct. Forester's is not an isolated case either; I know numbers of fellows in our great towns, who, if taken up by decent people, would become, in time, valuable citizens; but go to the bad simply and solely because society ignores their very existence. Take my word for it, Madge, as I said before, if Forester goes to the deuce, society will be to blame."

CHAPTER II.

THE MASONIC SECRET DISCOVERED.

It has been hinted that Marmaduke Forester, otherwise known as "Miss Fanny," was a fool. I don't mean to say that he was an idiot; but there can be but little doubt about his being not so bright as he might be.

A few days after the colloquy related in the last chapter had taken place, relative to his conduct generally, the hero—if there be one in this story—was found sitting in Frank Ashburn's rooms, asking that gentleman, for the thirtieth time, if he didn't think he could get him into a Freemasons' lodge. Frank was a good-natured fellow, and permitted Mr. Forester, who was a much younger man than himself, and not at all the sort of companion he cared for, to come to his rooms occasionally, just to keep him out of mischief elsewhere.

"I say, Frank—I mean Mr. Ashburn—you might propose me."

"You needn't Mister me, my dear fellow; call me Ashburn." Frank never permitted any but his very intimate friends to use his Christian name.

"Well, then, Ashburn, I wish you'd propose me. I want to be a Freemason."

"Can't do it, my dear fellow."

"Why not?"

"Because—well, because you are too young."

"I am twenty-two."

"Well, then, you can't afford it; it will cost you five guineas, and more, at the first start."

"I had £100 left the other day, and I don't know what to do with it."

"Put it in the savings' bank," said Frank, tersely; but added, "I'll think about it, but you know I can't guarantee your being accepted."

"No, of course not."

"Where are you going to-night?"

"Well, I am going to the billiard-room at the Vulture."

"Take my advice, and drop that business, Forester. Good night; I have an engagement; very sorry; glad to see you another evening;" so saying, Frank Ashburn dismissed his eccentric guest. An hour afterwards Frank is walking leisurely down to the Raymonds, who have a nice little house just out of the town, on the Bishop-road, when he stumbles against young Forester, who is going for a walk with Miss Robertson, the barmaid of the Vulture.

The Raymonds were just going to have tea, and cordially invited Frank to join them.

"By the way, Mr. Ashburn, how is your protege getting on?" Mrs. Raymond asks. "Madge has told me how you stand up for Mr. Forester, who certainly seems in need of a supporter just now."

"Well, to tell you the truth, Mrs. Raymond, I hardly know what to make of him. Thanks; another cup of tea if you please."

"Do you think he is irreclaimable? You take sugar, I believe?"

"Thanks; well, I really don't know what to say. He's been bothering me to-night about Freemasonry, Madge."

"Ah, I am glad my husband is not a Mason."

"Why, Mrs. Raymond? Don't you know that Masons are, of all men, the most loyal to the ladies? Have you never heard the Freemasons' song—supposed to have been written by Swift—where they say—

No mortal can more
The ladies adore
Than a free and an accepted Mason."

"Well, I never heard it," laughingly replied charming May Raymond, "and I daresay my chief objection to it is a very foolish one, but, I must confess, I should not like my husband to have any secrets from me."

"But will you make Forester a Mason?" Madge asks.

"Not exactly."

"Why not?" enquires Mrs. Raymond.

"Because I have too great a regard for the principles of Masonry to think of introducing a man who would do us no credit."

"Then there must be something in it, or you would not be so particular."

"My dear Mrs. Raymond, there is a great deal in it; but I am sorry to say many Freemasons' lodges are not half particular enough in the selection of candidates, and Freemasonry suffers in consequence."

"I say, Frank," Madge says presently, "I've a good idea. Do you remember the description in 'Verdant Green,' how he was made a Mason?"

"Yes."

"Very well, then, I remember in 'Punch's Almanack,' for '64, there was a list of absurd questions to be asked of a candidate of Freemasonry. Let's work up some questions like those; you compose a ceremony of a terrific character; we will get some fellows to help us, and we'll make him a Freemason in our way."

"I don't see the fun of it."

"Well, I do. You say he's always bothering you about being made a Freemason. There may be some of the brethren not so scrupulous as you; and, if you can choke him off, as the saying is, by a lark of this kind, you will do no one any harm, and relieve yourself to a great extent of an unenviable encumbrance."

"Well, I will think of it."

About a week had elapsed. Frank had thought the matter over in his own mind, had spoken to a few friends, had enlisted Mrs. Raymond's sympathies and needle in the good cause, and finally informed Mr.

Marmaduke Forester that, having seriously weighed his claims in the balance, he had resolved to admit him to the ancient and honourable fraternity of Freemasons, but he warned him he would have frightful trials to go through, but that, if he persevered and showed true courage, he would be received as "a brother of the mystic tie."

Mr. Forester had been informed that previous to his admission he must answer the following questions—

1. How old are you?
2. Where were you born?
3. Why were you born there?
4. How many children have you got, and if not why not?
5. Have you ever been in love, and if so how often?
6. What was the colour of your paternal grandmother's back hair?
7. How many godfathers and godmothers have you had since your christening, and how many before?
8. How is your poor feet?
9. Describe the points of similitude between Jonadab the son of Rechab, and Julius Cæsar?
10. If the material hemisphere, preponderating influences, geometrical progression, and balance weights of a clock are very much behind time, how is it that people eat tripe on a Friday?
11. Charcoal?
12. What is a stern reminder?
13. Are you prepared to give up eating and drinking, particularly both?
14. Are you a?

Mr. Frank Forester was given the above questions on the 12th of March, and was informed that if he returned them, carefully answered, to the Supreme Grand Pontiff Secretary, on or before the 17th of that month, care of the Post-office, he would be allowed to proceed with his initiation at the meeting of the Lodge, held at midnight, at the hall of Egyptian Mysteries, situated at the back of the Chainway. The hall afore-said was nothing more nor less than an old warehouse, or rather mill, said to be haunted, which had been tenanted for years, and which stood at the back of Messrs. Wrayton and Ashburn's office, at the outskirts of the town.

The paper containing the questions had been ornamented with double triangles, a serpent with its tail in its mouth, some unknown hieroglyphics, and the square and compasses. Mr. Forester carefully examined the list, and came to the conclusion that though some of the queries seemed to be of a queer character (no pun intended), no doubt if they could be solved they would be found to contain the germs of some mighty mysteries; so he set himself resolutely to work to answer them.

To No. 1, he answered twenty-three next birthday. At No. 3, he came to the conclusion that he did not know, but would ask his mother. No. 4 elicited a reply to the effect that he supposed he hadn't any children because he wasn't a mother; he was very sorry, but he couldn't help it. No. 5 drew from him the fact, that he had loved often and well, but that now one star was predominant, which would shine through the darkness for ever. He had a notion that stars had something to do with Freemasonry; and he thought the last idea might prove his eligibility. He couldn't tell the colour of his "grandmother's back hair;" rather fancied he had two godfathers and three godmothers, or three godfathers and two godmothers, but when they became so hadn't the remotest idea. His poor feet were better, thank you. Gave up No. 9 as a bad job. No. 10, ditto. Didn't eat tripe on a Friday, but added, on consideration that it might be a dish peculiar to Masonry, that it was good for those who liked it, no doubt. No. 11 fairly puzzled him, but thinking it meant something he should not agree to, he boldly wrote "No" after it. Rather thought that he should be able to answer No. 12 better after he had been made a Mason than before, so gave it up for the present. He puzzled himself very much over No. 14, but finally thought that the reiteration "Are you?"

Mr. Forester was informed, on the evening of the 17th of March, 1866, that the eventful night had come. He had answered the Neophyte questions so well that it was determined to initiate him into the secrets and mysteries of Ancient Masonry, and he was to repair at the hour of low twelve to the subterranean caverns beneath the citadel, meaning the old mill in the Draycot-road. Accordingly our hero made his appearance in perfect good faith, but yet, it must be admitted, in some little fear and trembling, near midnight on St. Patrick's Day, and waited patiently for some minutes outside the mill—a low irregular building, which stood by the side of what had once been a good mill pond, but was now little more than a stream. The dam had long gone the way of all flesh, and nothing was left to remind one of the purposes to which the place had been put but part of the great mill wheel, and a huge iron tube—large enough to admit a person on all fours—which was lying on the bank.

ERRATUM.—In our report of the Gresham Lodge, 869, last week, the name of Bro. Gompertz, S.W., was erroneously printed "Gomperby."

LECTURE ON "LIGHT," BY THE REV. BRO. SMYTH, BELFAST.

On Thursday evening, May 20th, the Rev. Hugh Smyth, of White-house, delivered a lecture on "Light," in the Ballysillan Presbyterian Church (Rev. W. C. M'Cullagh's), the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the Ligoniel Masonic Charity Fund. There was a very large attendance of members of the Craft, the majority of whom wore the costume of the Brotherhood.

On the motion of the Rev. Brother W. C. M'Cullagh, seconded by Brother John G. M'Gee, the chair was taken amid loud applause by Bro. Wm. Johnston, Esq., M.P., of Ballykilbeg.

The Rev. Lecturer was received with loud applause. He said he had thrown the subject he had chosen into the form of a square, or rather of a quadrilateral figure, and would ask the attention of his audience to the subject "Light," with respect to its functions in the material, social, ecclesiastical, and the Masonic worlds—if the latter could be called a world. On the first head he might go back beyond the boundaries of human existence to the creation of light as recorded in the Sacred Volume. There it was set forth, how the candle of the Lord had been lighted in the tabernacle of man when he was first introduced into his earthly home, making it a gorgeously furnished and fitted up habitation. How changed from what it was before the gloomy, unbroken solitude and silence was made radiant with light and beaming with beauty! Chaotic confusion fled away, and harmony and concord took its place. For deformity it put on beauty, and for disorder rigorous regularity; from a deep dungeon of impenetrable gloom it came forth as from a mirror, to reflect the greatness and glory, the majesty and dominion of Him who spake and all things stood fast. The lecturer then went on to speak of the boon which light conferred upon humanity. The most fertile imagination could suggest no possible improvement in it as a gift. It was pure, free, and abundant; universally diffused, equally distributed, and congenial to the eye. It was no respecter of persons, for it made its visits with equal regularity at the castle and the cottage, with the prince and the peasant. It was always in men's pathway, yet it was never a stumbling-block in their way; it went wherever it could find entrance however small, and yet it never occupied any room; it rode upon the wind, and quivered on the trembling leaf; it danced on the surging sea, and sparkled in the morning dew drop; it came to nourish the fruits of the field, and to bestow its grateful smile on the tender flower-buds; it enfolded the blushing rose in its tender embrace, and imparted to the lily its delicate tint; decked the brow of nature with a chaplet of flowers, and invested her with that gorgeous summer robe she was so pleased to wear upon each successive return of the season; it planted its foot upon everything around it, and yet it never left the least trace behind it except in the subtle influences of health and life. (Loud applause.) It was one of the most potent agencies in the universe, and yet it never wantonly broke a spider's web; it was a sovereign in nature, and a servant withal; it never refused to enter the service of any of the other creatures, however mean they might be; and however fickle it might appear to be, it was never known to betray confidence. It had millions of miles to travel, and countless other worlds to visit, and yet it was never behind anywhere. When it crossed the threshold it was to bring joy and gladness to the upright in heart, for it was written that "weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Having at some further length considered the functions of light in the material world, the lecturer ~~was discourse~~, and after some eloquent and appropriate observations on these parts of the subject, he proceeded to the fourth and last—namely, its diffusion throughout the Masonic fraternity. He defined what ancient craft Masonry meant, and what object it set before itself. It was "a system of morality veiled in allegory, and illustrated by symbols." Its design was to teach morality, not religion. It was a system alike unconnected with politics and religion, and it had thus been handed down from generation to generation, and practised by all nations and kindred, and people, who recognise the existence of God. (Hear, hear.) It necessarily touched religion, because morality and virtue, which it pretended to teach, were embraced in religion; but it did not enter into the distinctive principles of Christianity; so that men of all shades of belief could unite in its rites, ceremonies, and practices, and for that reason it was a gross mistake to suppose that it could take the place of religion. The lecturer deprecated as a popular fallacy the notion that Masonry was a secret society, and denied that there was any concealment about its fundamental principle or teaching. The only thing secret in the craft was what might be denominated the accidents of the society, and these were necessary for its proper discipline and order. Bro. Smyth concluded amid loud applause.

MASONIC INSTALLATION AT DERRY.

The brethren of the Masonic order met on Friday week, in their temporary-rooms, Strand-road, for the purpose of installing Captain Wm. E. Scott, J.P., Willaborough, as their Deputy Provincial Grand Master. The Grand Lodge of Derry and Donegal assembled at twelve o'clock, noon. The following brethren were present:—William Dale, P.G.J.W.; John F. Dempster, P.G.S.D.; William Miles, P.G.J.D.; Edward Smith, P.G.S.; Rev. H. Ffolliott, P.G.C.; W. E. Scott, P.D.G.M.-elect, James Skipton, W.M. 52; Major Blackall, John I. Haalett, Henry M'Corkell, Acheson W. Smith, Conolly Skipton, and Robert W. Newton, P.M., 52; Fitzgibbon Louch, H. Gaston Rogan, John Rainger, J. Ramsey, Thomas Lindsay, Joseph Alexander, and J. Horan, 69; D. M'Menamin, Moody, and Colhoun, 102; T. G. M'Murray, James Cairns, John Price, William Hanna, David Hogg, Marcus H. Babington, R. Baird, W. Speers, H. Babington, J. W. M'Arthur, Robert Philson, and Samuel Knox, 164; William Corscaden, 169; J. Macnie, and G. D. Christie, 196; David M'Carter, 256; John Fleming, and William Fleming, 589; John M'Cutecheon, A. W. Walters, George Stafford, R. Gilmour, J. A. M'Lellan, and William Kerr, 640.

The visitors were—John H. Macauley, 158, Dublin; S. Gamble, 188, Strabane; and Gamble, 891, Enniskillen.

A letter from Sir James Stewart, Bart., P.G.M., appointed Captain Scott Deputy Provincial Grand Master, was read, after which the installation ceremony was gone through, and the customary salute accorded to him.

Letters of apology were read from Bro. T. H. Babington, J.P. (Mayor of Derry), and Bro. William Thompson, J.P., who, in consequence of magisterial duties, were unable to attend. A letter of apology was also read from Sir James Stewart, Bart., G.M. Captain Scott having taken his place as Deputy Provincial Grand Master, proceeded to instal Bro. T. G. M'Murray as P.G.S.W.

On the proceedings of the Grand Lodge being brought to a close, Captain Scott invited the brethren to meet him at luncheon in the Northern Hotel, and it is only due to Bro. M'Hutcheson to say that the luncheon was served in his usual good style.

DRUMBO CHURCH ERECTION FUND,
ONTARIO, CANADA.

AN examination of the official papers which appeared in THE FREEMASON of last and previous weeks will sufficiently explain, and I venture to think, justify, my bringing to the notice of my fellow churchmen the object which I have at heart in visiting England at this time.

The Mission of which I have the charge, situated at Princeton, in the diocese of Huron, covers a very large area and is, at present, provided with but one church—a provision utterly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of the district.

This church, a very small one (being but 80 by 60), I was enabled to build by the proceeds obtained from lectures delivered by me, and appeals made by sermons and other agencies, supplemented by free gifts of sand, stone, and other material, most liberally contributed by the members of the mission, who gave, in addition, their personal services, both in digging the foundations and bringing to the site the whole of the material required—a distance, in some cases, of twelve miles.

Before leaving Princeton I had the great consolation of seeing this church (St. Paul's) free from debt, and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

My present object is to provide a second church for Drumbo, the northern portion of my mission, distant about seven miles from St. Paul's Church, Princeton.

In this district are many settlers, mostly emigrants from Great Britain, who are very anxious to have the great blessing of a place of worship in their midst, and who, although too poor to help much financially, are both ready and willing to contribute, as their neighbours in Princeton have done, in labour and material.

The amount required for this good end is but trifling, £1,200 to £1,500 being amply sufficient (with the labour and material given) to provide a suitable church and mission-house; and I appeal with all confidence to God's stewards of wealth in England who are happy in the full enjoyment of all Christian privileges, to extend to their fellow churchmen for whom I plead, the blessings so liberally poured out upon themselves.

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]

HAVING traced the history of the temple erected under the auspices of Zerubbabel, Haggai, and Joshua, upon which record the ceremonies of Royal Arch Masonry, in what may be termed the York Rite, are substantially based, it may be well to retrace our steps and review those traditions which ascribe the origin of the Royal Arch degree to a much earlier period—the antediluvian era. The figure of the Patriarch Enoch stands forth prominently in the first act of this mythical drama, which is probably unknown to the vast majority of Masons at the present day. The legend, however deserves preservation, were it only for the apposite moral attached to its quaint and mystic narrative.

Enoch, the son of Jared, was a man who walked encircled with the love of God, and the visible presence of the Deity shed splendour round his path. To him was the arcana of Divine Wisdom revealed; to him the secrets of nature were unveiled, and the profound obscurities of human thought became irradiated to the spiritual vision of the friend of God. In blissful communion with his Maker, the favoured Enoch rejoiced, and around him floated the atmosphere of Paradise. But the sacred name of the Most High was not communicated to the patriarch until he had acquired the knowledge of all things appertaining to the animal, mineral, and vegetable kingdoms, and had penetrated into mysteries super-mundane and celestial.

Then it was that the Almighty appeared unto him in a dream, and said, “As thou art desirous of knowing my name, follow me and it shall be revealed.” Upon this a mountain seemed to rise to the heavens, and Enoch was swiftly carried to the top thereof, where he was shown a triangular plate of gold upon which was engraved, in brilliant characters, the ever-blessed name of God, which he was admonished by a mystic voice never to pronounce. After this, Enoch was lowered into the bowels of the earth perpendicularly through nine arches, and in the ninth, or deepest, he saw the same brilliant golden plate with the same characters surrounded with a flaming light. Enoch being full of the spirit of the Most Puissant God, built a temple on the very spot under ground, and dedicated it to Jehovah. The entrance to this temple was through nine successive arches in the same form as those he had witnessed in his dream.

Methuselah, the eldest son of Enoch, was the architect of this sacred building, but he knew not the reason for its singular construction. This edifice was erected in the Land of Canaan, which afterwards became the Land of Promise, and, since then, the heritage of Israel. Enoch made a gold plate of a triangular form, a cubit long, and enriched it with the most precious stones. He encrusted this plate on a stone of agate, and engraved thereon the characters he had observed in his dream. The plate was then transported to the vault of the ninth arch, and placed on a pedestal of white marble of a triangular form.

After Enoch had finished the subterranean temple, God appeared to him again, and desired him to make a trap-door of stone in the first arch, and told him it must be laid down with an iron ring to lift up the same occasionally, as, in consequence of the wickedness of mankind, God had determined to visit the world with fire or with the waters of destruction. The nine arches, being finished and closed up accordingly, no person could penetrate or enter therein, and to Enoch alone was known the precious treasure contained in those hidden arches, and he alone, of all men living, knew the true and wondrous name of God. The wickedness of man increased daily; and Enoch, foreseeing that the knowledge of the arts would be lost in the impending deluge or conflagration, and being desirous of preserving the principles of science to the posterity of those whom God was pleased to save, he built two great columns on the highest mountain near him—one of brass to withstand the water, and the other of marble to resist the fire. He engraved on the marble column certain hieroglyphics that there was a precious treasure concealed in arches underground which he had dedicated to God; and on the brazen column he engraved the principles of the liberal arts and sciences. Methuselah was the father of Lamech, and Lamech was the sire of Noah, whose virtues gained him the approval and love of the Most High, who thus spake to him, “I will punish all mankind in general with a deluge, and order you to construct an ark to contain yourself and family, with apartments for a pair of every living creature, as I will save those from the punishment I am about to inflict upon the world.” God then gave Noah the plan for constructing the Ark which the patriarch was 100 years in building, and when it was completed he was 600 years of age and his son Seth 99. About five years before this period, Lamech died aged 777 years. There was therefore not one of the ancient patriarchs since Adam living at the time of the flood except Methuselah, the grandfather of Noah, who was then 969 years old, and as there is no record of his existence in the past diluvian era, there can be no doubt that the most venerable man, in the world, as well as the infant just born, alike perished in the general destruction. God having directed Noah, his sons, and his sons' wives to retire into the Ark, with the living creatures he had selected, the deluge commenced, in the year of the world 1656, and everything was swallowed up in the waters. The most superb cities and monuments were destroyed, and the marble column erected by Enoch did not escape the action of the powerful elements, but by divine permission the column of brass resisted the force of the water, and in this manner the sons of Noah were enabled to transmit to future ages the knowledge of those important sciences which have contributed so much to the welfare of the human race. It is also asserted that the Book of Enoch was given into the charge of Ham,

Within that Ark securely to enshrine
For preservation. These the tables were;
Of which tradition tells, by Ham preserved
From deluge, and in Egypt since laid up
In temples, though concealed by hireling priests,
But not from Moses, skilled in Egypt's lore,
To whom on Sinai they were renewed."

Heraud.

Japhet also carried into the ark images sculptured by his own hand, which are supposed to have prefigured the future races of man, but which eventually gave rise to idolatry when their origin was forgotten.

The sacred Scriptures subsequently record the bondage of the children of Israel to the Egyptians, and their exodus from the land of the Pharaohs under the conduct of their leader Moses. Another Masonic tradition states that in a certain battle the Ark of Alliance was lost in the forest and the same was found by the roaring of a lion, who ceased to roar and crouched on the ground meekly on the approach of the Israelites, although the said lion had just devoured a number of Egyptians who attempted to carry off the Ark. The lion had the key of the Ark secure in his mouth, but dropped it when he saw the High Priest advance, and then retired without offering any violence to the chosen people. Upon the key we again quote from Mackey:—

"In one of the highest degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Rite we find the following explanation of the symbolism of the key which is equally applicable to Royal Arch Masonry. 'The key demonstrates that having obtained the key to our sublime mysteries, the Mason, if he behaves with justice, fervency and zeal to his companions, will soon arrive at the true meaning of the Masonic society.' But the symbolism is here still further extended. It is within the sacred pages of the law that this invaluable key is found which teaches us that it is only in the revelations of the Supreme Architect of the Universe that Divine Truth is to be discovered."

On Thursday week the remains of Bro. Owden, who for some years had kept the Golden Lion, in King-street, Smithfield, were interred in Abney-park Cemetery. Having passed through all the grades of Freemasonry, he was followed to the grave by the W.M. and several P.M.'s and members of the Wellington Lodge.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Royal Dramatic College, at the Adelphi Theatre, on the 31st inst., Bro. Benj. Webster in the chair, the secretary, Bro. J.W. Anson, read the report, and announced that the annual benefit in aid of the college would take place at Drury Lane Theatre, on June 12th. He also stated that the late respected Bro. Thos. Powrie had bequeathed a valuable property in Dundee to the college, and that the funds were in a prosperous state. A vote of thanks was then unanimously accorded to the worthy Master, Bro. Benj. Webster.

Reviews.

"The Freemason," St. Louis, Mo., U.S.A.

We are much pleased with our namesake, notwithstanding the editorial dissent from our exposition of English Masonic law respecting the admission of maimed candidates into the Order. We shall always do battle for the real landmarks of the Craft; but the practice in England since the establishment of a speculative Grand Lodge must surely count for something with other Grand Bodies who have all derived their existence, as well as their code of jurisprudence, from the Grand Lodge of England. However, we have not at present leisure to argue the question at length, but our worthy contemporary may rest assured that upon this point we represent faithfully the dictum of English Masonic authorities. In this number we gladly insert an article from The Freemason of St. Louis, to which we wish every success.

"Monograms," by Bro. D. G. BERRI, Engraver to H.M. Post-office, 36, High Holborn.

In an age when the study of ancient symbolism has become almost universally diffused, the importance of many post-Christian hieroglyphics is not sufficiently estimated. We are ready to trace, with Layard, the sculptured enigmas on the walls of Nineveh, or the crypto-graphic emblems of the Egyptians, while we overlook the origin and significance of more modern symbols. Bro. Berri, in the splendid little volume now before us—which we may say, en passant, is a marvel of the printing art, very opportunely presents us with the results of his researches into the history of monograms.

The work is divided into four chapters—1, "Of Monograms in general;" 2, "Masons' Marks;" 3, "Merchants' Marks;" 4, "On the Construction of Monograms;"—and is profusely embellished with plates representing the principal monograms and marks used before and during the mediæval ages. Almost every page in this handsome volume contains allusions peculiarly interesting to the Masonic fraternity. Thus, in the first chapter, Bro. Berri elucidates the devices known as the triple tau, the cross of Constantine, and other symbols referred to in various Masonic Orders. The second chapter—on "Masons' Marks"—speaks for itself; and the origin of "Merchants' Marks" as a substitute for armorial bearings will be attentively perused by every lover of heraldry. The fourth chapter is eminently practical in its observations as to the construction of monograms, and the author, in referring to the different styles adopted, draws especial attention to the picturesque character of the Anglo-Hibernian school of calligraphy, which was based originally upon quaint Runic carvings and supplemented by pictorial representations of birds and animals. We shall give a brief extract from Bro. Berri's work at a future period, and in the meantime heartily recommend our readers to study "Monograms" themselves.

NEW CONCORD LODGE OF INSTRUCTION.—Bro. Jas. Terry will work the ceremonies of Consecration and Installation of the above Lodge, (held at the Rosemary Branch, Hoxton,) on Wednesday, the 9th.

BRO. HERR FORMES, the celebrated basso, after a lengthened tour makes his first appearance at the Princess Theatre, as an actor, in Shakespeare's play of "Shylock," on the 2nd of June.

AT THE MASONIC HALL, 14, Bedford Row, a club is held on the first Tuesday in every month, called the "Club of True Highlanders." It was established in 1815 for the relief of distressed Scotchmen; most of the members dress in highland costume. A numerous and convivial meeting was held on Tuesday last, the chief, Bro. W. G. Hepburn, occupying the chair. The hon. sec. read the minutes of last meeting and the half-yearly balance-sheet, and stated the amount of the funds in hand to be £397. After every toast, which are given with Highland honours, the piper walked round the room playing a tune on the bagpipes. A reel was danced by four members of the club in full Highland costume, and several members and visitors sang some very excellent songs, both English and Scotch. The hall, which was decorated in the Gothic style, looked very picturesque. It was announced that the annual Skinnie Match, and other sports, would take place on Monday, June 21st, opposite the Prince of Wales Tavern, Blackheath. To all lovers of Scottish games this will be an interesting occasion. A very pleasant evening was spent, at the conclusion of which the entire company, in true Scottish fashion, sang "Auld Lang Syne."

PROV. GRAND CHAPTER OF R. A. MASONS N. AND E. YORKSHIRE.

A Provincial Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, of the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, was holden by special appointment in the Old Globe Chapter, Scarborough, on Wednesday, 19th May, when there were present:—M.E. Comp. John Pearson Bell, Esq., M.D., Grand Sup. of North and East Ridings, Yorkshire, Z.; F. Comps. John Kemp, jun. (294), Prov. Grand H.; Rev. J. E. Mayne Young, M.A. (236), Prov. J.; Michael Charles Peck (250), Prov. S.E.; John Walker (57), Prov. S.N.; Walter Reynolds (250), Prov. Asst. Soj.; Richard Welsh Hollon (236), Prov. Treas.; William Lawton (236), Prov. Registrar; John N. Scherling (250), Prov. S.B.; Dr. S. H. Armitage (200), Prov. D.C.; Comps. Henry Grove (200), as Prov. Organist; John Ward (236), Prov. I.J.; William Johnson (57), Prov. O.J.; Comps. Wm. Tesseyman (57), J. Groves (200), J. Balmford (236), J. Thompson (250) P.G.S.'s; together with the following Principals and Past Principals of the Chapters in the Province:—E. Comps. W. B. Hav, M.D., P.Z.—Z., J. Walter, H., M. W. Clarke, P.Z., Humber Chapter, 57, Hull; W. F. Rooke, M.D., Z., W. T. Farthing, H., H. A. Williamson, J., J. W. Woodall, P.Z., J. F. Spurr, P.Z., Old Globe Chapter, 200, Scarborough; Rev. J. E. M. Young, Z., Thos. Cooper, P.Z., Wm. Cowling, P.Z., Wm. Layton, P.Z., R. W. Hollon, P.Z., J. March, P.Z., Zetland Chapter, 236, York; Walter Reynolds Z. Geo. Hardy, J., M. C. Peck, P.Z., Minerva Chapter, 250, Hull; J. Kemp, Z., Constitutional Chapter, 294, Beverley; J. N. Lawson, Z., and Wm. Wood, P.Z., Britannia Chapter, 312, Whitby; J. Storey, Marwood Chapter, 602, Middlesbrough; also many visiting Companions.

The Provincial Grand Chapter having been opened in ancient and solemn form, the minutes of the last Prov. G. Chapter, held 25th March 1868, were read and confirmed. The various Chapters then communicated, all of which (with the exception of the King Edwin Chapter, Malton), were represented.

The bye-laws for the government of the Provincial Grand Chapter were then submitted for confirmation. When, on the proposition of Comp. Cowling, it was resolved "That bye-laws 3 be altered so that the fee of honour on re-appointment should be half that on first appointment." The bye-laws (with the above amendment) were then finally confirmed.

Comp. SPURR then moved "That the sum of five guineas be voted to the Palestine Exploration Fund," which was duly seconded.

Comp. COWLING moved, an amendment, "That ten guineas be voted for the above object," which was seconded by Comp. MARCH, and supported by the Prov. GRAND REGISTRAR; whereupon Comp. Spurr withdrew his motion, and the amendment was carried unanimously.

The Prov. GRAND TREASURER moved "That the sum of twenty-five pounds be voted to the Zetland Commemoration Fund," which was seconded by Comp. Dr. Rooke and carried unanimously.

The M.E. GRAND SUPERINTENDENT then appointed the following Provincial Grand Officers (with the exception of Provincial Grand Treasurer, who was re-elected by the Provincial Grand Chapter):—

E. Comp. John N. Lawson ...	312	Prov. G. H.
" W. T. Farthing ...	200	" J.
" Michael Char. Peck ...	250	" Scribe E.
" George Hardy ...	250	" Scribe N.
" H. A. Williamson ...	200	" P. Sojourner.
" William Hood ...	312	" 1st Asst. Soj.
" G. Storey ...	602	" 2nd Asst. Soj.
" Richard W. Hollon ...	236	" Treasurer.
" William Lawton ...	236	" Registrar.
" John Thompson ...	250	" Sword bearer
" William Tesseyman ...	57	" Stdnt bearer.
" D. R. Ramsey ...	212	" D. of. C.
" George Balmford ...	236	" Organist.
Comp. John Ward ...	236	" Inner Janitor.
" William Johnson ...	57	" Outer Janitor.

The M.E. GRAND SUPERINTENDENT then offered some remarks upon the proceedings of the last Provincial Grand Chapter with reference to the efforts of himself and others for securing correctness and uniformity of ritual, but stated that although the subject was now engaging the attention of the Craft generally, yet he feared some time would still elapse before anything could be determined upon. He thanked the Companions for their large attendance, which manifested an increased attention to Royal Arch Masonry, and he trusted that nothing would be found wanting on his part to promote the success of the Provincial Grand Chapter, and stated that he should be always at their service. The M.E. Grand Superintendent then delivered an interesting address on the Antiquity of the Order, and stated that having received an invitation from the Britannia Chapter, he should hold the next Provincial Grand Chapter at Whitby.

The Provincial Grand Chapter was then closed in ancient form and with solemn prayer.

A banquet was held at the George Hotel the same evening, at which the M.E. Grand Superintendent presided. During the evening the greatest harmony and friendship prevailed.

THE KNIGHTS OF THE RED CROSS OF ROME AND CONSTANTINE.

INSTALLATION MEETING OF THE PREMIER CONCLAVE.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

A meeting of No. 1, or the Premier Conclave, of the Imperial, Ecclesiastical, and Military Order of Knights of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, was held on Monday evening last, at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street. There were present: Sir Knts. T. Cubitt, G.H., M.P.S.; T. Wesscombe, G.B.S., V.E.; J. Trickett, Inspector General for Kent, S.G.; R. W. Little, G.R. Recorder; E. P. Roper-Curzon, Prefect; H. Parker, G.O. Organist; Geo. Kenning, P.S. Herald; J. G. Marsh, G.A., P.S.; W. H. Hubbard, G.T., P.S.; G. Powell, G.S.B., P.S.; Dr. W. Holman, P.S.; Dr. J. Bringloe, P.S.; E. Applebee; A. J. Lewis; McMeaby; Major Gen. G. B. Munbee, Inspector General for Somerset. Visitors: Sir Knt. H. C. Levander, G.A.T., M.P.S., No. 6; H. Thompson, M.P.S. elect, No. 18; J. Weaver, Organist, No. 6; E. Clark, V.E. elect, No. 9; J. Mayo, J.G., No. 2; D. R. Still, S.G., No. 2; H. Smith, Herald, No. 2; Chas. E. Thompson, No. 6, Recorder elect, No. 18.

The Right Hon. the Lord Kenlis, Most Illustrious G. Sovereign, was expected to be present and preside, but other pressing business kept his lordship away. Letters of apology were received from Sir Knts. F. M. Williams, M.P., G.V.E.; Colonel F. Burdett, G.H.C.; W. E. Gumbleton, G.C.; and E. Busher, G.S.G.

Bros. John Hills, Bedford Lodge, No. 157; Arthur B. Cook, 30, of the Apollo University Lodge, No. 357; and Henry B. Dunn, of the Old King's Arms Lodge, No. 28, were installed as Knights of the Order.

Sir Knts. J. D. Moore, Inspector-General for North Lancashire; Major-General G. B. Munbee, J.P., Inspector-General for Somerset; and E. Palmer, of No. 3, were elected Joining Members.

The rank of Honorary Member was conferred upon M.E. Sir Knt. Colonel W. I. B. McLeod Moore, Chief Inspector-General for Canada; and R. Marshall, Inspector-General for New Brunswick.

Sir Knts. M. C. Meaby, H. Thompson, E. P. Roper-Curzon, E. Clark, A. B. Cook, and J. Hills, were admitted to the Priestly Order.

Sir Knts. M. C. Meaby, A. J. Lewis, H. Thompson, E. P. Roper-Curzon, and J. Mayo were admitted into the Princely Order.

Sir Knt. Wesscombe, the V.E., was then raised to the M.P. Sov. degree; Sir Knt. Little rendering that ceremony with his usual ability. The M.P.S. then appointed his officers as follows:—J. Trickett, V.E.; E. P. Roper-Curzon, S.G.; D. G. Berri, J.G.; A. G. Lewis, H.P.; T. Wesscombe, Treas.; R. W. Little, Recorder; George Kenning, Prefect; A. B. Cook, St. Bearer; G. H. Rainy, Orator; H. Parker, Organist; G. E. Baker, Herald; J. Gilbert, Sentinel. A P.S. jewel was unanimously voted to Sir Knt. Cubitt.

The Conclave was then closed with the usual impressive formula, and the Sir Knts. adjourned to refreshment, under the presidency of Sir Knt. Wesscombe, M.P.S. The customary loyal and knightly toasts were given.

Sir Knt. HUBBARD returned thanks for "The Grand Council," and said the Grand Council were much gratified to find their efforts had been so well appreciated.

Sir Knt. LITTLE proposed the health of the Grand Senate, and said without their assistance the efforts of the Grand Council would be in vain. He coupled with the toast the names of Sir Knts. Levander and Cubitt.

Sir Knt. LEVANDER begged to thank the Sir Knts. for the honour they had done him, and said his post of Assistant Grand Treasurer had at present been almost a sinecure, as all financial duties had been well performed by the Executive Committee.

The M.P.S. proposed the newly-installed Brethren, and said it was a very pleasing toast indeed. The Order had only been re-constituted a few years and was making fast progress. Several new Conclaves had been opened, and were going on well. He congratulated the Brethren upon entering into Christian Masonry.

Sir Knt. Cook, who responded, said it had been a most interesting ceremony indeed to him, more so than many others he had attended.

Another Sir Knt. also returned thanks and expressed his high gratification at the honour conferred upon him.

Sir Knight LITTLE, Grand Recorder, said he had now to introduce a toast which he felt would give satisfaction to every member of the conclave, as it was the health of the M.P.S. Wesscombe, who, throughout the whole of his Masonic career, had shown the deep interest he felt in the prosperity of the Order and in every degree he had taken. In the Premier Conclave he had that evening arrived at the superlative degree, and had justly attained the highest honours. Their thanks were due to him not only in regard to his dignified position and for what he had done in the past, but for what all felt assured he could do in the future. In him they would not only have an excellent presiding officer, but he would most ably develop the resources of the Order. He gave them "The health of Sir Knight Wesscombe, M.P.S., of the Premier Conclave." The toast was enthusiastically received.

Sir Knight WESSCOMBE, M.P.S., in responding, said he felt somewhat embarrassed at the warmth of their reception of the toast, and he was almost in the position of a drowning man, who caught at a straw to save himself, in being unable to find words to acknowledge their kindness. Sir Knight Little, in his very kind speech had spoken of him in very flattering terms, but he hardly knew what he had done to deserve it. He felt highly gratified in being placed in his present position, and he felt assured that before his year of office was out he should bring ten or a dozen more of the right sort into the Order, and when his year of office expired he hoped to see double the number of members he now saw before him. He felt sure that the business of the Conclave was promoted in the highest degree by the ability of Sir Knight Little, for there were very few that were able to work it, and he (the M.P.S.) could not let this opportunity pass over without moving that a vote of thanks be recorded on the minutes of the Conclave to him, for whose teaching they were so much indebted, and who at all times made them so happy.

Sir Knight CUBITT, P.M.P.S., had great pleasure in seconding the motion, and he reiterated the sentiments of the M.P.S. as regarded Sir Knight Little, and endorsed all he said, and, indeed, he hardly knew how they should get on without him. He was the first to resuscitate this Christian Order, and the progress it had made was truly astonishing, and he doubted not that in a few years hence the Order would take a prominent position in Freemasonry. With those few remarks he begged to second the motion, believing, after what Sir Knt. Little had done for the Order, they could not say too much for him.

Sir Knight MARSH said it appeared that it devolved upon him to put the motion to the Sir Knights, and he was certain it would receive their assent and deserve the attention of all present. They had witnessed that day the admirable working of Sir Knt. Little, who had not only installed the Sir Knights who had come amongst them, but had admitted other members of the chivalric Order to the priesthood degree, and, in addition, he had admitted others to the sovereign's degree. He was sure that all who knew Sir Knt. Little would agree with him when he said that there was no one who could work the degrees so well. Indeed, he did not think some of the degrees could be done by any one but himself, and all belonging to the Plantagenet, the Roman Eagle, and the other Conclaves were greatly indebted to him for the carrying out of the arrangements of the Order. He cordially supported the motion, which he afterwards put, and it was carried unanimously.

Sir Knight LITTLE, G.R., returned his sincere thanks for the kind expression of their feelings towards him, and his gratification at the progress of their Order, which contained many beautiful illustrations of Freemasonry, and nothing that was detrimental to the teachings of the Craft. The Order which had been resuscitated received the support of Bro. William Henry White, the late Grand Secretary, who enjoyed the companionship of the late Duke of Sussex, who was the head of the Order. He (Sir Knt. Little) remembered it was only a short time since seven members only met under Sir Knt. Hubbard's roof, but since then that Christian Order had extended to 700 members, which was due to the intrinsic merit of the Order itself, for if it had not been sound in principle, it could not have met with such success. Having alluded to a claimant in lineage to the great founder of the Order, he said his pedigree had been placed in the hands of Bro. Lewis for examination, but at present they only recognised Lord Kenlis, as the head of their chivalric Order. In conclusion, he thanked them for the compliment they had paid him, assuring them that if he could be in any way useful they might always command his services.

Sir Knt. MARSH sang with good taste, "Good bye, sweetheart."

Sir Knt. LITTLE, in eloquent terms, proposed "The health of the visitors," which Sir Knts. Munbee and Levander acknowledged. The next toast was the health of the Past Sovereigns, Sir Knts. Cubitt, Marsh and Powell.

Sir Knt. CUBITT in reply, said he could not boast of having done much work, during his year, as he was prostrated for a considerable portion of the time by illness, and had not the opportunity of obtaining the knowledge of the Order as they had at the present time. Since his time, a preceptory Conclave had been formed, where every one had an opportunity of learning the ritual, but at the same time, the Past Sovereigns were always anxious to impart the knowledge they themselves possessed. On his own part, he thanked them for the compliment they had paid him, trusting that for many years they should meet in the same spirit, and enjoy each other's society.

Sir Knt. MARSH said it gave him great satisfaction, to remain a member of the Premier Conclave, and he could assure them, that it was one of the proudest moments in his life when he filled the hair, and his year of office was most successful. He was one of the first Sovereigns, when the Premier Conclave was resuscitated, and he thought during the year he installed 36 Knts. into it, some of whom were present on this occasion, but many were absent, and he could sincerely say that no one had more the interest of the Premier Conclave at heart than he had. Anything he could do to assist the working of that or any other Conclave he should always be happy and willing to do, and he would mention that a Conclave of Instruction was held on the third Thursday in every month at the Lyceum Tavern, where all might correctly learn the ritual of the Order. [Sir Knights Hubbard and Powell also returned thanks.]

Sir Knight LITTLE next gave "The Officers of the Conclave," coupling with the toast the name of the V.E. Sir Knt. Trickett.

Sir Knight TRICKETT, V.E., on behalf of himself and the other Officers of the Conclave, thanked the M.P.S. for the way in which he had proposed their healths, and the Sir Knights for the cordial manner in which they had responded to it. He could only say they would do all they could to forward the interests of the Red Cross Order.

The health of Sir Knt. Dr. Holman having been drunk with great cordiality, Sir Knight DR. HOLMAN said he had been a great traveller, and wherever he had been he had done his best to promote the great interests of Freemasonry, and he believed that his labours had been met with success. In India, Africa, the Cape of Good Hope, and elsewhere, Freemasonry existed, and there was a Grand Lodge in Africa, where it was carried out in a most careful and remarkable manner. In a few years hence he hoped to settle amongst them, and be able to carry out the great principles of the Order in a more useful and profitable manner than he was then able to do.

Some other toasts were given, and a very happy meeting was brought to a close, but we ought not to omit the mention of the services of Sir Knights Parker and Weaver, who throughout the evening delighted the company with their vocal and instrumental performances, and especially as regards the latter in their rendering of the Miserere from "Trovatore."

THE ANNUAL REPORT.

The statement of accounts and the annual report of the Executive Committee for 1868-9, and list of officers and conclaves has just been published under the superintendence of Sir Knt. Little. The report states:—

"It will be seen that the receipts are increasing, and that the ordinary disbursements are exceedingly small in amount, the heavy items being expenses attending the Triennial Festival) which will not be held again until 1871), a donation to one of the Masonic institutions, and payments for copies of the ritual and printing the statutes, which will eventually be recouped to the order. During the past year eight new conclaves have been added to the roll, making the number fourteen in all, and a large number of brethren have been received as members."

VISITORS to the Oxford Commemoration Festivities next week will have the opportunity of attending the Masonic Fête, which promises to be a most enjoyable affair, not only for the brethren of the province, but also for their lady friends, who will doubtless grace the meeting in considerable numbers.

We are glad to learn that the Concert given by Bro. Fitzgerald at the Lecture Hall Greenwich, on Saturday, the 29th ult., was very successful, there being no less than 700 persons present. Bro. John Fitzgerald conducted, and Bro. James Weaver was leader.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Finbury Lodge, No. 861.—This prosperous lodge met on Friday, the 28th ult., at the Jolly Anglers Tavern, Bath-street, St. Luke's, when (in consequence of the respected Master being unable to attend at the commencement of the proceedings) the W. Bro. R. Leach, in an able manner, conferred the third degree on Bros. Proskaur and Dagley, after which the W. Bro. Alfred Day, P.M. (Treasurer), installed Bro. E. M. Davey as W.M. for the year ensuing. The W.M. then appointed and invested the following officers, all of whom, judging from their antecedents, will do credit to the judgment of the new Master: W. Watson, P.M.; J. Nicholls, S.W.; R. Hart, J.W.; Alfred Day, P.M., Treas.; T. E. Purdy, P.M., Sec.; E. Benjamin, S.D.; W. Stokes, J.D.; W. Mackey, P.M., W.S.; J. Bilby, P.M., Organist; H. J. W. Thompson, P.M. 65, D.C.; and Vesper, P.M., 98, 180, 181, 554, Tyler. The banquet which followed was served in Bro. Bond's best style, and at its conclusion the W.M., in a neat and appropriate speech, presented, on behalf of the brethren, a large and valuable silver cup to the late highly-respected W. Master, Bro. Watson, who in a very pleasing manner returned thanks. The proceedings were enlivened by some capital music and songs. Amongst the visitors were Bros Perrin (P.M. 101), Davies (P.M. 228), Shepperd (J.W. 27), Forbes (J.W. 65), Lephistrier (I.G. 65), Sims (65), Hamilton (704), Berry (659), Grayward (919), Roberts (740), Jaques (1108), &c.

PROVINCIAL.

WINCHESTER.—Lodge of Economy, No. 76.—The regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held at the Masonic Hall on Wednesday, May 26th, when the following brethren were present:—Sheppard, W.M.; Stopher, S.W.; Everitt, J.W.; Sherry, Treas.; Stopher, Sec.; Whale, S.D.; Penton, J.D.; Oakshot, P.M.; Priddis, I.G.; E. Snelling, Bishop, F. I. Warner, J. W. Snelling, Hulbersty, H. Newman, W. H. Woodbridge, Sealy, Doswell, Beach, and Hutt; and Tanner (W.M. 177), Warren (177), and Bodley (Sec. 39), visitors.—The minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, Bro. Frederic I. Warner was raised. The brethren then proceeded to discuss the following notice of motion by Bro. Sherry:—"That the scheme proposed by Br. Clabon for appropriating a portion of the Fund of Benevolence to other than the purposes for which it was created, be taken into consideration and discussed." Bro. Sherry introduced the subject, and invited the remarks of the brethren present, saying that he would found a resolution on the opinions expressed by a majority of the members.—Bro. Sheppard explained the scheme for the information of those unacquainted with the subject.—The scheme was opposed by Bros. Oakshot, Warner, and Whale; and supported by Bro. Stopher.—Bro. J. W. Snelling spoke as follows: "The fact that the Fund of Benevolence was originally instituted and has continued so long without question dedicated to the relief of Masons in distress, and that such distress still exists, inclines me to the decided opinion that it cannot rightly be alienated from its original purpose. That part of the scheme which proposes an enlarged application of the funds to the relief of distressed Masons, meets with my most cordial support, but to nearly all the rest I am decidedly opposed. Upon a hasty analysis of the published figures, I find that the surplus of £11,000 which existed in 1840 should be at the end of 1867, at 3½ per cent., about £26,100, and the actual amount was only £26,779, showing that the surplus has in the main arisen from the accumulation of the original surplus of 1840, and that on an average of years the contributions, &c., have only sufficed for the relief of cases of distress, and that, too, on the present scale. Let us see what will be the effect of doubling the amount of relief as proposed. The average annual amount of relief for six years ending 1867, irrespective of the grant to the charities, was £2,120, the amount for the last year of that period being £2,108. Now, if we double the average amount, we have £4,240, and the actual contributions, &c., for 1867 (irrespective of interest) only amounted to £4,226, showing that the existing contributions, &c., will only just suffice for the increased grants proposed, leaving the interest on investments, £1,053, to meet the annual grant to the charities. The total interest on invested funds for eight years ending 1867 amounted to £5,501, and the amount granted to the charities for the same period was £6,400; and although the present interest is slightly more than sufficient to pay the £800 to the charities, it may fairly be asked, why the aged and decayed Masons should not be as much thought of in the application of any such trifling surplus as the Masonic schools, which are so well supported with constantly increasing liberality? I contend that there will be scarcely any surplus, if the funds are liberally dealt with for their only legitimate purpose. Let us examine how they have been dispensed of late years:—

Contributions, &c., in 1862, '63, and '64 ...	£9,302
Ditto, ditto, in 1865, '66, and '67 ...	11,769
Increase of contributions, &c. ...	£2,467
Expenditure for relief (497 cases), 1862-4 ...	£7,109
Ditto, ditto (420 cases) 1865-7 ...	5,621
Decrease in charity ...	£1,479

So that, in the face of such an increase, 77 less cases were relieved, and £1,479 less expended, in the last period of three years! I leave these figures to speak for themselves.—The following resolution was then proposed and seconded: "That in the opinion of this Lodge the scheme proposed by Bro. Clabon is approved, with the exception of that part which states that the widow of a deceased brother (no matter what her poverty be) cannot apply a second time for relief; and also that part which proposes to take from the surplus Fund of Benevolence two-thirds for the use of the Masonic schools, the latter proposition being alien to the 18th article of the Act of Union between the two Grand Lodges of England in 1813, which records as follows: 'The fund appropriated to the objects of Masonic benevolence shall not be infringed on for any purpose, but shall be kept strictly and solely devoted to charity, and pains taken to increase the same.' This Lodge is also of opinion the scheme ought to be referred back to the Committee for amendment, and more time allowed for its consideration, especially as very few lodges in the provinces are aware of the magnitude of the scheme."—Bro. Stopher moved an amendment, which was not seconded, and the resolution was carried with one dissentient.

WARRINGTON.—Lodge of Lights, No. 148.—The regular monthly meeting of this lodge was held on Monday last, at the Masonic-rooms, at 6.30. The W.M., Bro. D. W. Finney, was supported by Bros. W. Mossop, S.W.; W. Richardson, J.W.; W. S. Hawkins, S.D.; Dr. Cooper, G.D.; H. P. Stedman, M.A., Chaplain; John Bowes, P.M., P.Z., &c. Hon. Sec.; Jos. Maxfield, P.M.; W. Fletcher-Wood, J. Mee, Pattison (Org.), W. Robinson, W. H. Spring, H. Syred, Rev. J. Nixon Porter, Rev. W. Whitelegge, Jos. Robinson, George Bailey, Robert Gibbons, Jas. Johnson, Tyler, Jas. Hannah, (Tyler, 1250.) Visitors:—Bros. Arthur Worrell, (W.M. 1225), and P. J. Edelsten, (1134.) The lodge was opened in due form, when the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Bro. Rev. W. Whitelegge, being a candidate for preferment, and having proved his claim, was entrusted and retired, and in due time passed. Bro. George Bailey being desirous of advancement, and having given proof of proficiency, was entrusted and retired. The lodge was opened in the third degree, Bro. Bailey re-admitted and raised, the W.M. being assisted by Bros. Bowes. The lodge was duly lowered, when Grand Lodge certificates were signed and delivered to Bros. W. Fletcher-Wood and James Currey, of the United Lodge, No. 679, Colchester; and two gentlemen were proposed as fit and proper persons to be made Masons. Nothing further being proposed for the good of Masonry, the lodge was duly closed.

OXFORD.—Alfred Lodge, No. 340.—The annual festival of this lodge, was held prior to the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge (of which a detailed report is given in another page) at the Masonic Hall (by permission of the Apollo Univ. Lodge). Bro. A. Spiers, D.P.G.M., in the unavoidable absence of the W.M., took the chair, and installed in a most admirable manner, his son Bro. Samuel P. Spiers, as W.M. On the conclusion of the ceremony, the W.M. appointed his officers as follows:—Bros. J. Juggins, S.W.; W. G. Emberlin, J.W.; Rev. T. G. Mortimer, P.M., Chap.; H. Houghton, P.M., Treas.; W. R. Hobbs, Sec.; Walter Thompson, S.D.; G. T. Prior, J.D.; W. Barling, D.C.; J. Saunders, D.C.; D. Spencer, I.G.; I. Chapman, Orgst.; W. J. Thurland, Stwd.; W. Stephens, T.; G. Norwood, T. The W.M. then initiated his brother Mr. F. E. Spiers, and Mr. R. Williams, into Freemasonry. The lodge was closed in due form.

COCKERMOUTH.—Skiddaw Lodge, No. 1002.—The annual meeting of this lodge was held in their lodge-room, on the 1st inst., for the purpose of installing Bro. Robinson Draper, the late S.W. of the lodge in the chair of K.S. There were present on this occasion, Bros. Morton, P.M. and P.P.S.G.W.; Kenworthy, P.M.; Faithfull, P.M. and P.P.J.G.W.; Dodgson, P.M., P.P.J.G.D.; Pearson, Past S.W.; T. F. Taylor, Past Sec.; E. Thwaites, Past J.W.; W. Taylor, S.D. The lodge being opened in form by the W.M., Bro. Shilton, P.P.G.S.B., Bro. Morton, assumed the chair, when Bro. Robinson was presented and having taken the O.B., all below the rank of Past Masters retired, and a board of Installed Masters duly formed, when Bro. Robinson was regularly installed in the chair of K.S. for the ensuing twelve months. The brethren having re-entered the lodge and saluted the W.M. according to ancient custom, he appointed his officers as follows:—Bros. T. F. Taylor, S.W.; Jos. Mayson, J.W.; the Rev.

W. Williams, Sec.; Evening, S.D.; Braithwaite, J.D.; Pearson (Lorton), I.G.; Pearson (Cockermouth), Past S.W., was elected Treas., and Potts Tyler. The lodge being closed with good harmony, the brethren retired to the Globe Hotel to partake of the good things provided for them by Bro. Rapley. On the removal of the cloth, the W.M. (Bro. Robinson) said the first toast he had to propose was one he was sure he had only to name to ensure a hearty reception, namely, "Her Majesty the Queen and the Craft," they had been accustomed to associate her name with the fact of being the daughter of a Mason, but now he might speak of a closer tie—the mother of a Mason, as he believed His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales had enrolled his name amongst us. The National Anthem was sung by the brethren. The W.M. then proposed "Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales," alluding in eulogistic terms to the high esteem in which the royal family were held, as being unequalled in the history of this country. The healths of the M.W. Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, the Prov. G.M. and other Grand Officers, were given with full Masonic honours. Bro. Morton proposed the "Retiring Master," which was responded to by Bro. Shilton. Bro. Faithfull proposed in very flattering terms, "The newly-installed Master." "The Past Masters, Masters, and Brethren of other lodges" was given by Bro. Pearson, (Cockermouth). Bro. Shilton proposed the "Retiring Officers," thanking them for their assistance during the year, and was responded to by Bros. T. F. and W. Taylor. Bro. Dodgson proposed the "Newly-invested Officers," which was responded to by Bro. Williams. After the toast list was disposed of, Brother Pearson (Cockermouth), rose and said he had great pleasure in informing the brethren that the application to the Fund of Benevolence in aid of Bro. John Adams, who was now incapacitated, had been successful, they had voted a sum of £30, for which success they were very greatly indebted to Bro. Busher, Past Grand Sword-bearer of England, and P.J.G.W., for his zeal and activity in the matter. The proceedings of the evening were enlivened with songs by Bros. Faithfull, Williams, and Evening, and the Tyler's toast brought the meeting to a close at an early hour, enabling the country members to reach their homes in good time.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

Canonbury Chapter, No. 657.—The regular convocation of this chapter was held on the 27th ultimo, at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, the M.E.Z., Comp. Ough, occupying the chair. This being the night for installation, that ceremony was performed by Comp. Watson, P.Z., in a very efficient manner. Comp. Wiscombe was duly installed, and on the re-admission of the companions he invested his officers as follows:—Comps. S. May, H.; J. Tanner, J.; F. Cox, N.; Jones, A.S.; Appleby, I.; H. Cary, S.E.; Decent, Treasurer; and W. Ough, G.P., P.Z. A jewel was then presented to that Companion, the chapter was closed until August next, and the companions adjourned to a very excellent banquet. After the usual toasts, Comp. Ough proposed the health of the M.E.Z., and in the course of a very excellent speech, eulogistic of the qualities of that worthy companion, said he had great pleasure in seeing him in that high position, and he had held every office required in the chapter to the satisfaction of all the companions. He (Comp. Ough) trusted that at the expiration of his year of office the approbation of the chapter would be given to him as on this occasion.—The M.E.Z. returned thanks in an able speech characteristic of him. He regretted that his avocations could not possibly allow him time to perfect himself in the duties required of him, but if any merit were due, he gave the credit entirely to Comp. Todd, whom he had to thank for his introduction to every position in the Craft, and even in this sublime degree. (At the conclusion of his excellent speech the M.E.Z. was greeted with loud applause.)—The visitors were Comps. Warr (179), Bourne (S.E. 749), and H. M. Levy (P.M. 186). Comp. Warr returned thanks for the visitors, and Comp. Webb for the P.Z.'s.—The M.E.Z. then said he had now a pleasing duty to perform—that of proposing the health of Comp. Ough, who held a high position in the Grand Lodge of England as G.P., and it afforded him gratification in mentioning his name in connection with this chapter. His excellent working in every office he undertook had always been to the satisfaction of every one who witnessed it.—Comp. Ough, in responding, said he felt great pleasure in receiving from the M.E.Z. in the name of the chapter, the elegant jewel placed on his breast; and it would be an episode in his life to remember this pleasing testimonial. He would do all in his power on every occasion to forward the welfare of the chapter.—Comps. S. May and J. Tanner returned thanks for the principal officers, Comp. May remarking that he hoped, from the feeling manifested, he should on a future occasion occupy the chair of the M.E.Z.—The M.E.Z. said it was out of the routine, but he would ask the companions present to drink a special toast, namely, the health of Comp. B. P. Todd, who had been laid on a bed of sickness; and he (the M.E.Z.), as well as every one present, was glad to see him among them again, particularly as one of the founders of this chapter. Comp. Todd (who on rising to respond was greeted with great cordiality, and was visibly affected), in a very appropriate speech thanked them for their expressions of sympathy, and trusted that those expressions would be fully carried out. He was as glad to be amongst them as they were to see him. Some very good harmony was contributed by several companions, particularly by Comps. D. H. Jacobs and E. W. Cannon, and after a very agreeable evening the companions separated at an early hour.

PROVINCIAL.

HALIFAX.—Chapter of Regularity, No. 418.—The annual meeting of this Chapter was held on Monday, the 31st ult., when there was a good attendance of the companions. The Chapter having been opened, and the minutes of the previous quarterly meeting confirmed, a ballot was taken for Bro. William Hemingway, and Bro. Thos. M. Dolan, which was unanimously in their favour, and they were subsequently exalted to the degree of R.A. by Comp. Normanton, Z., the historical portion of this beautiful degree being exceedingly well given by Comp. A. Supton. The Companions then retired, and a board of installed first Principals was opened, when the following Principals and officers were installed and invested for the ensuing year (Comp. Bates, P.Z., Comp. Greenwood, P.Z., and Comp. Normanton, P.Z., performing the ceremony (Comps. viz., William Cooke, P.Z., as Z.; C. J. Walshaw, as H.; R. Lord, as J.; G. Normanton, as J.P.Z.; H. N. Bates, P.Z. as Treas.; E. Walshaw, as E.; F. Whitaker, as N.; W. F. Wilkinson, as P.S.; W. H. D. Horsfall and A. Roberts, as A.S.; W. J. Laidler, as D. of C.; T. M. Dolan and W. Hemingway, as Stewards; J. Greenwood, P.Z., as Janitor. The Chapter was then duly closed, and the Companions adjourned to refreshment, and spent a very convivial evening together. In order to give the Companions an opportunity of becoming thoroughly acquainted with this imposing ceremony, it was resolved to hold an instruction meeting on the last Monday in every month, the first meeting to be held on the 24th of June.

MARK MASONRY.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—Forke Lodge, No. 19.—A bi-monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, on Thursday, the 27th ult., the officers present being Bros. Kelly, P.G.M., W.M.; Captain Bankart, P.M.; Major Brewin, S.W. and W.M. elect; W. E. Smith, J.W.; Duff, M.O.; C. Johnson, S.O.; Stratton, Treasurer and Registrar, and others. The Lodge having been opened in due form, and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Bros. the Rev. N. Tharrel Hayeroff, D.D., of the Universal Lodge, No. 181, London; Edwin J. Crow, of St. John's Lodge, No. 279; and Joseph Elgood, of the John of Gant Lodge, No. 523, who were duly elected. There were seven other candidates due for advancement, who had been previously elected, but, from various causes, the only candidate in attendance was Bro. Hayeroff, who was advanced to the degree of Mark Master, Bro. Charles Johnson presiding at the instrument during the ceremony, and introducing the several chants. Bro. Kelly then proceeded to install, as his successor in the Chair, Bro. Brewin, who was presented for that purpose by Bro. Bankart, P.M., and on the Board of Installed Masters being closed, the brethren were called in and the newly-installed W.M. was proclaimed and saluted. Bro. Brewin then appointed the officers for the ensuing year, and invested those who were present, viz.,—Bros. W. B. Smith, S.W.; Duff, J.W.; Rev. N. Hayeroff, D.D., Chaplain; Charles Johnson, M.O.; Herbert, S.O.; J. E. Hodges, S.D.; Toller, J.D.; G. H. Hodges, Registrar; Stratton, Treasurer (elected); Partridge, Secretary; Charles Johnson, Organist; Sculthorpe, I.G.; Embridge, Tyler. Some financial business having been discussed, the Lodge was closed in ancient form, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment, it having been previously resolved that the meeting in July should not be held.

WINCHESTER.—Mark Masters' Lodge of Economy, No. 52.—A preliminary meeting of this lodge took place on Tuesday, the 25th May, at the Masonic Hall, when there were present:—The Most Worshipful Grand Mark Master, Bro. W. W. B. Beach, W.M.; Bro. E. Sheppard, S.W.; Geo. Oakshot, J.W.; J. Naish, Treas.; C. Sherry, Sec.; J. W. Lamo, S.O.; and Henry Pottle, Tyler. The minutes of the previous Lodge were read and confirmed. The following candidates were then admitted and advanced to the H.C. degree of Mark Masters:—Bros. William Lumsden, Edward Snelling, John T. Doswell, Humphry Priddis, Henry Warren, Walter Whale, Atweek Penton, Edwin Carter, William H. Wooldridge, James W. Snelling, Samuel R. Everitt, and Henry Pottle. Bro. Sherry proposed and Bro. Naish seconded, Bro. Edward Sheppard as W.M., for the ensuing year; the ballot was taken which passed unanimously. Bro. Sheppard proposed, and Bro. Oakshot seconded, Bro. Naish, which also passed unanimously.—The regular monthly meeting of the lodge took place on Thursday, May 27th. Present during the evening:—The R.W. Bro. Binckes, G.S., as W.M.; Bros. Everitt, S.W.; Oakshot, J.W.; Harris, M.O.; Whale, S.O.; E. Snelling, J.O.; Stophor, Registrar of M.; Naish, Treas.; Sherry, Sec.; Warren S.D.; Lumsden, J.D.; Warner, D.C.; Priddis, I.G.; J. R. Stebbing, Grand Treas.; Donnell, W. H. Wooldridge, Sealey, Hewitt, Fishop, and Pottle, Tyler. The following dispensation was read:—"Grand Lodge of Mark Masters, Winchester 25 May, 1869. It having been represented that it will be for the advantage of the interests of the Economy Lodge of Mark Masters, No. 52, that Bro. Edward Sheppard should be installed as W. Master for the ensuing year, the members of the lodge are hereby authorised to elect and install Bro. Sheppard as W. Master, notwithstanding he has not filled the office of Warden in a Mark Masters' Lodge. This dispensation must be read in open lodge prior to the confirmation of the minutes of the election, and must be entered on the minutes of the lodge.—By command of the M.W.G.M., Fred Binckes, G.S.—The minutes of the last lodge were read and confirmed, and the R.W. Brother then "advanced" the following candidates:—Bros. George Sealey, Thos Stophor, Fred J. Warner, C. Bishop, Jas. Harris, and E. Hewitt, the last-named, in conjunction with Bro. F. J. Barratt, having this evening been balloted for and elected. Brother J. R. Stebbing, Grand Treasurer, presented the W. Master elect, Bro. Edward Sheppard, in an eloquent address, and the ceremony of installation was proceeded with. Bro. Sheppard being placed in the chair, appointed his officers as above-named. The Right Worshipful Bro. Binckes then addressed the W. Master, Wardens, Overseers and brethren in an eloquent speech. Bro. J. R. Stebbing, Grand Treasurer, proposed that a vote of thanks be given, and recorded on the minutes of the lodge, to the R.W. Bro. Binckes, for his kindness in attending at great personal inconvenience, and for the very great Masonic treat afforded by his skill in working the ceremonies. Bro. Naish, Treas., seconded the proposition, which was carried with great acclamation. Bro. J. R. Stebbing, Grand Treasurer, invited the W. Master, and as many of the brethren of the lodge as could make it convenient, to attend at Southampton the next day at his installation as W. Master of the St. Andrew's Mark Masters' Lodge, No. 63. Nine other candidates were proposed for "advancement" at the next meeting, which will take place on Thursday, the 24th of June. The lodge was then closed, and the brethren partook of an excellent banquet, provided by Bro. Priddis, and enjoyed a most pleasurable and intellectual evening.

IS THERE A GOD?

How eloquently does Chateaubriand reply to the inquiry "Is there a God?" Our French brethren in Masonic error should receive this lesson from their great countryman: "Is there a God?" The herbs of the valley, the cedars of the mountain bless Him; the insect sports in His beams; the elephant salutes Him with the rising day; the bird sings Him in the foliage, the thunder proclaims Him in the heavens; the ocean declares His immensity. Man alone has said "There is no God!" Unite in thought at the same instant the most beautiful objects of nature; suppose you see at once all the hours of the day and all the seasons of the year; a morning of spring and morning of autumn; a night bespangled with stars and a night covered with clouds; meadows enamelled with flowers, and forests hoary with snow; fields gilded with tints of autumn; then alone you will have a just conception of the universe. While you are gazing upon that sun which is plunging under that vault of the west, another observer admires him emerging from the gilded gates of the east. By what inconceivable magic does that aged star which is sinking fatigued and burning in the shades of the evening, reappear at the every instant fresh and luminous with the rosy dews of morning? At every instant of the day the glorious orb is at once rising, resplendent at noon-day, and setting in the west; or rather our senses deceive us, and there is, properly speaking, no east or west or south in the world. Everything reduces itself to a single point, from whence the king of day sends forth at once a triple light in one single substance. The bright splendor is that which nature can present that is most beautiful, for while it gives us an idea of the perpetual magnificence and resistless power of God, it exhibits at the same time a shining image of the glorious Trinity.—"The Freemason," St. Louis, Mo., U.S.A.

CONSECRATION OF THE DE MOWBRAY CHAPTER, 1130, MELTON MOWBRAY.

The Grand Chapter having granted a warrant for a R.A. Chapter to be attached to the Rutland Lodge in the hunting metropolis of Leicestershire,—the officers nominate being the Rev. W. Langley, Z.; F. P. Newcome, H.; and W. Kelly (P.Z. and P.G.H.), J.—the chief officers of the Provincial Grand Chapter attended at Melton, on Friday se'nnight for the purpose of consecrating the Chapter and installing the principals.

Among those present were Companions W. Kelly, P.Z. and P.G.H. (who presided as the representative of the Right Hon. Earl Howe, G. Supt.); W. Weare, P.Z., as P.G.H.; the Rev. John Spittal, M. E.Z. 279, as P.G.J., (who gave most impressively the two portions of the consecration prayer); Major Brewin, P.Z. and P.G.S.E.; Rev. W. Langley; F. P. Newcome (principals designate); Adeock, Bright, Mann, Leadbeater, Foller (P.S. 279); Crow (who presided most effectively at the harmonium), and others.

The following is a programme of the evening. The first anthem was sung to an air expressly composed for the occasion by Comp. Crow; and the second to an air composed by Comp. Lölax, P.P.G.O., on the occasion of consecrating the Masonic Hall at Leicester:—

The Officers of the P.G. Chapter, and other Installed Principals, enter and open the Chapter at 2 p.m. The Principals nominated in the Warrant and the other Companions present enter to Solemn Music, and take their places.

Anthem—"Hail! universal Lord."

The P.G. Scribe E. addresses the acting G.Z., who desires him to read the Petition and Warrant.

The G.Z. enquires if the Companions approve of the Officers named in the Warrant.

The G.S.E. presents the new Principals to the G.Z.—The Companions of the new Chapter arrange themselves behind them, on the N. and S. sides of the altar.

First portion of the Dedication Prayer, by Rev. Prov. Grand J.

All—Chant—"So mote it be."

Anthem—"Behold how good a thing it is."

A passage of Scripture is read—(1 Kings, viii, i—vi) The Altar is uncovered, and the three acting Principals, make the circuit of the Chapter three times with corn, wine, and oil—Solemn Music is played, except during the intervals of dedication. At the end of the first circuit and dedication:—

All—Chant—"Glory be to God on high."

After second circuit and dedication:—

All—Chant—"Glory be to God on high."

After third circuit and dedication:—

All—Chant—"Glory be to God on high."

The Rev. P.G.J. makes the circuit with the censor.

Second portion of the Consecrated Prayer.

All—Chant—"So mote it be."

The G.Z. declares the Chapter Consecrated.

All—Chant—"So mote it be."

Hymn—"Blessed City, Heavenly Salem."

INSTALLATION.

The ceremony of consecration being completed, a board of installed principals was formed, and the Rev. Comp. Langley was regularly installed in the chairs of J. H. and Z., and Comp. Newcome in those of J. and H., by Comp. Kelly, assisted by Comps. Spittal, Brewin, and Weare, P.Z.s.

On the return of the Companions a ballot was taken for Bros. the Rev. W. Kay Robinson, P.M., Henry Douglas, S.W., J. J. Fash, Sec., and John Selby, of the Rutland Lodge (due notice of which had been given in the summons), who were unanimously elected, and having been respectively introduced were regularly exalted, the ceremony being efficiently performed by the newly-installed M.E.Z., and Comp. Toller, acting as P.S., Comp. Brewin, P.Z. 279, kindly officiating as N.

On the completion of the ceremony, the Historical Lecture was given by Comp. Brewin, and the Symbolical and Mystical Lectures by Comp. Kelly. The officers were then elected and invested, and the bye-laws having been adopted, votes of thanks were passed to Comp. Kelly, P.G.H., and the other consecrating officers, also to Comp. Crow for his musical services, which had added so greatly to the impressive effect of the ceremony. The Chapter was then closed, and the visiting Companions were hospitably entertained at a banquet by the members.

The furniture, jewels, &c., were supplied by Comp. Kenning, Little Britain, London, and gave great satisfaction, the banners especially being greatly admired. There is every prospect of the Chapter having a prosperous career.

OUR MELBOURNE BRETHREN will be pleased to learn that Bro. Montague S. Machen, P.M. 930, who was so well and favourably known to them as Honorary Secretary of their "Charitable Institutions," and as a Director of Freemasons' Hall, Melbourne, was elected a member of the Colonial Board, at the meeting of Grand Lodge on Wednesday last.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND FREEMASONRY.

THE official announcement that the Prince of Wales had been received into the Ancient Order of Freemasonry, was made in Grand Lodge on Wednesday last, by the Earl of Zetland, Most Worshipful Grand Master of England.

The doubts of some, and the hopes of many members of the fraternity are thus happily set at rest, and although a feeling approaching to disappointment may exist because the Prince was not initiated in an English lodge, we are sure that a welcome none the less hearty and genuine awaits our Royal Brother upon his affiliation as an English Mason.

It has been erroneously supposed that in seeking admission into the Masonic Order at the hands of a foreign jurisdiction, the Prince of Wales has to some extent ignored the existence of Freemasonry in the British Islands, but in so doing we may observe that His Royal Highness merely followed the example of the late Dukes of Kent and Sussex, who were initiated respectively in the Union Lodge at Geneva and the Royal York Lodge at Berlin. His Royal Highness is the third Prince of Wales who has openly identified himself with the Craft since the establishment of the Grand Lodge of England in 1717. The first was Frederick, father of King George III., who was initiated in 1737; and the second was, afterwards, King George IV., who entered the Order in 1787. The Dukes of York and Gloucester were both initiated in the Britannic Lodge, now No. 33.

At the Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge, the Most Worshipful Grand Master further stated that in accordance with precedents, the rank of a Past Grand Master would be conferred upon the Prince of Wales. In every instance of a member of the Royal Family becoming allied to the Craft, the rank of a Past Grand Master of England has been at once awarded to him by vote of Grand Lodge. There was, however, a slight variation from this procedure with respect to George IV., then Prince of Wales, as in his case the resolution stated that he was to rank next to, and be placed on all Masonic occasions at the right hand of, the Most Worshipful Grand Master. We rejoice to know that another prince of the illustrious house of Brunswick is added to the honorable roll of our ancient fraternity. We rejoice, more especially, because the Prince of Wales, as the heir apparent to the throne, stands next to our beloved Sovereign in the hearts of all loyal Britons.

It is, no doubt, a source of peculiar gratification to Lord Zetland, to witness such an illustrious accession to the ranks of Freemasonry during his Grand Mastership, and it is a satisfaction to all liberal and free minded men to find, notwithstanding ultramontane denunciations and papal threats, our illustrious brother has not been deterred from entering into the Masonic Order, and publicly avowing his high appreciation of its objects, and his desire to promote its influence and prosperity.

THE FUND OF BENEVOLENCE.

THE Craft have spoken, and the Fund of Benevolence is safe. By a majority as overwhelming as we anticipated some weeks ago Bro. Clabon's scheme has been relegated to the limbo of "rejected addresses." Grand Lodge has affirmed that the funds which have been handed down to us as a sacred trust for special purposes shall not be diverted into other channels.

Bro. Clabon, we conceive, started upon false premises, and we are glad to find that Bro. Havers did not allow the point to escape notice.

There cannot be a surplus income of the Fund of Benevolence—there would simply be no fund at all if the receipts of former years had been disbursed to claimants as they appeared, and as a considerable portion of the annual income is now derived from the interest of the fund itself, we are quite unable to see in what the reputed surplus consists.

It was also opportunely stated that we should then be making no provision whatever for periods of unusual depression, when, possibly, the petitioners for relief may require assistance beyond the amount of our yearly income, and the Craft would then find that the principal of the fund must be diminished, in order to afford substantial help to brethren in their poverty and distress. We cannot, however, help expressing our admiration of the extremely lucid and able manner in which Bro. Clabon submitted his scheme for the consideration of Grand Lodge, and although we rejoice at the result, we are bound to admit that Bro. Clabon stated his case so fairly and strongly that his defeat must be entirely attributed to the powerful conviction in the minds of the Craft, that all attempts to curtail or diminish the Fund of Benevolence must be sternly and unmistakeably resisted.

QUARTERLY COMMUNICATION OF GRAND LODGE.

The Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge was held on Wednesday last, at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, and was brilliantly attended.

Amongst the brethren present were the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, Most Worshipful Grand Master, who presided; Bro. John Fawcett, Provincial Grand Master for Durham, who acted as Deputy Grand Master; the Earl Percy, G.S. Warden; Frederick Perkins, P.S.G.W., acting as J.G.W.; the Earl of Limerick, Provincial Grand Master for Bristol; Sir Daniel Gooch, Provincial Grand Master for Bucks and Berks; T. M. Talbot, Provincial Grand Master for South Wales; J. R. Stebbing, P.G.D., Cooper-Foster, G.S.D., L. Evans, President Board of General Purposes, Rev. J. R. Simpson, P.G. Chaplain, Rev. T. J. Thompson, ditto and 177; E. G. Holbrook, W.M. 3:9; C. S. Woollons, I.P.M., 364; V. W. Edmunds, P.M. 309; Massey, W.M., and Massey, S.W., Beadon Lodge; E. S. Main, I.P.M.; J. Wallingford; J. Wilson, P.M.; E. Groves, S.W.; W. H. Berring; J. Brett, Assist. G. Purs.; Walford, J.W., 177; J. Nunn, G.S.B.; Mortlock, W.M., 186; Mann, P.M., 186, &c.

The Grand Lodge was opened in ample form and with solemn prayer.

The minutes of the Quarterly Communication of March 3rd, the minutes of the Especial Grand Lodge of April 14th, and the minutes of the Grand Festival of April 28th were read by Bro. John Hervey, Grand Secretary.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

In reference to the notice which stood on the agenda paper, with regard to the Prince of Wales and the Craft,

The Most Worshipful the GRAND MASTER said: I have the pleasing duty to make a communication to the brethren, which I am sure must be gratifying to the Grand Lodge and to every Mason in the Craft in England. The communication is, that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has joined our Fraternity, having been made a Mason by His Majesty the King of Sweden. (Applause.) I am quite sure that this must be a most gratifying circumstance to communicate to the Grand Lodge. I have had more than one interview with his royal highness lately, and he authorised me to express to the Grand Lodge that it was his anxious wish to be present at this Grand Lodge, and he was very much disappointed that the circumstance that it was held on the day set apart for the celebration of the Queen's birthday prevented him having that pleasure. (Applause.) I have also had communicated to me privately by his royal highness, but I am authorised by him to mention it publicly, that it is his wish to join one or more of the English lodges. (Applause.) I think I need not say more on this subject, except to express the high gratification which I feel myself in the fact of a prince of the blood royal, and more especially the heir to the throne, having joined Masonry, and having expressed so strong an interest as he has done in the good and welfare of the Craft. (Applause.) I now beg to give notice that, in conformity with ancient usage, it is my intention to propose, at the next Grand Lodge, that the rank of Past Grand Master be conferred on His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. (Cheers.) I believe that there are numerous precedents for this course; for every prince of the blood royal who has joined Masonry has, upon the fact being known and recognised, had the rank of Past Grand Master conferred on him. (Great applause.)

THE INAUGURATION FESTIVAL.

The M.W. GRAND MASTER moved that a vote of thanks be given to Bro. Albert W. Woods and Thomas Fenn, the Grand Director of Ceremonies, and the Assistant Grand Director of Ceremonies, for the very admirable manner in which they conducted the ceremony at the Inauguration Festival on the 14th April last.

The motion was seconded by Bro. FAWCETT, Pro. Grand Master for Durham, and unanimously agreed to.

Bro. UDALL moved that the vote of thanks be recorded on vellum, and signed by the M.W.G. Master, which was also agreed to.

Bros WOOD and FENN severally returned thanks for the high compliment which had been conferred upon them.

THE PAST GRAND PURSUIVANT.

The M.W.G.M. proposed that Bro. THOS. R. Lewis, late Grand Pursuivant, do take rank as, and wear the clothing of, a Past Grand Pursuivant, which was agreed to.

THE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES.

A ballot took place for members of the Board of General Purposes. From the Master's list the following are the successful candidates:—H. W. Hemsworth, 190; H. Lloyd, 143; S. May, 780; T. Price, 216; F. Richardson, 14; F. W. Shields, 33; R. W. Stewart, 12.

The Past Masters were:—W. M. Bywater, 19; E. Cox, 657; J. W. Halsey, 134; J. B. Monckton, 1,150; F. Robinson, 259; J. E. Saunders, 1.

THE COLONIAL BOARD.

A ballot took place for members of the Colonial Board, and the following were the successful candidates: F. Adlard, 7; B. Baker, 21; F. Bennoch, 1; C. A. Cottebrune, 733; E. Cox, 657; M. S. Machin, 930; J. G. Marsh, 28.

THE BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

Four vacancies in this committee were filled up as under:—C. Hosgood 192, H. M. Levy 188, J. G. Thompson 862, F. Walters 73.

THE BOARD OF BENEVOLENCE.

The report of the Board of Benevolence for the last quarter was presented, in which were recommendations for the following grants, viz:—

The Widow of the late Bro. F. D—, of the Royal Sussex Lodge of Hospitality, No. 187, Bristol	£30	0	0
Bro. R. J. C—, of the Humber Lodge, No. 57, Hull	£75	0	0
Bro. J. A—, of the Skiddaw Lodge No. 1002, Cockermouth	£30	0	0
Bro. W. H—, of the Howe Lodge, No. 587, Birmingham	£30	0	0
The Widow of the late Bro. C. H. J—, of the Palladin Lodge, No. 120, Hereford	£30	0	0

These recommendations were put seriatim and agreed to.

THE BUILDING COMMITTEE.

A report was brought up from the Building Committee, the concluding portion of which was as follows:—

"The labours of the Committee being now ended it is their duty

"1st.—Gratefully to acknowledge the confidence which Grand Lodge has been pleased to place in them.

"2nd.—To assure Grand Lodge that (under, at times, very difficult circumstances) they have endeavoured faithfully to perform their duty.

"3rd.—To claim the indulgence of Grand Lodge for any short comings, to tender their resignations, and to offer, individually or collectively, any assistance which the Board of General Purposes may at any future time require in the explanation of any matters of doubt.

"The Committee respectfully place their resignations in the hands of Grand Lodge, and submit the following resolution for its adoption.

"That the work for which the Building Committee was appointed being now concluded their resignation of their office be accepted."

"JOHN HAVERS, Chairman.
Freemasons' Hall, May, 17th, 1869.

"The Chairman having quitted the Chair, it was unanimously resolved that the Committee being now virtually dissolved, they cannot separate without offering to their respected Chairman, Bro. JOHN HAVERS, P.G.W., their deep sense of the ability and kindness with which he has presided over them during the last six years and a half. His energy and attention in carrying out the works entrusted to the Committee by the Craft has only been exceeded by the courtesy with which he has listened to the suggestions of each of its Members, and the unity with which they have worked has been mainly owing to the judicious manner in which he has presided over them. They, therefore, on this, the last time of their meeting, desire, with all respect and kind feeling, to offer him their best and most cordial thanks and good wishes for his future health and happiness.

J. LLEWELLYN EVANS. J. RANKIN STEBBING.
JOHN SAVAGE. JOHN HERVEY.
GEORGE PLUCKNETT.

"The only other member of the Committee, Bro. HENRY GRISSELL, is abroad."

Bro. J. HAVERS moved that the report be taken as read, which was passed. He also moved that it be entered on the minutes. At the completion of seven years' labour he thanked the brethren for the confidence they had placed in them, and asked their kind indulgence for any short-comings there may have been. [The motion was agreed to.] Br. Havers proposed the last resolution the Committee had to offer Grand Lodge, which was to the effect, "That the work for which the Building Committee was appointed being concluded, their resignation of their office be accepted." In doing this he said the Committee had no desire to screen themselves from any responsibility, but having concluded their work, they asked Grand Lodge to accept their resignation.

The motion was then put by the M.W.G.M.

Bro. J. E. SAUNDERS of the Grand Master's Lodge, moved a rider to this resolution. He said the Committee had framed the motion with great delicacy, and having done a great and good work in the completion of the building, they resigned their trust into the hands of the Grand Lodge. The foundation was laid in careful thought, and the last stone in rejoicing. He felt they owed a deep debt of gratitude to the Building Committee which had been so ably presided over by Bro. Havers, and to whom great honour was due. The resolution he proposed was, "That the work for which the Building Committee was appointed having been completed to the entire satisfaction of Grand Lodge, their resignation of office be accepted."

Bro. NUNN seconded the motion as amended, which was put and agreed to.

Bro. HAVERS expressed his gratitude to the Committee for the insertion of these words.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE BOARD OF BENEVOLENCE.

The report of the Committee on the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution was deferred until the next Grand Lodge, on account of an informality in some notices not having been given at the Board of Masters.

THE PROPOSITION TO APPLY THE FUND OF THE BOARD OF BENEVOLENCE TO THE SCHOOLS.

The second report of the Committee on the Fund of Benevolence was circulated amongst the brethren, and a tabular statement of the Fund for some years past, showing the surplus each year, was exhibited. It stated, in reference to Bro. Clabon's proposition, that no reason existed for continuing this accumulation, and recommended that two-thirds of the surplus annually be appropriated to the Boys' and Girls' Schools. The committee proceeded in the first instance to consider the general question of the appropriation of the Fund of Benevolence, and the mode of dealing therewith; as to the amount of relief to which the Lodge of Benevolence, and the Grand Master, on the recommendation of that lodge are now limited as to the inquiry made into the cases of applicants; as to relief to the Scottish, Irish, and Foreign Masons, &c.

Bro. CLABON said as the report had been circulated amongst the members of the Craft, it would be unnecessary for him to go into details, but he would refer to a few of the principal points. The report proposed that two-thirds of the surplus funds of the Board of Benevolence should be applied towards assisting children on their leaving the schools, for many of them were in a very helpless state, and his proposition was to come forward and help them. He urged them to educate them so as to enable them to get their own living. He referred to one of the best boys in the Boys' School, who was discharged at 15½ years of age, and, as he had no friends, he got a situation in a stockbroker's office at 6s. per week, but as there was a balance of £10 from an old charity fund, the House Committee supplemented that sum by a subscription out of their own pockets to assist this boy in obtaining a proper position in life. At the same time they found a large surplus in the Board of Benevolence, but they had never heard one word as to helping these children on their leaving the schools, and the question was whether Grand Lodge should help them, or whether they should take the means for doing so from the Board of Benevolence. The surplus last year was £1400, in addition to the printed report; but he did not ask to take one penny of the surplus until the claims of the Board of Benevolence were satisfied. If they were to go on accumulating it would be of no use to Freemasonry. If the accumulation was to go on, it would soon amount to £100,000, which would be holding out temptation to some persons to come into masonry for the sake of the benefits to be derived from it, who ought to begin masonry by helping others. He was of opinion, therefore, that the time was come when they should deal with that surplus, for in something like ten years a fund would accumulate sufficient for all the purposes of their schools. He was about to read some passages from a pamphlet written by Bro. M. Cooke, when Bro. GREGORY rose to order.

The M.W. GRAND MASTER ruled Bro. Clabon could not read the passages.

Bro. CLABON continued: He said at the time of the union this fund was created as a trust. He believed it was a trust, and quoted the 18th Article of Union of the 1st December, 1813, which said "the fund appropriated to the objects of Masonic benevolence shall not be infringed on for any purpose, but shall be kept strictly and solely devoted to charity; and pains shall be taken to increase the same. By adopting his plan—to help the children—was the best way of helping Masons themselves and which would be strictly applying the funds to the cause of charity. He said in answer to the question, as to why he proposed to give some of the surplus to the Boys' and Girls' School and not to the Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons, they were already assisted by grants from Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter.

The Benevolent Institution possessed a large fund and did not spend their annual income. After addressing the Grand Lodge for about half an hour, he as chairman of the committee moved the resolution that the report of the committee be adopted. He referred to an amendment, notice of which had been given by the Earl of Limerick, which would empower the Board of Benevolence to grant sums to the Boys' and Girls' School on the recommendation of the House Committee, but he thought that brethren who attended the Board of Benevolence would agree with him that the duties of that board were already sufficiently onerous, they having to sit from four to five hours to dispose of the business, and that there ought to be no addition to their labours.

BRO. JOHN HAVERS suggested that as there were many brethren from the country who had come up to vote upon the subject they should take it at once as the main question. (Hear, hear.)

BRO. CLABON adopted that course and moved—

"Until Grand Lodge shall otherwise direct, one-third of the annual surplus of the Fund of Benevolence shall be appropriated for the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, and another third for the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, in forming funds for apprenticing the children of Freemasons who have been in those schools, or in otherwise assisting them to commence life.

"Such one-third part respectively shall be invested in the names of four trustees for each school, to be appointed by Grand Lodge, and the dividends paid to the treasurer of each school.

"The general committee, on the recommendation of the house committee of each school, may apply the dividends of the funds respectively appropriated to the school for the benefit of children who have been at the School during the preceding twelve months, in apprenticing them to any business or profession, or otherwise aiding them to obtain employment, or in applying any sum granted, by annual instalments, for a limited period, for the benefit of those proceeding to any school, college, or university.

"No sum exceeding £25 shall be appropriated for the benefit of any child, without the consent of the quarterly court of the school, and such court shall render to Grand Lodge an annual account of the receipts and expenditure on account of the said funds.

"That the scheme, as recommended by the committee, be, and the same is hereby adopted by Grand Lodge, and added to the Book of Constitutions under the head Fund of Benevolence, after No. 16, as Nos. 17, 18, 19, and 20."

Bro. UDALL seconded the motion.

The Earl of LIMERICK then moved an amendment:—

"The Lodge of Benevolence, on the recommendation of the house committees of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, and of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, respectively, may grant sums to aid children, who have been at such schools during the previous twelve months, in commencing life. Providing always that the total amount so granted, in any one year, shall not exceed one-half of the surplus of the Fund of Benevolence for the previous year. No sum exceeding twenty pounds shall be appropriated for the benefit of any child, without the consent of Grand Lodge; and such consent, given at a quarterly communication, shall suffice without any further confirmation."

He was exceedingly anxious the children, on leaving the school, should get on well in the world, but he had great doubts whether Bro. Clabon had got the best scheme to promote his object. When the scheme was originally proposed it was said, "Considering the large amount of the reserve fund of benevolence, and the annually increasing surplus of that fund, that no reason exists for continuing this accumulation, and that without diminishing the principal of the reserve fund, the annual surplus may be applied with advantage for the benefit of this generation." As far as that went he could not agree with it that no reason existed for continuing this accumulation, for, as they were an increasing body, their responsibilities also were increasing. His Bro. Clabon had expressed no doubt that the Grand Lodge was really competent to deal with the funds of the Board of Benevolence according to the articles of union; but he knew not whether he was right, for articles of union did not go for much just now. (Laughter.) He felt strongly that the funds of the Board of Benevolence should be devoted to charity, and if they were to be applied to the support of their children, that ought to be done under the control of the Grand Lodge. His objection to Bro. Clabon's scheme was that he wanted to take two-thirds of the surplus funds from the control of the Board of Benevolence, and give it to a body over whom they had no control whatever. "That was one of his objections to that part of the report in which it was said that 'the annual surplus might be applied with advantage for the benefit of this generation.'" He did not think that it would be the best way to take one-third of the surplus to be invested for the use of the schools, as for years it would be unappreciable to the few children leaving the schools, and it would be constantly varying in amount. He did not see either why there should be devoted one-third to each of the schools, unless it was to prevent jealousy between them; but he looked upon it as a one-sided measure, and saw no reason why a favour should be conceded to one side more than another. He concluded by moving the amendment he had proposed.

Bro STEBBING disagreed with both propositions before the Lodge. His object was not to run a tilt with his learned Brother Clabon, who had, with great pains and assiduity, prepared the report which had been presented to the Grand Lodge. That report had been prepared with great ability and research. He (Bro. Stebbing) would not go into the law of the case, as to whether or not they could send their children to the Universities; but would contend that that was not the charity for which that fund was created, and which would not serve the best interests of Freemasonry. The Board of Benevolence only possessed the small sum of £27,000, which he looked upon as a reproach to Freemasonry. That was all the fund that was under the protection of Grand Lodge to relieve poor masons and their widows, and the latter class could only knock once at their door. It was only the other day he heard that one small lodge in London had a benevolent fund of between £11,000 and £12,000, whilst their poor children were looking forward at some future time for relief from a fund of £27,000, which was producing only £1,500 a year. In his own town, a small one, they had a fund of benevolence which was upwards of £4000, but they had passed a resolution it should never be touched until it amounted to £2000, and any calls in the meantime that had been made upon it they had paid out of their own pockets. He did not think that the sum of £27,000 was what the Lodge of Benevolence ought to be, and he said at the last Grand Lodge that as large numbers were then joining their Order they brought larger claims upon them. The surplus of the Board of Benevolence in 1867 was £2,200, whilst in 1868 it was only £1,200, thereby dropping down £1000, although the receipts were greater than in the former year; the surplus being diminished by the extra claims of distressed masons and their widows. He would ask them to let the words of Bro. Clabon sink deep in their hearts when he said that a part of his proposition was to further educate girls of sixteen years of age. He would ask the brethren how many of their own children were removed from educational studies before they arrived at sixteen years of age. As it was, parents then knew that their children were in schools where they would receive a good education, and they generally took care to provide something for them, although they could not all send them to the Universities. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) He did not think they would go to the Universities, but they would receive a good education. (Loud cheers.) Bro. Clabon had said that if they provided too much for old Masons they would induce men to come into Masonry, but on that point he joined issue with him, for men did not come into Masonry with such objects. They came into it with high hopes and feelings, seeking a position in the world, and did not come into it, as was suggested, for the purpose of asking the charity of the Grand Lodge. He trusted that they would not make their schools so rich as to dazzle the eyes of men, and induce them to join Masonry, so that in five or ten years they would be able to send their sons to the Universities. (Hear, hear.) Why, if they did that it would be a good thing for a young man with a family to join them, with a prospect in four or five years of having the whole of his family educated at the Universities, at the expense of the Craft. Let him expose another fallacy of Bro. Clabon's, when he said this surplus fund would be devoted to charity. It might be Bro. Clabon's reading of charity, but it was not his (Bro. Stebbing). To help the poor old Mason and the poor old woman in their hour of distress was to him (Bro. Stebbing) more like real charity (hear, hear) than in spending their money in further educating children after they had arrived at sixteen years of age. The clause of the Articles of Union referred to, said "that this fund should not be infringed on for any purpose, but should be kept strictly and solely devoted to charity; and pains shall be taken to increase the same." He (Bro. Stebbing) challenged him upon that proposition, as Bro. Clabon had set it forth it would never be increased. If they took one-third of the surplus for the Boys' School, and another third for the Girls' School, they would never be able to increase the fund of the Royal Benevolent Institution for the old men and women, who would go away from an election disappointed, and who would wait in deep anxiety often fatal, as to whether they would be elected in the next year, or continue in that hope which maketh the heart sick. They would be spending their funds in pampering youth, whilst the old might waste away through anxiety from year to year, and at last die in despair. That might be going on, as he said from year to year, whilst the young would be sent to the universities. He wished further to call the attention of the brethren to one or two things, for Bro. Clabon had said he would touch but the surplus of the Benevolent Fund, and he was anxious to use his exact words. He said that no necessity exists for continuing the accumulation without diminishing the principal of the reserved fund, the annual surplus may be applied with advantage for the benefit of this generation. Now, without referring to the law regarding that proposition, as it was always his desire to call things by their proper name—to call a spade a spade—and it was not in his nature to offer offence to any one, he would ask whether that proposition was an honest one. Who provided the Fund of Benevolence? Not the present generation, for it had come down to them from years past—from the time of the union, when a £4,000 or £5,000 was devoted to benevolence, and that sum had been added to slowly, from year to year. During his Lordships reign in the Craft there had been a rapid increase in numbers, and there might be said to be a plethora of money, but it was their great charities that bound them together. Their origin was concert, and Freemasonry was a great institution, but it was their noble charities that bound them to each other. Still, they might not always be so prosperous, for those who had just come among them might become a legacy upon them, and therefore they ought to make a provision for some time to come after them. He was inclined to be liberal to the schools, but he trusted that while they were supported they would not rob the fund for those who would come after them. He hoped the fund would go on increasing, and in that spirit he should move an amendment he had placed on the paper, for the purpose of stopping that unworthy object. (Loud cheering.)

Bro. GREGORY spoke in favour of the original motion.

Bro. JOHN HAVERS opposed the motion and said that £27,000 was not too large a sum to meet a rainy day, for a time of adversity might come upon them. If they once gave a sum to any charity, however badly it might be used, they could not take it back again. It was said that men entered their society for the purpose of making themselves "more extensively serviceable to their fellow creatures;" but the principle would be reversed and they would make their fellow creatures more extensively serviceable to them, if they held out a bait to them that their children would not only be well taken care of whilst they were in the school, but would receive a handsome sum on quitting it. That would be a great inducement to many to come amongst them, for the purpose of receiving those benefits which would be open to them.

Col. L. COLE opposed the motion.

Bro. CLABON said a few words in reply, and the Earl of Limerick consented to withdraw his amendment.

Bro. STEBBING moved the following amendment:—

"That in the opinion of this Grand Lodge, it is not desirable that any portion of the interest arising from the capital invested to the credit of the Fund of Benevolence should be treated as surplus income, but that it should be added from time to time to the capital, and be invested accordingly."

Bro. MASON had much pleasure in seconding the amendment.

The M.W.G. Master then put the amendment, which was carried almost unanimously. It was afterwards put to the brethren as an original motion and carried.

The other business, in consequence of the lateness of the evening, was put off for consideration to the next Grand Lodge.

The M.W.G. Master then closed Grand Lodge in ample form, the Rev. Grand Chaplain offering up prayer to the G.A.O.T.U.

ROYAL PLANTAGENET ENCAMPMENT.—A special meeting of this Conclave was held on the evening of June 1st, for the purpose of admitting to the Order a Companion from the Sister Isle, who had crossed the Channel for the purpose. The ceremony was performed by the P.G. Commander of the Province, who was well supported by the officers of the Encampment. Sir Kt Barber, P.G.O. presided at the organ, and the whole ceremony was performed in a most satisfactory manner, and much to the gratification of the newly-installed Knight.

MASONIC HALL, IPSWICH.—The Victoria Chapter of Rose + met on May 29th, when two brethren from Ireland were admitted to the Order. This Chapter although so young, being privileged by having real good working Masons for the various officers, the whole of the long ceremony was performed in a most sublime and beautiful manner, the arrangement of the hall affording every facility for working this degree such, we believe, as no other provincial chapter can boast of. The brethren admitted expressed the delight they had experienced in being received, and at once joined the chapter as subscribing members. We have never before seen the ceremony so well done as it was on this occasion, and the introduction of music in the various parts had a splendid effect. Bro. Barber, as usual, presided, first at the harmonium and afterwards at the organ.

PROV. GRAND LODGE OF OXFORDSHIRE, & ALFRED LODGE, 340.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

The installation of the W.M., "Alfred" Lodge, Oxford, took place on Monday, and was succeeded by the annual Provincial Grand Lodge, both meetings being held, by permission of the "Apollo" Lodge, in the university Masonic Hall, Cornmarket-street. We do not remember to have witnessed, in connection with Freemasonry, a more interesting spectacle, than that presented by the "Alfred" Lodge on this occasion; the much esteemed D.P.G.M. of Oxfordshire (Bro. R. J. Spiers, P.G.S.B., of the Grand Lodge of England,) having undertaken the pleasing duty of installing his son (Bro. S. Patey Spiers, P.P. Supt. of Works,) as W.M., who, in his turn, initiated a younger brother (Mr. Frank E. Spiers,) into the ancient mysteries of the order.

The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened, between 5 and 6 o'clock, when the reports from the different lodges were read, and the P.G.M., congratulated the brethren upon the satisfactory position of the Province. He also expressed his deep obligations, to the D.P.G.M. (Bro. R. J. Spiers,) and the Prov. Grand Officers, for the valuable assistance they had rendered him. The lodge voted £10 10s. to the Masonic charities; the usual sum to the local charities; £10 10s. to the Zetland Testimonial Fund; and £5 5s. towards the expenses incurred by the recent visit to Oxford of the children of the Girls School. A letter from the children was read, in which they stated the pleasure they experienced, and thanked Bro. Thompson, Bro. Spiers, and other brethren who made special efforts in connection with this treat to their young "sisters."

In addition to the Prov. G.M. and the Dep. Prov. G.M. there were present:—Bros. Rev. C. J. Martyn, Grand Chaplain of England; T. M. Talbot, Prov. G. Master, South Wales; H. Murray, District G. Master, China; W. E. Gumbleton, P. Grand Deacon of England; Col. A. W. Adair, P. Prov. G.M., Somerset; Rev. Sir John Hayes, Bart., P.G. Chap. D.P.G.M., Berks and Bucks; J. Blandy-Jenkins, P. Prov. G.W., Berks and Bucks, W.M., 945; Capt. Lamert, P.G. St., Prov. S.G.W., Oxon., W.M. 357; S.P. Spiers, Prov. J.G.W., Oxon., W.M. 340; G. Gumbleton, P. Prov. G.D., W.M. 378; D. W. Horloch, Prov. G. Reg., W.M. 1036. Past Masters: J. T. Morland, P. Prov. G.D., Berks and Bucks, Rev. W. F. Short, T. F. Dillan, Dr. Owen, H. Houghton, E. G. Bruton, A. S. Hurford, W. W. Harrison, H. D'Almaine, J. B. Looker, R. Havers, Dr. Griffin, A. B. Rye, E. J. Hartley, H. Harley. Bros. Rev. S. E. Hodgson, Rev. G. C. Nottley, Rev. J. N. Palmer, W. C. Borlase, F. H. McCalmont, F. B. Howell, Dr. Spencer, C. V. Lockwood, E. M. Wakeman, A. U. Moorsom, E. Conolly, W. R. Hobbs, G. Moor, C. Churchill, A. S. Churchill, J. Saunders, B. de M. Dawson, P. Irving, Cosburn, J. Juggins, W. Emberlin, C. L. Pemberton, D. Faulkner, R. Williams, P. Williams, J. Bue, V. de Tivoli, W. Gardiner, Walter Thompson, F. S. Spiers, W. Welshman, C. V. Trotter, J. W. Paine, &c. &c.

The Provincial G.M. invested Bro. Rev. W. F. Short, P. Prov. S.G.W., and Bro. F. H. McCalmont, Grand Registrar, with the Charity Jewel, in acknowledgement of their services as stewards to the Masonic charities, and, in the name of the province, thanked them for their zeal and interest in behalf of those charities.

The Provincial G.M. then appointed his officers for the year, as follows:—

Bro. Capt. G. F. Laurent, W.M., 357	Prov. S.G. Warden.
" Samuel Patey Spiers, W.M., 340	" J.G. Warden.
" Rev. S. E. Hodgson	" G. Chaplain.
" Rev. C. H. Norwood	" G. Chaplain.
" T. Randall	" G. Treasurer.
" D. W. Horloch, W.M., 1036 ..	" G. Registrar.
" W. C. Borlase	" G. Secretary.
" F. B. Howell	" S.G. Deacon.
" C. V. Lockwood	" J.G. Deacon.
" E. M. Wakeman	" G. Spt. of Wr's.
" A. A. Moorsom	" G. Dirctr. of C.
" E. Conolly	" G. Dirctr. of U.
" W. R. Hobbs	" G. Swd. Bearer.
" W. H. Arkwright	" G. Organist.
" G. Moor	" G. Pursuivant.
" H. Dean	" Ast. G. Pursvnt.
" C. Churchill
" T. Saunders
" B. de M. Dawson	" G. Stewards.
" A. S. Churchill
" J. Cooke
" P. Irving
" W. Stephens	" Tyler.

Immediately the lodge business had concluded the brethren, numbering nearly ninety, adjourned to a banquet, served in the assembly rooms of the Clarendon Hotel. The chair was occupied by the R.W. Bro. Colonel H. Atkins Bowyer, P.G.M., and the company included, Bros. Talbot, the P.G.M. of South Wales; Murray, District Grand Master of China; Colonel Adair, P.P.G.M., Somerset; Spiers, P.G.S.B., and D.P.G.M. of Oxford; the Rev. Sir J. Warren Hayes, P.G.C., and D.P.G.M. of Berks and Bucks; S. P. Spiers, P.J.G.W., W.M. "Alfred"

Lodge; the Rev. C. Martyn, G.C.; Capt. Lamert, W.M. "Apollo"; Short, P.M., 357; Blandy-Jenkins, W.M. "Abbey" Lodge, Abingdon; Horlock, W.M., "Bowyer" Lodge; Gumbleton, W.M., "Churchill" Lodge; Looker, P.M., "Cherwell" Lodge; the Rev. Hodgson, Prov. G. Chaplain; and Bros. Hobbs, Havers, Griffin, Hartley, Lockwood, Faulkner, J. T. Morland, E. Morland, H. D'Almaine, Juggins, Emberlin, Borlase, McCalmont, Houghton, Marsh, Arkwright, Harrison, Bruton, Randall, Cosburn, Smith, F. Spiers, Williams, Hurford, Pye, &c. "Non vobis domine" was sung by several brethren, who subsequently favoured the company with some excellent glees, &c.

The banquet was all that could be desired, and at its conclusion,

The P.G.M., in proposing the first toast, that of the "The Queen and the Craft," said he felt it required no words of his to ensure for it a loyal and cordial reception. He prayed that Her Most Gracious Majesty might long reign over them, and that this kingdom might continue as happy and prosperous as at the present time. (Cheers.)

The P.G.M. next proposed, "The health of the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." (Cheers.) The heir-apparent was so well-known to them when at Oxford, and so much beloved that he need say little respecting His Royal Highness, but he might mention that the Prince now belonged to their Order, and as a Brother deserved their best wishes. (Cheers.) His Royal Highness had lost no opportunity of qualifying himself for the high position which he would one day be called upon to fill. (Cheers.)

The P.G.M. next gave "The health of the M.W.G.M., the Earl of Zetland." (Cheers.) Those who as Masons had for some years served under the reign of Lord Zetland, must know how faithfully he had discharged the duties of his high office, and how completely he had devoted himself and his wealth to the interests of Freemasonry. They knew, also, how he had assisted the charities, and how generously the Craft had responded to his appeals. (Cheers.) He called upon the brethren to drink most cordially to the health of their G.M., who he trusted, would be spared for many years, to serve the Order as he had done in the past. (Cheers.)

Bro. SPIERS, the D.P.G.M., rose and said he was fortunate in having the high privilege of proposing the next toast, because he need only mention the subject of it to arouse general enthusiasm—it was, "The health of the R.W. Prov. G. Master, Colonel Bowyer." (Loud and prolonged cheers.) It was quite impossible for him to say in the presence of their worthy P.G.M. all that he and they felt respecting him, but on no occasion had they had so much reason to drink to the good health of their P.G.M. as on the present. (Hear, hear.) Their P.G.M. had, as most of the brethren were aware, been suffering from serious indisposition, and having partially regained his strength, he had come among them to show how deeply he felt the pleasure of visiting them, and being, as he had for the last fifteen years, one of them themselves. His kindness was well-known to them all, and also the personal regard he entertained for every Brother in the Province. They knew, likewise, how liberally their P.G.M. supported the Masonic charities. (Cheers.) But if he (Bro. Spiers) were to continue speaking for half an hour he could not do justice to the qualities of the beloved Brother who presided over this Province. (Hear, hear.) They all hoped Col. Bowyer might long be spared to occupy the position he now so efficiently filled. (Cheers.)

The P.G.M., who was enthusiastically greeted on rising, remarked that he need not assure the brethren, he deeply felt the kind manner in which his health was proposed, and the most cordial way, in which it had been received. It reminded him of the many kindnesses he had received at their hands ever since he had had the pleasure of presiding over the Province—he might say, "reigned" over the Province, but the fact was, no reigning at all was required, as the brethren generally had most readily helped him, in guiding this Province in the true path of Freemasonry, and had given no pain or trouble. Therefore it had afforded him the greatest happiness to preside over them. (Cheers.) He was sorry that of late his health had rendered him inadequate to do what they required of him but what he considered was due to such a Province as this,—(cries of No, no.) He would not say with poor Macbeth, "I have lived long enough,"—cries of No, no—but he was advancing in years, and it was for him, earnestly to seek for one who would preside over them. (Cries of No, no.) He felt extremely sorry to enter upon this subject, as he always derived the greatest possible pleasure in observing the hearty way, in which the brethren of the Province had striven to promote the interest of Freemasonry. Their faithfulness and cordiality had, he would not say enabled him to perform his duty, but made up for his shortcomings, and when he retired from the position he now had the pleasure to occupy,—(cries of "No, no.")—he should do so with a deep sense of grateful satisfaction and a fraternal regard and affection for them. There had been an absence of everything like uncomfortable feeling, and the Province had attained a position in the Craft most honourable to itself, and by no means unworthy of Masonry at large. He thanked the brethren most sincerely for their kindness, and for the honour they had done him, and hoped for them health and happiness. (Loud cheers.)

The P.G.M. again rose, and said he had next the pleasure of proposing a toast most interesting to the Craft in general, because they were extremely indebted to the subject of it. He called upon them to drink the health of the R.W.D.G.M. Earl de Grey and Ripon, and the Grand Officers past and present. (Cheers.) They knew the D.G.M. devoted himself to Freemasonry to the utmost limit of his leisure, and that notwithstanding all his duties connected with the State he was frequently at his post in Grand Lodge. (Cheers.) However, their interest in this toast principally rested on its connection with this province, and they had had a most excellent Deputy Grand Master in the person of Brother Spiers, who was Past Grand Sword Bearer. (Cheers.) They had also among them this evening, their excellent and worthy brother, the Rev. Sir John Hayes, Past Grand Chaplain, whom they all delighted to see; also Bro. Gumbleton, P.G.W.; Bro. the Rev. Charles Martyn, G.C., and other brethren who had held office in Grand Lodge. (Cheers.)

Bro. the Rev. C. MARTYN expressed the great gratification he felt in re-visiting Oxford, every building in which brought back to his mind most vividly and forcibly the happy days he spent there. When he returned and attended a Masonic gathering, it seemed but yesterday when he took part in the business of one of the Oxford lodges. He well remembered all the kind things that the D.P.G.M. said of him eleven years ago, when he (Bro. Martyn) occupied the position now filled by Bro. S. P. Spiers; and now the P.G.M. prophesied for him a happy and brilliant career in Freemasonry. He considered that he should attain the height of his ambition if he filled the post of Grand Chaplain, to which he had been appointed, but he must say his position was quite insignificant when he compared it with what he had seen this day; he of course referred to the installation of Bro. Spiers as W.M. of the Alfred Lodge, by his worthy father, the D.P.G.M. (Cheers.) Eleven years ago, the P.G.M. spoke in flattering terms of Bro. Martyn and his bride, and now he stood before them as the happy father of two sons—(laughter)—and he would not say how many daughters. (Renewed laughter.) The eldest boy was constantly declaring that he would be a Freemason and a clergyman, and he (Bro. Martyn) hoped he might be spared to instal him as Bro. Spiers had his son, and that he in his turn might initiate his brother, who, however, was now but fourteen months old. (Laughter.) He heartily trusted the P.G.M. might be spared for many years to preside over this province. (Hear, hear.)

The P.G.M., in eulogistic terms, next called on the brethren to drink the health of Bro. Sir J. W. Hayes, Bro. Murray, Bro. Col. Adair, and Bro. Talbot, the latter of whom had taken his departure.

The toast was cordially received, and

Bro. the Rev. Sir J. W. HAYES, Bart., returned thanks, acknowledging the great assistance the Province of Berks and Bucks always derived from the Masons of Oxfordshire, and he rejoiced that the province of which he had the honour of being D.P.G.M. was to such close affinity to them. Most sincerely did he wish prosperity to the Province of Oxford. (Cheers.)

The G.M. of China said he hoped that within 12 months from the present date he should be presiding over a Prov. Grand Lodge in Hong Kong—(Cheers.)—when nothing he could say, would evoke their enthusiasm more than the knowledge that Masons assembled at this ancient seat of learning remembered their brethren in the Chinese Empire. (Cheers.) He had always regarded Oxford as a most important nursery for Freemasonry, as many of the brethren who were initiated there, spread the good principles of the Order throughout all parts of the world. (Hear, hear.) His immediate predecessor was one of themselves, and it was owing to the good Masonic principles, which he took so much trouble to disseminate and the organization he introduced, that he (Bro. Murray) had been able to carry on the work of the lodge, and hold the position which entitled him to return thanks, as the representative of the Grand Lodge of China. (Cheers.) He trusted the Great Architect of the Universe would continue to vouchsafe to them peace and happiness. (Cheers.)

P.P.G.M. Colonel ADAIR (Somerset), also responded, and assured his Oxfordshire brethren that whenever they came so far westward as Somerset they would always receive a hearty welcome. (Cheers.) He was succeeded in the office of P.G.M. by a member of the Apollo Lodge—Lord Carnarvon, who took much interest in everything connected with Freemasonry. (Cheers.) He felt much pleased to see his worthy brother, Colonel Bowyer, in the chair, and it afforded him gratification to meet his mother lodge and the other lodges of the province. He congratulated the Alfred Lodge on their new W.M., who had that day been installed in the chair of K.S.; and he might truly say that a worthy father had been succeeded by a worthy son. (Cheers.) He saw another son of their excellent D.P.G.M. receive the secrets of Freemasonry, and what he had that day witnessed was altogether sufficient to move the hearts of them all. (Hear, hear.) In conclusion, he thanked his Oxford brethren very heartily for their kindness and hospitality. (Cheers.)

The P.G.M. said he now rose to propose a toast most interesting to the province and Provincial Grand Lodge—it was the health of the V.W.D. Provincial Grand Master, and the Prov. G. Officers, past and present. (Cheers.) They could do very little in the province, without the zealous assistance of the Prov. Grand Officers. (Hear, hear.) He assured the brethren it was quite impossible for him to express in adequate terms, what he felt with regard to the D. Prov. Grand Master, and he would not attempt to say much in his presence. Indeed, no remarks of his were necessary, as Bro. Spiers had for some quarter of a century lost no opportunity in advancing the interests of Freemasonry, but had devoted himself to the Craft in a manner which one could scarcely conceive possible, seeing that he had many other duties to perform. (Hear, hear.) Having referred to the great good Bro. Spiers had done as a Mason, the P.G.M., complimented other officers in the province for the efficient way in which they had promoted the welfare of the Order.

Bro SPIERS, the D.P.G.M., ably returned thanks, and spoke of the pleasure he felt in installing his son as W.M. of the "Alfred Lodge," and in seeing his third son initiated. Whenever the Masons of this province thought he could do anything to promote the interest of the Craft, they might rely on his services, as that object was one of the greatest he had in view. (Cheers.)

Bro. Captain LAMERT, W.M. of the "Apollo" Lodge, also responded, and was followed by

Bro. S. P. SPIERS, W.M., of the "Alfred" Lodge, who expressed the feelings of pride realised by the brethren of that Lodge in entertaining the Provincial Grand Lodge, and assured the brethren in different parts of the province that they would always meet a hearty welcome in the Lodge over which he had now the honour to preside. (Cheers.) Speaking on behalf of himself, Bro. Spiers said he had received so much kindness and good feeling from everyone present that he scarcely knew how to express his thanks. Suffice it to say, he had always endeavoured to do his duty, both as a man and a Mason—(hear, hear)—and for anything he had done he had been amply repaid by the honour conferred upon him that day. (Cheers.) They could well understand how much his pleasure had been enhanced by the fact that he had been installed by his father. (Hear, hear.) It had also been a source of much gratification to him to initiate his younger brother into Freemasonry. (Hear, hear.) In conclusion, he again thanked the P.G.M. and brethren for the honour they had done him. (Cheers.)

Bro. GUMBLETON, W.M. "Churchill" Lodge, Bro. Looker, P.M. "Cherwell" Lodge, and Bro. Horcock, W.M. "Bowyer" Lodge, severally responded.

The P.G.M. then proposed the health of the Visitors, associating with it the name of Bro. G. J. COSBURN (Sec. Lodge of Hope, Newbury), who returned thanks.

Bro. S. P. SPIERS, gave the health of the Entered Apprentices, and the D.P.G.M. admirably rendered the Entered Apprentice's Song, after which Bro. Frank Spiers, and Bro. Richard Williams (Paymaster in the Royal Navy), duly returned thanks.

"The Masonic Charities" and other toasts were honoured and this most agreeable gathering of Masons broke up about midnight.

The P.G.M. entrusted the banquet to the charge of the "Alfred" Lodge, and the whole of the arrangements were excellent.

GRAND LODGE OF MARK MASONS OF ENGLAND.

The Half-Yearly Communication of the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters was held at Freemasons' Tavern on Tuesday, the 1st inst., when about fifty brethren were present. Bro. the Rev. G. R. Portal, D.G.M., was installed as Grand Master for the ensuing year, and then appointed the following brethren as officers:—

Sir E. Lechmere, Dep. G.M.; T. Mansel Talbot, S.G.W.; J. Conroy, J.G.W.; Major Woodall, G.O.; Kay Robinson, S.G.O.; John Walker, J.G.O.; Rev. W. R. Bedford, G. Chaplain; Rev. R. N. Sanderson, G.C.; J.R. Stebbing, G. Treasurer; Mann, G. Registrar; F. Binckes, G. Secretary; Bathe, G.S.D.; Hillman, G.J.D.; H. N. Goulty, G. Supt. of Works; W. H. Warr, G. Dir. of Ceremonies; T. J. Sabine Asst. G. D. Cer.; Thos. Wescombe, G. Sword-bearer; Blacklock, G. Standard-bearer; Reid, G. Org.; Weeks, G. Time-keeper. Stewards: Ro-euthal, Lake, Bigg, May, H. Massey Jas. Stevens. McCallum. THE AMERICAN FREEMASON is Monthly, of sixteen double-column quarto pages of entirely original matter, and translations from the French Italian, and German Masonic papers and periodicals of the day. It is devoted to the discussion of the rights of Lodges and individual Freemasons, in contradistinction to the assumptions of Grand Lodges, and the un Masonic doctrines and arrangements of "high degrees." Its motto is—Belief in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. Its price is Five Shillings a year—a sum so small that no Freemason, for pecuniary reasons, need be a non-subscriber to it.

Trans-Atlantic Subscribers to the AMERICAN FREEMASON will receive it Post-paid from the Office of Publication direct, at their respective Post-offices, upon payment of the subscription to

Bro. GEORGE KENNING,
3 & 4, LITTLE BRITAIN, LONDON, E.C.

All Subscriptions begin with March 15th, 1869, and end with February, 1870.

The AMERICAN FREEMASON is not the organ of any Grand Lodge; but speaking the words of truth, manhood, and independence, advocates freedom for Masonry in America, and the rights of Freemasons in their Lodges—rights which, by our Grand Lodges, in their subservency to high degrees, have been invaded, until at present they are nearly obliterated.

Subscribers in the British Colonies will please address all Subscriptions and Correspondence to J. FLETCHER BRENNAN, Editor, 114, Main street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE DR. OLIVER.

THE Committee (consisting of the undersigned five Members of the Witham Lodge, Lincoln), formed for the purpose of collecting subscriptions towards a Memorial to the above distinguished Mason, being anxious to close their labours, will be glad if Brethren wishing to subscribe will intimate their intention at once to the Hon. Sec., Bro. W. G. MOORE, P.M., Witham Lodge, 297, Lincoln.

It is suggested that the Memorial shall take the form of a Scholarship in connection with one of the Masonic Schools, or such other form as may be determined upon by the Subscribers.

Now Ready,

The Investors' Guardian Almanack
For 1869.

THE object of this publication is to meet a want generally expressed to the proprietors of the Investors' Guardian newspaper for some Handy Book for Investors, published annually at a moderate rate, which, furnishing unquestioned and positive data from official documents, might enable small or larger capitalist to regulate his own investments by his own judgment grounded on certified facts.

THE INVESTORS' GUARDIAN ALMANACK,

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

supplies the fullest particulars relating to all Public Companies, with a correct classification of them as investments—whether as regards their capital (nominal and actual), their liabilities and their assets, their incomes and their reserves, their bonuses and their dividends; together with their value as investments, and the return yielded to purchasers at present prices.

The would-be Investor will find in the INVESTORS' GUARDIAN ALMANACK every possible information relating to

1. The English Government Funds.
2. Colonial Government Securities.
3. Foreign Government Securities.
4. Railway Debenture Stocks.
5. Preference Railway Stocks.
6. Railway Ordinary Stocks.
7. Banks.
8. Insurance Companies.
9. Finance Companies—their present position and prospects.
10. Miscellaneous Companies—their relative position as investments.
11. An authorised List of Members of the London Stock Exchange.
12. List of Official Liquidators.
13. List of Companies in Liquidation.
14. Rules for Registration of Companies, and fees payable.
15. List of Officers and Offices of all Public Companies.
16. List of Private Banks in London and the Country, with Names of Partners.
17. An alphabetically-arranged List of the Directors in the Public Companies throughout Great Britain and Ireland, &c., &c.

A work of such magnitude, importance, and precision would not be within the power of any other firm than that of the Proprietors of the Investors' Guardian newspaper, through whose hands the official documents—from which it has been been carefully eliminated—are daily passing, and to whom they are matters of constant reference.

Let the reader judge for himself the value of being able, on hearing the name of any Company mentioned, to turn at once, in this Almanack, to its name in the Alphabetical List and be informed of its Capital, its Shares, the amount subscribed and paid, their present value, the Dividend paid on them, the Reserve held back as guarantee, the Income accruing, its application, and its indebtedness. The information given as to Directors is of equal importance.

In matters such as these, not the Investor only but the Insurer is deeply interested, as will be found by a reference to the pages containing the account of all INSURANCE COMPANIES, and the Editorial remarks and advice appended thereto.

Price, free by Post, 1s. 6d., in limp cover; bound in stiff boards 2s. 6d.

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]

The discovery of Enoch's subterranean temple is alleged to have taken place in the reign of Solomon, and the tradition states that the king, remembering the promise of God to Moses that His holy name should be revealed in the fullness of time, resolved to build and consecrate a temple to the glory of the Most High, being well assured that the sacred treasure would not be recovered until the foundations of the House of the Lord were laid. He therefore collected vast treasures, and following the plan that David, his father, had commissioned him to execute, the building of the Temple was commenced, in the fourth year of King Solomon's reign, upon the most healthful and beautiful plain in all Jerusalem. The workmen discovered an ancient edifice, in which were also found many splendid things—such as vases of gold and silver, curiously chased urns, and columns of marble, porphyry, jasper, agate, and other precious stones—all of which were collected and carried to King Solomon, who, after mature deliberation, arrived at the conclusion that the ruins were those of an ancient temple erected before the deluge, and possibly to the service of some false god. Fearing, therefore, that the temple might be profaned thereby, he ordered the workmen to abandon the ruins, and proceeded to erect the temple in the midst of the sacred Mount Moriah. After the dedication of the Lord's House, Solomon directed certain masters or overseers of the work to search again amongst the ancient ruins; and the legend records the particulars of the discovery which those brethren effected, and for which they were specially rewarded by the King.

The honours conferred upon those fortunate Masters, excited however, the jealousy and envy of certain brethren, who complained to Solomon that they were not admitted to a participation of his confidence and affection, when the monarch replied that he could not advance them to higher dignities until the proper time had arrived, and that the other brethren had merited preferment by their zeal in working, and their constancy in the pursuit of a difficult and dangerous enterprise.

The excluded brethren were enraged at the refusal of their request, and determined to go themselves to the ancient ruins, where, by searching underground, they hoped to obtain the remnant of the treasures therein deposited.

They accordingly departed the next morning at break of day, and, having discovered the entrance to the cavity by raising the mystic ring, they descended with a ladder of ropes, and, aided by the light of torches, until the last man had penetrated into the deepest vault, when the nine arches fell in upon them, utterly destroying all trace of those haughty and ambitious masons. The King was soon apprised of this singular disaster, and ordered three brethren to proceed to the ruins and report to him the full particulars of the catastrophe. On their arrival at the place the three craftsmen were unable to find the nine arches, nor could they ascertain that one of the disobedient masters who had entered into the bowels of the earth, had escaped the general destruction. They examined the spot with great diligence, and observed a few pieces of marble scattered about. Of these they took charge, and returned to King Solomon, to whom they made a full report of the sad fate which had overtaken the presumptuous masters.

Solomon, having ordered the pieces of marble to be carefully put together, found inscribed upon them certain hieroglyphics which, when interpreted, clearly demonstrated that the pieces formed part of the marble column of Enoch, and that the nine arches led to the temple which that holy patriarch had erected to the honour and glory of the true and living God.

The King ordered the marble to be carefully preserved, and placed in the sanctum sanctorum, where it remained until the capture of Jerusalem by Nebuzaradan, when it was destroyed by the brethren themselves, lest it should be profaned by the hands of the idolaters.

It may be mentioned here that the explanations and illustrations of the traditions which assign the origin of Royal Arch Masonry to the time before the flood, are, however beautiful, quite irreconcilable with the legends related in our English "Holy Royal Chapters of Jerusalem."

The No. 81 is considered a sacred Masonic number, and refers to the different ages of the world in which the name of God was known to His servants under various appellations. The table given is as follows, the original words being omitted for obvious reasons, and the English significations substituted:—

- 3 All Puissant.
- 3 Divine Light.
- 3 Striking Light.
- 5 He is what He shall be.
- 5 God Himself alone.
- 5 God Eternal.
- 7 O Thou that art eternal.
- 7 Sustain us by Thy mighty power that we may always assist and love each other.
- 7 Brilliant God.
- 9 Mercy of God.
- 9 In God is my faith.
- 9 The Lord Almighty, I am that I am.
- 81 The Great Name.

The ages of the world are thus enumerated:—

3 Methuselah.	Abraham.
Lamech.	Isaac.
Noah.	9 Judah.
5 Shem.	Hezron.
Arphaxad.	Ram.
Salah.	Aminadab.
Eber.	Nahshon.
7 Peleg.	Salmon.
Reu.	Boaz.
Serug.	Obed.
Nahor.	Jesse.
Terah.	David.

EXCERPTS FROM A MASONIC SCRAP-BOOK.

By WM. JAMES HUGHAN, P.M., No. 131, TRURO.

No. 2.—MASONS ON MASONRY.

"All the plans of Freemasonry are pacific. It co-operates with our blessed religion in regulating the tempers, restraining the passions, sweetening the dispositions, and harmonizing the discordant interests of man, breathes a spirit of universal love and benevolence; adds one thread more to the silken cord of evangelical charity, which binds man to man; and seeks to entwine the cardinal virtues and Christian graces in the web of the affections, and the drapery of the conduct."

"The Rev. T. M. HARRIS, (United States)."

"I have ever felt it my duty to support and encourage the principles and practices of Masonry, because it powerfully develops all the social and benevolent affections; because it mitigates without, and annihilates within, the virulence of political and theological controversy; because it affords the only neutral ground on which men of all ranks and classes can meet on perfect equality, and associate without degradation, or mortification, whether for the purpose of moral instruction or social enjoyment."

"The late Right Hon. the Earl of DURIAM, (P.D.G.M.)."

"The aid and moral purport of Masonry is to subdue our passions, not to do our own will, to make a daily progress in a laudible art, to promote morality, charity, good fellowship, good nature and humanity."

"The Rev. JAMES ANDERSON, D.D., (P.G.W.)."

"Masonry is one of the most sublime and perfect institutions that ever was formed for the advancement of happiness and general good to mankind, creating in all its varieties, universal benevolence and brotherly love. It teaches us those useful, wise and instructive doctrines upon which alone true happiness is founded, and at the same time affords those easy paths by which to attain the rewards of virtue; it teaches us the duties which we owe to our neighbour,—never to injure him in any one situation, but to conduct ourselves with justice and impartiality; it bids us not to divulge the mystery to the public, and it orders us to be true to our trust, to be above all meanness and dissimulation, and in all our avocations to perform religiously that which we ought to do."

"H.R.H. the Duke of SUSSEX (P.G.M.)."

"Freemasons are a public benefit to the world, uniting in the strongest ties the people of all countries, their language is as general as that of the eyes, and in all parts of the globe it is understood, by communicative signs it has become peculiarly valuable, and Freemasons possess, what the learned have sought in vain, an invariable cypher for general communication, a sort of personal shorthand."

"Freemason's Magazine, p. 11, A.D. 1793."

"Masonry has no principle but what might still more ornament the purest mind, nor any appendage but what might give additional lustre to the brightest character."

"The Rev. JETHRO INWOOD, P. Prov. G.C."

ROMAN ROADS.—But of all roadmakers (though the Carthaginians are supposed to be the first people who had paved roads, and the Greeks the first to legislate for their repair) the Romans stand pre-eminent. No other people, of ancient or modern times, are fit for a moment to be compared to the hardy Roman soldiers in the construction of firm and spacious roads, which would have lasted until now, had they not been ruthlessly torn up, by savage numbskulls, in modern days, that they might steal the materials, and boast of living in a state of superior civilization. No matter what difficulties lay in the way, the Romans believed that their soldiers were all the better for being inured to labour, as it contributed alike to their health and morals; knowing that idleness and dissipation generally go hand in hand; and all obstacles were surmounted by patient perseverance.—The History of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, by BRO. Reviews.

"Grand Chapter of Scotland's Reporter," March, 1869.

We are favoured by our esteemed Companion, W. J. Hughan, with a copy of this interesting publication, which contains the proceedings of the Grand Chapter of Scotland for the year ending March, 1869, in ex'enso, together with lists of the office-bearers, Chapters, and Mark Lodges. It appears from the G. Scribe's condensed report that during the year seven new Chapters have received charters, and one Mark Master Lodge a warrant. A Provincial Grand Superintendent has been appointed over the province of Aberdeen, and representatives have been interchanged with the sister Grand Chapters of South Carolina and Tennessee.

At the quarterly meeting held on the 16th September, 1868, the following important communication from Comp. Hughan, on the antiquity of the R.A. degree was read, and a vote of thanks was unanimously awarded to that distinguished Mason for the same:—

"In the interesting Introduction to the Laws of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland, 1861, it is stated that 'The earliest printed notice of the Royal Arch is in an Address by Lawrence Dermott to the Gentlemen of the Fraternity, published about the middle of the last century.' In allusion to the differences between the ancient and modern Grand Lodges of England, he asks, Whether it is possible to initiate or introduce a modern Mason into a Royal Arch lodge (the very essence of Masonry) without making him go through ancient ceremonies? (page v.) The answer to which was 'No.'"

"It was also stated that the Minute-Book belonging to the Stirling Ancient Lodge, of 1743, referring to the Royal Arch Degree, 'is the oldest written record now extant; and no other Chapter in Scotland has been able to show documentary evidence in its favour of an earlier date than 1765, although in these years the Chapters were already accounted old, and in full operation.' (Page xii.)"

"It is my peculiar privilege to be able to afford evidence of the notice of Royal Arch Masonry, in print twenty years earlier than the 'Introduction,' allows of, through being in possession of two works, respectively dated A.D. 1756 and A.D. 1744. The edition of Ahiman Rezon, by Lawrence Dermott, containing 'The Address to the Gentlemen of the Fraternity,' was not published until A.D. 1764, being the second edition."

"The first edition of Ahiman Rezon (which we have) was issued A.D. 1756, and although it did not contain the Address in question, the editor (then Grand Secretary of the Ancients) inserted 'A Prayer repeated in the Royal Arch Lodge at Jerusalem,' (page 47), concluding as follows:—

"Because we have trusted in thy Holy, Great, Mighty, and Terrible name,
We will rejoice and be glad in thy salvation, and in thy mercies, O Lord, our God;
And the multitude of thy mercies, O Lord our God; and the multitude of thy mercies,
Shall not forsake us for ever. Selah:
And now make haste and bring upon us a blessing, and peace from the Four corners of the earth; for thou art a God that workest salvation,
And has chosen us out of every people and language; and thou, our King,
Hast caused us to cleave to thy great name, in love to praise thee,
And to be united to thee, and to love thy name; blessed art thou,
O Lord God, who hast chosen thy people, Israel in love."

Brother Dermott 'having inserted this Prayer, and mentioned that part of Masonry commonly called the Royal Arch' (page 47), proceeds to eulogise it thus:—'I firmly believe the Royal Arch to be the root, heart, and marrow of Freemasonry.'

"Brother Dermott then mentions that the candidate for Royal Arch Masonry must first have 'passed the Chair in regular form, according to the ancient custom of the Craft,' and to further enforce this law, he adds the opinion of the Worshipful Brother, Doctor Field D'Assigny, printed in the year 1744."

"Now, it is this work by D'Assigny that we have the pleasure of possessing, and which we beg to bring before the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland, as its evidence on the Royal Arch Degree is most important and unique."

"It has been thought by some never to have been in existence, as no authority but Dermott, from 1756 down to the last year, ever speaks of having seen it, but, like the late Brother the Rev. Dr. George Oliver, refer to the quotation by Dermott only."

"The learned Mason, Brother J. G. Findel, of Leipzig, when in England on a Masonic visit, says,

'I have sought in vain for the book in the British Museum.'

"Dr. George Kloss, in his accurate and valuable 'Bibliographie der Freimaurerei,' of 1844, is unable to do more than give the reference to Ahiman Rezon of A.D. 1756."

"We are, thanks be, able to set the matter at rest, by having the work itself in our Masonic Library, having purchased it in London during the latter part of 1867 from a second-hand bookseller, who had no idea of its worth, and was in ignorance of its character."

"It was bound up with another work, and hence its being overlooked by the bookseller. Brother Findel, editor of 'Die Banhütte,' has already acknowledged (in the pages of that Masonic Magazine) the importance of the discovery, and considers it to be the earliest printed work in the world that alludes to the Royal Arch Degree."

"The work is entitled, 'A Serious and Impartial Inquiry into the Cause of the Present Decay of Free Masonry in the Kingdom of Ireland,' dedicated 'To the Most Noble and Puissant Prince Truth.' Dublin: Printed by Edward Bate. MDCCLIV.' (8vo, pages 80.)"

"The work is mainly taken up with 'instructive remarks, which may be found useful to revive the honour of that ancient Craft,' and the 'Old and New Regulations of the London Constitutions (i.e., of A.D. 1723 and 1738), by the consent and approbation of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, dedicated to the Right Worshipful and Right Hon. the Lord Viscount Allen, Grand Master of this Kingdom,' are inserted. It will be seen that, owing to the fact of this work being issued in 1744, all doubts of the degree being known at that date are disposed of at once. Some have tried to prove that the Royal Arch was unknown before the eighth decade of the last century; but such attempts are weak indeed, and wholly absurd."

"Bro. Dr. John Pearson Bell, D.P.G.M. of N. and E. Yorkshire, has lately issued an admirable illustrative chart, depicting the purposes of Masonry from an early period, in which he dates the origin of the R.A. Degree in England at A.D. 1740."

"Dr. Robert Morris, Dr. Albert G. Mackay, and other well-known writers on the History of the Fraternity, concur as to this date; and Bro. William A. Laurie, Grand Secretary of Scotland, observes, 'That beyond a mere assertion, there is no evidence of any kind of its existence in this country (i.e., Scotland) previous to 1743' ('History of Freemasonry and the Grand Lodge of Scotland,' Second edition, A.D. 1859.) Whether the Degree was derived from Scotland originally, or from England, it is impossible to say. Certainly it was unknown in Ireland before A.D. 1740, and was planted there by the English ancient Masons."

"Scotland possesses the earliest Records of Royal Arch Masonry in the world, and, so far as we know, is entitled to be considered as the chief authority in ancient minutes relating to Masonry, whether as to their operative or speculative character."

"The probability is, that the Degree originated with the noted Chevalier Ramsay, of Ayr, and the 'Ancients.' But to return to D'Assigny's work. There are only two references to the Royal Arch, both of which we give in their entirety. The first is at page 16; in a note the author says:—

"I am informed in that city is held an assembly of Master Masons, under the title of Royal Arch Masons, who, as their qualifications and excellencies are superior to others, they receive a larger pay than working Masons."

"We have personally visited the City of York, and have carefully perused the whole of the Records of the ancient Grand Lodge formerly held there, but now extinct; but there is no evidence therein of any such arrangement as Dr. D'Assigny refers to, neither do the 'Fabric Rolls of York Minster' confirm it. The minutes of the Grand Lodge of York contain no reference to the Royal Arch whatever, until after A.D. 1765."

"The second reference to the Royal Arch is appended at page 32, and is the one quoted generally by Masonic writers, where it is printed in italics; the other part, and the former quotation, have never been inserted in any other known Masonic work of any date whatever.—

"As the landmarks of the constitution of Freemasonry are universally the same throughout all kingdoms, and are so well fixed that they will not admit of removal how comes it to pass that some have been led away with ridiculous innovations—an example of which I shall prove by a certain propagator of a false system some few years ago in this city, who imposed upon several very worthy men, under a pretence of being Master of the Royal Arch, which he asserted he had brought with him from the City of York; and that the beauties of the Craft did principally consist in the knowledge of this valuable piece of Masonry. However, he carried on this scheme for several months, and many of the learned and wise were his followers, till at length his fallacious art was discovered by a Brother of probity and wisdom, who had some small space before attained that excellent part of Masonry in London, and plainly proved that his doctrine was false, whereupon the Brethren justly despised him, and ordered him to be expelled from all benefits of the Craft; and although some of the fraternity have expressed an uncer-ness at this matter being kept a secret from them (since they had already passed through the usual degrees of probation), I cannot help being of opinion that they have no right to any such benefit until they make a proper application, and are received with due formality; and as it is an organised body of men who passed the chair, and given undeniable proofs of their skill in architecture, it cannot be treated with too much reverence, and more especially since the character of the present members of that particular Lodge are untainted, and their behaviour judicious and unexceptionable; so that there cannot be the least hinge to hang a doubt on, but that they are most excellent Masons.

"This concludes, at present, our researches as to the history of the Royal Arch Degree; and the importance of the subject is the only excuse we have to offer for the length of the communication.

"WILLIAM JAMES HUGHAN.

"Truro, Cornwall, July 18th, 1868."

"My own Philology," by A. TUDER. London: Trübner & Co., 60, Paternoster-row.

The object of this clever writer may be briefly gathered from the preface to his book, in which he states that "we look on the whole world as a book, the leaves of which may be torn and scattered hither and thither, but being still in existence, can be collected, joined together, and read; and perchance from that book we may yet learn to know ourselves and all things even as we are known." Upon this basis he has gathered together the various significations given to the same or similar words by different nations.

The following will be interesting to our chivalric brethren:—

"True" knights still exist in merry England, faithfully wearing the secret sign of Adam, though yet unknowing why, the Maltese cross, the 'White Cross,' so often questioned, of earlier date than modern Christianity, therefore unconnected with that! Shall we let the cross tell its own tale, for thereby hangs the tale of the goose. We have seen that in the Egyptian the word kea means goose, the pronunciation of the Greek letter χ , hieroglyph for Adam, the white swan, white goose, white χ , white cross; bearing Eve Anas's name, Melitta, or Malta, worn on the 'vest' told that the wearer was a good and true knight, or kén-ite, kén being the Greek word for goose and implicit obedience being a 'military duty,' when departing on an expedition, the leader gave no further order than 'Take up your cross and follow me,' and the knight, fastening the swan-white cross upon his breast, went forth silently with his chief 'to fight the good fight of faith.' But was the cross silent? Oh no! every time the knight cast his eyes upon it, it spoke out boldly and plainly, and the twenty-fourth letter of our own plain English alphabet can tell what it said, an X, 'annex.' And on went the wanderer Adam, followed by the created angelic host, turning the kén sword 'every way,' till he had gained dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every creeping thing, these being symbols of different nations, till he became King of kings and Lord of lords, the only ruler of princes."

Our author deduces as the result of his observations that—

"All nature bears the name of Adam, the ocean, Sinus and Oceanus. The billow that kisses the rocky shore bears the name of Unda, or the Egg, the child of earth and ocean, of water, and of the spirit. Un, one; Da, Father or God.

"All nature bears the name of Adam; if we call to our aid that unerring science, geology, deep in the rock of ages, hidden from all mortal eyes, we shall find the name of Adam; let us cleave the stony rock then, and lay open the secrets of eternity. We shall fix on the metamorphic system for our illustration, the 'clay'-slate group of 'aqueous' character, fine grained, argillaceous rock—glistening aspect—containing chialotile, a mineral occurring in long slender prisms, which cross and lie over each other in the mass of slate like the Greek letter χ —the name and symbol of Adam 'hidden' in the rock of ages."

There is much in this little work that will be found interesting to Masons, especially to those who believe that "Speculative Freemasonry comprehends the knowledge of the hidden order of the universe, and the secret things both of heaven and earth."

"The Masonic Monthly," April, 1869. Boston, Massachusetts, U.S.A.

This esteemed magazine is replete with articles of interest to the Masonic fraternity. Bro. Rob. Morris contributes to its pages "Pastoral Scenes in the Holy Land," as the result of that accomplished Mason's recent pilgrimage to the Orient. The position of negro brethren in the United States is fairly discussed on the principle of audi alteram partem. We may also note that the editor alludes to the opinion we expressed in the first number of THE FREEMASON, that the "Masonic Monthly" was "one of the best magazines published in America," and we feel great pleasure in reiterating that it is a very valuable organ of the Craft in that country.

"Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Canada."

We have been favoured by the Rev. Brother Bartlett, Grand Orator of Canada, with a copy of this interesting volume, and intend to cull from its pages statistical information of a very valuable nature in reference to the progress of the Royal Art in the new Dominion.

INTERESTING MASONIC NARRATIVE,

By a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, and a Master Mason, of Tynan Lodge, No. 601, Armagh, &c.

In the year 1815, when I was studying medicine in the University of Edinburgh, I was invited by a gentleman of that city to spend an evening at a Masonic meeting, of which he was the Master. He added, "that he expected we would have the pleasure of Mr. O'C's company," an Irish gentleman, to whom he appeared to be particularly attached.

Mr. O'C— arrived, and was received by the brethren with every manifestation of joy. The night was spent with all the happiness, festivity, and fraternal affection which so peculiarly characterize our ancient, honourable, and loyal body. No party feelings or petty animosities were there, but mutual and reciprocal love beaming on every countenance, and ennobling every sentiment and expression.

Mr. O'C—, an amiable minded, facetious man, about forty-nine years of age, was justly beloved and admired; he paid peculiar and marked attention to me, and before we parted, requested and received my promise, to dine the next day with him, at his lodgings, Princes-street. I went accordingly, and passed with him one of the happiest evenings of my life. He was quite an enthusiast in his love for Masonry; and in an ecstasy of delight, related to me the following history of his life:—

"I was born in the south of Ireland, and was from my earliest remembrance fond of Masonry, and consequently was initiated, at the prescribed age, into the sublime mysteries of the most exalted Orders of the Craft. I then prepared to emigrate to America, and received from my lodge documents and certificates necessary for my departure. About this time the Irish rebellion was spreading its baneful poison over the island, and I with thousands of my countrymen, was swept into the vortex of phrenzied enthusiasm which then prevailed, and stimulated to madness its unfortunate and deluded votaries. I was a few nights with a senseless multitude, who, like myself, knew nothing whatever of the cause, end, meaning, or nature of such meeting. Some papers were read, which I am certain the few who heard them did not understand. All was confusion, without order or regularity.

"Not many weeks elapsed, when, in the dead of the night, my father's house was surrounded by a troop of dragoons. I was made a prisoner, and conducted to the gaol of ——. In eight days I was tried. It was sufficient I was a United-Man, and had attended their meetings. This was proved; and hence it was inferred I had been aiding and abetting some burnings and outrages that had been recently committed in the neighbourhood. I did not deny I was present at their meetings, but of the latter charges was innocent. I was sentenced to death, and ordered for execution in three days. On my return from the court-house to the prison, I begged to speak a word to the captain of the guard who conducted me; I saw something in him I liked, I told him I was a Freemason; I showed him my papers, and stated to him the whole truth in a few sentences.

"He was touched with my misfortune, but remained silent. However, at our parting he cordially grasped my hand, and whispered in my ear, 'Brother, keep up your spirits; I have some interest and influence; I will do my best. I will visit you to-morrow.'

"Morning came, the day passed, and night coming on, but no appearance of him whom I now considered my only friend, my heart began to sink within me; however, at a late hour he arrived, having posted upwards of fifty miles from the time of our parting; but the settled calm of joy was on his countenance, as he announced to me the happy news that my sentence was commuted to seven years' transportation. He ordered me to make ready, as the guards were then preparing, and in a few hours I would be on my way to Dublin. We parted like brothers indeed; my heart was bursting with gratitude.

"I was a week sailing on my passage to New South Wales before I came to a serious reflection of my situation, or was awake to the sad reality of my state; the last few weeks appeared to me like a disturbed dream.

"On my arrival at Port Jackson I was allotted to a rich landed proprietor. After I had remained upwards of five years with him in his home-farm, he sent me, with eleven others, about twenty leagues into the country, with horses laden with the necessary implements, to mark out and ditch, where practicable, a large tract of land which he had purchased. We erected a hut, formed beds, and proceeded well, stretching far and wide, according to the map given us for our guide. We had crossed a river, and were cutting the boundary moorings over the most beautiful sloping hills I ever beheld, when a number of the Aboriginal inhabitants came forward, and used very threatening gestures towards us. They walked back to the river, and beckoned us to come also. They put down stakes of wood on the banks, and by their threats we understood plainly that they would attack us if we attempted to cut, or dig, or even go over the river. One of the servants, a free man, and our superintendant there, rode off to his master to know what should be done, and the next day returned with orders to proceed over the river to the very extent of the maps and plans. The next day, while we were engaged in marking forward, a whole host of them attacked us with clubs and stones, and would have murdered us, only one of our men snatched a fowling piece and shot the ringleader dead on the spot. We retired to our little hut, which was so far removed from the river on our own side, that we thought ourselves secure; but in the dead of night we were alarmed by the hut being on fire, and one of our men running out, was killed by a blow; a second and a third rushing from the flames met the same fate. I stood in the door like a statue, my mind for a minute gliding over the past, present, and future; and petrified with horror, in an agony of despair, while the flames were raging on every side, and the roof falling in masses of burning ruins, I accidentally, as if by instinct, made the last solemn appeal, the dernier resort of a Freemason, when a tall figure sprang forward, and clasping me in his arms, pulled me from the spot where I stood, and which was that moment falling down and would have destroyed me, exclaiming in good English, 'Fear nothing, Brother, you are safe,' and he cried out to save all the lives they could. Five only of us were living. The next morning, after erecting a hut for the four, they took me with them.

"I rode on a quiet horse for many a long mile, through the most lovely and fertile country that the sun in his course ever shone on. I could relate to you, my dear friend, many entertaining and interesting stories of the funeral of the chief who was shot by one of our party, of their manner of living; and as I stayed a whole year with them, I was present at their marriages, and many other amusing ceremonies. In the course of our private conversations, my deliverer and Brother told me he was a native of Scotland, that he had been mate of a merchant ship, which was wrecked about a year before that; he and two of the crew were cast on the shore about fifty leagues from where we were; that the others had died; and by his behaviour towards the Aborigines, and by teaching them many useful arts, he had gained their confidence, and even affection.

"However, as my time was now almost expired, my friend, my dear friend, who is still living, advised me to go and claim my freedom, and a free passage home to the mother country, and also to have him released, if possible.

"I went to Port Jackson, and claimed my freedom; and at the same time mentioned that a native of Scotland, who had been shipwrecked, was a prisoner where I had been detained so long, and if I had a guard I would release him. This was granted; but I thought better to go alone. He and I concerted measures, and set off at night, and arrived at the city before the fleet had sailed. The governor kindly ordered him a passage; and in a few weeks we were landed safely in Liverpool.

"I came to the home of my fathers, my friend accompanying me. The scenes of my youth presented themselves to my mind; every hill and valley appeared in idea loaded with charms;—but, when I arrived, alas! how altered; my father and mother dead—my brothers and sisters either dead, or gone to other countries. Scarcely a friend there; it was an afflicting scene; it was to me a wilderness! My friend perceived my distress, and hurried me away. We then visited his country, in the town where I now have my establishment. My friend was well connected. We became acquainted with a relation of his, a merchant, who had two daughters, and in a short time they became our wives; and thanks be to the great Disposer of all things, we enjoy, I may say, every comfort and happiness which this world can give. My friend and I often, when we talk over the past together, regret that Masonry is not more general over the earth, as it would be a bond of affection and love to mankind. It brings to my recollection a stanza from the pen, and from the heart, of that Bard who was to 'Masonry and Scotia dear,'

"If in the vale of savage life,
The victim sad of fortune's strife,
I through the tender gushing tear
Should recognize a Master's ear;
If friendless low, we meet together,
Then, Sir, your hand, my Friend and Brother."

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Lodge of Joppa, No. 188.—The brethren of this lodge met on Monday last at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street. The W.M., Bro. C. Ralph, having taken the chair, Mr. T. Payne was balloted for and duly initiated. Bro. Henri Hartog having answered the usual questions in a satisfactory manner retired, and on his re-admission was passed to the degree of a Fellow Craft. The lodge was then closed until October next. The brethren then adjourned to the large banquetting room, where a very sumptuous banquet was served. Bro. Jennings, the excellent manager to the London Tavern and Albion Company, Limited, assisted by Bro. Keeping, were assiduous in their attendance on the visitors and brethren. After the toasts of "The Queen," "The Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M. of the Grand Lodge of England," and "The Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon," and other toasts, were given, the W.M., with his usual eloquence, proposed "The Health of the Visitors," who were Bros. Littaur, P.M., 205; Harfeld, P.M., 185; Garner, 144; Wolfe, 185; Cordwell, W.M., 3; and F. Binckes, P.M., 60, Secretary to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys. Bro. Binckes, in responding for the visitors, thanked the lodge for the hospitality shown himself and the visiting brethren present, and was very pleased with the reception they had met with. He stated that he could not forget how charitable the Masonic fraternity were on the occasion of the last festival in aid of the Boys' School—how nobly the brethren had subscribed; and hoped the large sum of £9,000, that they were still in debt, would be speedily liquidated; and he would like to see influential lodges, like the Lodge of Joppa, contributing their share for the liquidation of that debt. The brethren had a great musical treat provided by the W.M., under the able arrangement of the organist of the lodge, Bro. P. E. Van Noorden, who composed two new songs, sang by Mad. Monserrat and Miss Nuir, that were loudly applauded; as also were Miss Barley and Master F. Solomon (grandson of one of the members of the lodge), who has a very pretty voice. The brethren then separated.

PROVINCIAL.

CHESTERFIELD.—Scarsdale Lodge, No. 681.—The regular meeting of this lodge was held in the Masonic Hall, Chesterfield, on Thursday se'nnight, and was attended by an average number of the brethren. The W.M., Bro. S. Foulds, appointed Bro. R. P. Jeffreys I.G., in the place of Bro. Stevens, who resigned that office on leaving the town. The death of Bro. Sheldon (the oldest Freemason in Derbyshire) had rendered vacant the office of Tyler to the lodge, and the subject was now brought forward for discussion. There not being a Freemason in the town willing to undertake the duties of the office, it became necessary to appoint a serving brother, and on the proposition of Bro. Shipton, seconded by Bro. Osborne, Mr. H. Smith, clerk, was unanimously selected, and the secretary was requested to apply to P.G.L. for the necessary authority to initiate him for that purpose. During refreshments after lodge hours a very interesting ceremony was performed by the W.M. in the presentation of a Treasurer's jewel to Bro. J. H. Ramsden, in recognition of his long and valuable services in that capacity. The W.M. referred to those services in appropriate and eulogistic language, thanking Bro. Ramsden in the name of the lodge, and hoping that he might live long to fill the office he graced so well. He begged his acceptance of the jewel, not as a reward for those services, but as a testimony of their appreciation by his brethren in Masonry. The jewel was accompanied by a purse of twenty sovereigns, not solely the subscriptions of brother Masons, but of other friends who wished to pay a compliment to Bro. Ramsden on his retirement from public life. The remarks of the W.M. were supplemented by Bros. Osborne and Shipton. Brother Ramsden responded, assuring the brethren that so long as life and memory lasted he should value the gift as the spontaneous and unanimous feeling of the brethren towards him, and should always look upon it with unbounded feelings of gratification, for while he was conscious of having performed the duties required of him to the best of his ability, it would also assure him that in that respect he had not been altogether unsuccessful.

KENT.—Cornwallis Lodge, No. 1107.—This lodge met on Wednesday, the 2nd instant, at the Belvedere Tavern, Belvedere, Kent. Bro. T. Wescombe, W.M., in the chair. The lodge was opened in due form with solemn prayer; the minutes of the preceding meeting were read and confirmed; and after the usual formula Bros. Hind, Smith, and Harrison were duly raised to the sublime degree of M.M. This being the night for electing the W.M., Treasurer, and Tyler for the ensuing year, a ballot was taken resulting in the unanimous election of Bro. Sutton, as W.M. For the office of Treasurer the ballot proved equally in favour of Bros. Wyatt and Harvey, upon which the W.M. selected Bro. Wyatt for the honour. Bro. Blofield being a candidate for the Tylership, it was put to the lodge and carried in his favour. Bro. J. A. Cameron was elected a joining member; and all Masonic business being ended the lodge was closed in due form, the brethren partook of refreshment, and parted in harmony.

MANCHESTER.—De Grey and Ripon Lodge, No. 1161.—The anniversary festival and installation of the Worshipful Master of this lodge was held last Wednesday, about seventy brethren assembled at the lodge to do honour to the new W.M., Bro. Wm. Geo. Turner, who had been unanimously elected to fill the chair for the ensuing year. Amongst whom were several brethren of eminent brethren of eminent rank in the province, Bros. Dr. Lea, P.P.G.S.W.; J. L. Figgins, P.P.G.C.; Goldthorpe, P.G.O.; Croxton, P.G.J.D.; Baldwin P.G.S.B., Cheshire, &c. At the three o'clock, Bro. Wm. Wayne commenced to instal his successor, in the performance of which ceremony we fully believe he has never been surpassed by any brother in the district. The quiet dignity with which every charge was delivered betokened careful study, producing a self-confidence that excited the admiration of all present, at five o'clock the brethren adjourned to the Ardwick Town Hall, where covers were laid for eighty. After the cloth was drawn, the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, Bro. Wayne gave the toast of the "Worshipful Master," expressing the highest compliments on his general character, and the unbounded confidence he felt that the choice the brethren had made was not only fairly earned, but would be productive of continued success to the lodge. Bro. W. G. Turner responded in an excellent speech, at the close of which he gave "The health of the Immediate P.M., Bro. Wayne," whose knowledge and deep studies of Masoury had culminated in the performance of a ceremony that day it would be impossible for any to excel. The satisfaction of the brethren at the very excellent way in which Bro. Wayne had discharged his duties of Worshipful Master, was expressed through him by their wish that he should on this occasion place upon his breast a gold Past Master's jewel, accompanied as it was with their prayers that he may be spared many years to wear it on his heart, to mark in a humble way how he lived in their's. Bro. Wayne who was deeply affected expressed his thankfulness to the brethren for their many kindnesses to him, and more especially for this last beautiful present. Bro. Bidder gave the "Visiting Brethren," recalling to mind the many virtues and exalted rank of those present as visitors on this occasion, in his usual vivacious and spirited manner, which was responded to by several of the provincial officers present wishing that continued prosperity to the "De Grey and Ripon," which had so eminently distinguished it, outstripping in numbers every lodge in the province for the time it had been established. Several other toasts followed, interspersed with glees and songs which were ably rendered by a glee party of brethren from Blackburn, Bro. R. Seed, P.M., presided at the pianoforte, in his usual brilliant manner.

IRELAND.

BELFAST.—Lodge of Harmony, No. 3.—Regular communication of this lodge was held on Thursday evening, 3rd inst., in the Masonic Rooms, Donegall-place, Bro. W. Martin, P.M., occupying the chair. The lodge was opened on the E.A. degree, and afterwards raised to the M.M. Bro. C. T. Watt, who had with great credit proved himself proficient in his former degrees, received in a most solemn and impressive manner the M.M. degree from Bros. Hill, P.M., 3, and Bro. Kelly, P.M. 109. The working of the M.M. degree, and rendering of the ritual by the two Bros. before mentioned could not be surpassed. This very old lodge is noted by all other lodges as being the first in Belfast at giving degrees, and as a rule is largely visited by members of all lodges for instruction. The lodge was afterwards closed in usual form, after the benediction hymn being sung. The members afterwards sat down to a well-covered refreshment board. The usual Masonic and loyal toasts having been honoured, and a few songs, &c., given, all separated after enjoying a pleasant evening.

Temple Lodge, No. 51, had its regular lodge meeting in the Masonic Rooms, Donegall-place, on Wednesday evening, 2nd inst., Bro Jno. W. White-side, presiding. The lodge was opened on the E.A. degree, after which the installation of officers was proceeded with. After the transaction of the usual business, the lodge having been closed, the brethren adjourned to the refreshment board, and after spending a pleasant hour separated in peace, love, and harmony.

Alfred's Masonic Lodge, No. 59.—The regular communication of this lodge was held on Tuesday evening, 1st inst., in the Masonic Rooms, Donegall-place. In the absence of the W.M., Bro. Clarke, the chair was occupied by P.M. Bro. C. Todd. The lodge was opened on the E.A. degree, and after the transaction of the usual lodge business, hearing report read by the auditors for the past six months, the installation of officers for the ensuing six months was proceeded with; after which Mr. John Thompson, who had been regularly proposed, &c., and being present received the degree of E.A., upon which the lodge was working. The lodge was then closed in due form. The brethren afterward adjourned to the refreshment board, where a delightful evening was passed.

Hiram's Lodge, No. 97.—The regular monthly meeting was held in the Masonic Rooms, Donegall-place. In the absence of the W.M., Bro. McKenna, the chair was occupied by P.M. Bro. Getston, of Lodge No. 22. The lodge was opened on the E.A. degree, and afterwards passed to the F.C. Mr. Wm. Elliott Roberts received the F.C. from P.M. Bro. Freeman. The brethren agreed to dine in the lodge rooms on St. John's Day, 24th inst. The installation was afterwards proceeded with, and lodge closed in ancient custom. A very social and pleasant hour was spent at the refreshment board after the business was over.

Friendly Brother's Lodge, No. 609.—The members of this lodge met in their lodge rooms, (Bro. Weis's), Davis-street, on Monday evening, 31st May, being the regular night of meeting, and no very important business before the lodge, the election of officers for the ensuing six months was proceeded with. The following brethren were elected to fill the different chairs, &c.:—Bros. Jas. Alcorn, W.M.; Jas. Keown, S.W.; Adam Fetherstonhaugh, J.W.; James Wood, Sec.; G. W. Banks, Treas.; Parker, I.G.; Bunting, S.D.; Parke, J.D. The lodge was closed in ancient form, and the brethren retired to the refreshment board, when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts having been proposed and responded to, the brethren separated at an early hour.

THE ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

Belgrave Chapter, No. 749.—A convocation of this Chapter was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on Friday, June 4th. Present:—Comp. H. Garrod, M.E.Z., in the chair; Comps. J. G. Bond, H.; H. Johnson, J.; W. Bourne, S.E.; G. Pymm, S.V.; G. W. Porter, P.S.; H. Finch, A.S.; H. Crabtree, A.S.; and the following Companions, Comps. W. Ough, G.P., P.Z.; W. Watson, P.G.S.; J. Coates, E. Harper, S. Homewood, R. W. Hunt, J. James, H. Jennings, W. Johnson, G. Knight, E. W. Mackney, W. E. Mackrill, T. Potter, J. Stewart, C. Tuckett, R. N. Welchman, J. Zachsdorf and the following were present:—Comps. T. W. J. Goldsbrough, P.Z.; J. Nunn, G.D.C.; J. Smith, P.G.D.C.; E. Blackburn, and E. Randall. The Chapter having been opened in due form, an amendment to the Bye-laws was proposed by Comp. H. Johnson, J., to alter the days of meeting to the last Friday in February, June, and October; which was carried unanimously. The election of principals having been made at the last convocation, the installation was proceeded with; and Comp. J. G. Bond was duly installed M.E.Z., by Comp. W. Watson, P.G.S., assisted by Comp. Ough, P.Z., and Comp. Goldsbrough, P.Z. Comp. H. Johnson was installed H.; and Comp. W. Bourne J. Comp. H. Garrod, P.Z. was appointed S.E. Comp. G. Pymm, S.N.; G. W. Porter, P.S.; H. Finch, A.S., and H. Crabtree, A.S., were re-appointed. There being no other business, the Chapter was closed in solemn form; and the Companions adjourned to refreshment, when an excellent banquet was provided. Comp. J. G. Bond, M.E.Z., in the chair. The usual toasts having been responded to, the M.E.Z. took the opportunity of presenting Comp. Garrod with a P.Z. jewel, complimenting him in a short speech, upon the able manner in which he had performed the duties of M.E.Z. during the past year. Comp. Goldsbrough, (P.Z., 185), returned thanks for the visitors; and it need hardly be said that, with Comp. E. W. Mackney present, some excellent songs were sung, Comp. J. G. Bond, M.E.Z., G. Pymm, S.N., and others lending their aid towards the harmony of the evening.

Rose of Denmark Chapter, No. 975.—A quarterly convocation of this Chapter was held at the Star and Garter Hotel, Kew Bridge, on Saturday, the 5th inst. The M.E.Z., Comp. A. A. Pendlebury, presided, and was supported by Comps. W. F. Smith, H.; G. Powell, J.; R. W. Little, P.Z.E.; H. G. Buss, P.Z. Treas.; J. Brett, W. H. Hubbard and J. Terry, P.Z.'s; W. Dodd and R. Gurney, Sojourners; Quilty, C.S.; and many other Comps. For the first time in the history of the chapter, there were no candidates, the five brethren on the agenda paper being unable to attend. The Comps. therefore enjoyed a stroll through Kew Gardens and surrounding beautiful neighbourhood, and returned to dinner at the hotel, where Comp. Banks, as usual, gave the utmost satisfaction, by his admirable cuisine and wines.

Victoria Chapter, No. 1056.—A meeting of this Chapter was held at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, on Monday, the 7th inst., and was moderately attended. Comp. G. H. Oliver, was elected M.E.Z.; E. Clark, H.; W. Long, J.; A. A. Pendlebury, P.Z., E.; J. Brett, P.Z., Treas.; E. Gottheil, N.; J. Forsyth, P.S. A P.Z.'s jewel was unanimously awarded to Comp. Hosgood, the retiring M.E.Z. We regret to observe that Comp. Pendlebury, the esteemed Scribe, was unable to attend through illness.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

RED CROSS OF ROME & CONSTANTINE.

FOREIGN.

NEW BRUNSWICK.—The McLeod-Moore Conclave, No. 13, of the Imperial, Ecclesiastical and Military Order of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, the Invincible Order of K.H.S., and the Holy Order of St. John, under warrant of authority from Lord Kenlis, Grand Sovereign of the Order in England, assembled at their rooms in Ritchie's Building yesterday, when the Conclave was in due and ancient form constituted and dedicated. The following Sir Knights were duly installed and invested, viz:—Robert Marshall, Sovereign; Thos. A. D. Forster, Viceroy; R. W. Crookshank, Sen. General; Joseph C. Hatheway, Jun. General; Wm. Donald, D.D., High Priest; C. Upham Hanford, Recorder; D. R. Munro, Treasurer; Edward Willis, Prefect; Robert Shires, Standard Bearer; S. F. Matthews, Herald; Wm. Runciman, Sentinel. This Order, under the directory of Lord Kenlis and the other distinguished members who compose the Grand Senate, is making rapid progress in Great Britain. We are pleased to learn that our friend Sir Knt. Robert Marshall has been honoured by Lord Kenlis with the appointment of Inspector General for the Province of New Brunswick, and we understand that Col. W. B. McLeod Moore, has been appointed Chief Inspector General for the Dominion of Canada, with power to appoint Inspectors General for the other Provinces in the Dominion.—Telegraph, St. John, May 22.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

FOREIGN.

ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK.—We understand that the members of "The Union De Molay Encampment and Priory, under the Registry of the Religious and Military Order of Masonic Knights Templar in England and Wales and the Colonial Dependencies of the British Crown," held a very interesting assembly in their Armory, yesterday afternoon. It will be a matter of special gratification to the members of the Chivalric Order, to learn that the equipment of this Encampment and Priory (supplied by Knight Companion George Kenning, Little Britain, London) is now not second to that of any other Encampment within the whole Dominion of Canada; and the energy and zeal of its members warrant us in anticipating a bright and prosperous future for the new Conclave. In connection with this we might observe that it would be a source of congratulation to the general body of the fraternity in the City, in fact the Province, were the members to unite and build themselves a structure suitable to their wants, as is done in other places; for it is a matter of remark that the rooms now occupied by the Craft are too small and but ill adapted to the wants of this growing Order. Would it not be well for the Grand Lodge to move in the matter?—Morning Telegraph, St. John, N.B., May 22.

GRAND LODGE OF IRELAND.—We regret to have to announce that, through increasing debility of health, the present estimable Deputy Grand Master, Sir Edward Richard Borough, Bart., D.L.J.P., has placed his resignation of that honourable office in the hands of the M.W. the Grand Master. We believe that His Grace the Duke of Leinster will appoint Bro. Robert William Shekleton, barrister-at-law, P.M., 141, Dublin, as his successor; and that, also, the appointment will give general satisfaction throughout the Order. Bro. Shekleton has proved how well fitted he is for the position, by the admirable manner in which he has discharged the duties of Captain-General of the Grand Conclave of High Knights Templar, as well as the onerous post of secretary to one of the largest and most influential Craft lodges in Dublin.

MARK MASONRY.—The St. Andrew's Lodge of Mark Master Masons being the first of the kind held in Southampton under the Mark Grand Lodge of England, was constituted on Friday, the 28th ult. The Very Worshipful Grand Secretary, Bro. Fred. Binckes, presided, and Bro. J. Rankin Stebbing, Grand Treasurer, was installed W. Master; Bro. Fred. Perkins (the Worshipful the Mayor), Senior Warden; and Captain Abraham, Junior Warden and Treasurer. About sixteen brethren were advanced to this interesting degree, and the several offices filled by brethren who are likely to take a strong interest in Mark Masonry. We understand it is twenty-five years since a similar lodge was held in this town, which was then presided over by Bro. Geo. Stebbing, of Portsmouth, the present Master's father.

MASONIC FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL, DUBLIN.

The monthly meeting of the governors of this admirable institution was held last week, in their board-room, at the Orphanage, Burlington-road, for the election of four pupils. A large number of the brethren assembled to breakfast, after which they met in the board room to proceed with the transaction of business. There were eight candidates—all of a deserving character—for the four vacancies. After a scrutiny of the voting papers, the following girls were declared elected:—

1. 850 Votes—Knight, Margaret; born at Dublin, 1858; daughter of Henry Knight, Law and General Agent, who joined Lodge 500, Dublin, in May, 1858; and was one of the founders of Lodge 120, in 1851, of which lodge he was Past Master and Secretary; he was also a member of R.A.C., 120, and the Palestine Encampment of H.K.T. He died 1868, of heart disease, leaving a wife and eight children wholly unprovided for.

2. 689 Votes—M'Nally, Kate; born at Belfast, 1858; daughter of James M'Nally, stationer. Bro. M'Nally joined Lodge 59, Belfast, 1854, and subsequently No. 22, Belfast, of which he continued a subscribing member up to the time of his death, which took place in 1864, leaving a widow and four daughters, without any provision except a few pounds realised by the sale of his effects.

3. 684 Votes—Williams, Elizabeth, daughter of John Williams, of Tralee, County Kerry, and Hamilton, Upper Canada.

4. 662 Votes—Burdge, Charlotte, daughter of John Burdge, master mariner, of Galway.

The voting on the whole list was as follows:—

662, Burdge, Charlotte; 229, Copeland, Anna; 197, Goff, Emily; 850, Knight, Margaret; 689, M'Nally, Kate; 320, Maxwell, Margaret; 642, Orr, Mary; 684, Williams, Elizabeth.

The unsuccessful candidates were equally deserving, and it is to be regretted that they could not be admitted. It is to be hoped that increased exertions on the part of the governors, and aid from the brethren of Ireland, will largely increase the utility of this most valuable institution.

The election for admission into the Masonic Orphan Boys' School will be held in September next.

"ARE YOU A MASON?"

[The Rev. Bro. Magill, Rector of St. Paul's church, Peru, Illinois, being asked the above question by a lady, responded as follows.]

I am of a band
Who will faithfully stand
In the bonds of affection and love;
Once, wretched and poor,
I knocked at the door,
And there for admission I strove.

By the help of a friend
Who assistance did lend,
I succeeded an entrance to gain;
Was received in the West,
By command from the East,
But not without feeling some pain.

Here my conscience was taught
With a moral quite fraught
With sentiments holy and true;
Then onward I travelled
To have it unravelled
What Hiram intended to do.

Very soon to the East
I made known my request,
And "Light," by command did attend;
When, lo! I perceived
In due form revealed—
A Master, and Brother, and Friend.

Thus far I have stated,
And simply related
What happened when I was made free;
But I have "passed" since then,
And was "raised" up again
To a sublime and ancient degree.

Then onward I marched,
That I might soon be "Arched,"
And find out the treasures long lost;
When, behold! a bright flame
From the midst of which came
A voice which my ears did accost.

Through the "vails" I then went,
And succeeded at length
The "Sanctum Sanctorum" to find;
By the "Signet" I gained
And quickly obtained
Employment which suited my mind.

In the depths I then wrought
And most cheerfully sought
For treasure long hidden there;
And by labour and toil
I discovered rich spoil
Which are kept by the Craft with due care.

Having thus far arrived,
I further contrived
Among valiant Knights to appear;
And as Pilgrim and Knight
I stood ready to fight,
Nor Saracen foe did I fear.

For the widow distressed
There's a chord in my breast;
For the orphan and helpless I feel;
And my sword I could draw
To maintain the pure law
Which the duty of Masons reveal.

Thus have I revealed
(Yet wisely concealed)
What the "Free and Accepted" well know.
I am one of the band
Who will faithfully stand
By a Brother, wherever I go.

At the Philharmonic Hall, Islington, a complimentary benefit was given to Bro. S. Adams on the 7th instant, under the management of a committee consisting of Bros. T. Beard, F. Trotman, Alexander Levy, G. Turnham, W. Sanders, F. Strange, Winder, &c. The programme was very attractive and consisted of the following artistes, viz., Misses Annie Adams, and Louie Sherrington, who sang charmingly and were loudly applauded; Messrs. Vance, Arthur Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Brian, St. Albyn, MacLagan, Harry and Katy, Nellie Power, &c. The Hall was crowded in every part. Bro. Adams was loudly called for, and on his making his appearance, the audience rose en masse, to give him a hearty welcome. He said he appeared before them with great diffidence, as he had occasion to appear before them on Whit Monday last, he could but reiterate those expressions of gratitude to his kind friends Messrs. Trotman, Alexander Levy, and the committee of management, who had so nobly supported him, and while he occupied that proud position he would do all in his power to render the hall attractive, that his patrons should have the best entertainment that money could procure. At the conclusion of his speech he was loudly applauded. A numerous assemblage of brethren were present to give Bro. Adams a hearty reception, viz., Bros. W. Holland, L. Lyons, F. Villiers, L. Drew, Sanders, Winder, F. Strange, Harfeld, MacNamara, &c.

SPURIOUS MASONIC BODIES.

IN No. 4 of THE FREEMASON we expressed our opinions in strong, but, we conceive, justifiable language, with reference to the spurious body designated the "Rite of Memphis," and we then stated that those impostors claimed to be allied to the Supreme Council of the 33rd degree at Turin. From information which has since reached us through the medium of the Illust. Bro. Albert G. Goodall, 33°, of New York, we learn that England is not the only country in which spurious Masons have obtained a footing; and, we observe further, that the alleged misconduct of the Italian Supreme Council in recognizing an illegal son on English soil, is not a solitary attempt on the part of foreign jurisdictions to interfere with the rights of regularly established Grand Lodges. The statements of Bro. Goodall allude more particularly to the so-called "Supreme Council of Louisiana," the organization of which is a positive infraction of the laws under which the Ancient and Accepted Rite is governed.

A brief summary of its history is necessary in order that English Masons may thoroughly understand the situation, and offer their sympathy to our American brethren in their manly determination not to submit to foreign domination in a matter which concerns their own domestic Masonic jurisdictions. The following extract from the official report of the two Supreme Councils in the United States, fully explains the origin of the pseudo-Council of Louisiana:—

"In the year 1839 a body, claiming to be a Supreme Council for the State of Louisiana, was unlawfully established at New Orleans, and continued to exist until the 17th day of February, 1855, when, by a Concordat on that day effected, it submitted to the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, as the Supreme Authority of the Rite in all that Jurisdiction, including the State of Louisiana, and its members became members of the Grand Consistory of Louisiana under the obedience of the Supreme Council at Charleston; and two of them, afterwards, became members of that Supreme Council.

"After the surrender of its powers by the body claiming to be a Supreme Council for the State of Louisiana, Jacques Foulhouz, once a member of that body, but who had retired from it before the effecting of the said Concordat, associated with himself two or three others, who claimed to be 33rds, and set up a body, which he styled, 'The Supreme Council of the 3rd Degree for the Free, Sovereign, and Independent State of Louisiana.' That State had always been within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction, the necessary consequence of which was that the body so established was not only illegal and illegitimate, but spurious. Mons. Jacques Foulhouz received his 33d degree from the Grand Orient of France, which then was and still is in alliance with both our Supreme Councils, our Ill. Bro. Albert G. Mackey, Sec. Gen. H. E., being its Grand Representative and Garant d'amitie near that for the Southern Jurisdiction. Consequently, on the 4th of August, 1855, the Grand Orient of France addressed itself to the said Jacques Foulhouz, apprising him of his alliance with that Supreme Council, and its recognition of it 'as the Supreme Constituting and Governing Authority of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States'; and claiming his allegiance, sworn to itself, it invited him to dissolve immediately the organization which he had formed, on pain of its condemnation, and forfeiture of his rank as an Inspector General.

"The said Foulhouz, refusing to obey, was by the Grand Orient formally divested of his rank and character of Inspector-General, and the body created by him declared illegitimate.

"Nevertheless, the said body, though thus denounced, condemned as spurious by both our Supreme Councils, and acknowledged by no lawful Masonic power in the world, continued to exist, and still continues to maintain a precarious and unlawful being, under the presidency of M. Eugene Chassaingnac. From the beginning it violated the Masonic Common Law of the United States, by establishing and chartering lodges of Master Masons within the jurisdiction of the M. W. Grand Lodge of the State of Louisiana, and was therefore denounced by that sovereign body; and all the temples of symbolic Masonry in the United States were closed against all who pretended to be Master Masons, were members of the illegitimate lodges created by the said spurious Supreme Council."

"If the Grand Orient should think fit to persist in its recognition of the spurious body in question, it will in fact divest itself of its Masonic character, by an alliance with a spurious body of expelled Master Masons, and by recognizing its subordinates to receive those who have been denounced as clandestine Masons by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and whose organization is pronounced spurious by both of our Supreme Councils, and by those of South America; and it will in that case, find all the Grand Lodges of the United States making common cause with the Grand Lodge of Louisiana."

A perusal of this document will convince our readers of the indefensible line of conduct pursued by the Grand Orient of France in supporting a spurious body of expelled Masons. There is also another view of the case, to which we invite special attention. The soi-disant Grand Council of Louisiana assumes the power of chartering symbolic lodges and making Masons—pretensions which would be unwarrantable even if the council were a legally organised body of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. In England, the brethren who compose the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree would never dream of invading the rights and privileges of Grand Lodge, by an assertion of jurisdiction over Craft lodges, and, moreover, if they attempted such an assumption, they would simply be committing moral suicide. It behoves us, however, to watch with care the development of those Masonic bodies which trench upon the legal status of our Grand Lodges, by claiming the Craft degrees as part and parcel of their system of grades.

In pronouncing this warning, we desire, however, to distinctly disclaim antagonism to any established rite, or governing body, in Freemasonry, by which the just supremacy of every

Grand Lodge over the three degrees within its own jurisdiction is acknowledged and respected. We must, therefore, join our American brethren in protesting against the recognition, by the Grand Orient of France, of the preposterous pretensions of the Grand Council of Louisiana, and we feel assured that when the true facts of the case are made known to General Mellinet, the Grand Master of France, that illustrious brother will see the necessity of withdrawing all countenance and support from such a clandestine and illegal organization.

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

The Stuarts and Freemasonry.—It is well known that Prince Charles Edward Stuart was installed Grand Master of the Order of the Temple, at Holyrood, in 1745, and that Earl Mar held the dignity in 1715. I am inclined to credit the traditions and documents of Freemasonry, which attribute a much earlier connection than this between the two Orders; but the following extract from Notes and Queries of last week will interest many of your readers.—JOHN YARKER, Manchester.

"I may add that the original warrant of the Derbyshire Lodge of Ancient Freemasons, whose head quarters are at Longnor, was signed by Charles Edward, as Grand Master, while at Derby, in 1745. JOHN SLEIGH.

"Thornbridge, Bakewell."

Old Masonic Jug.—The following piece, torn from a recent newspaper, fell into my hands to-day (Saturday, June 5). Is any of your readers aware to what "catalogue" the extract refers, and what are the Masonic symbols mentioned?—JOHN YARKER.

"A large tyg, or wassail cup, with three handles, is inscribed in raised letters with the maker's name, Richard Meir, Burslem, who flourished about 1500. Smaller cups of the same date have also raised letters, and some have grotesque faces or figures in relief at the base of the handle and beneath the neck. A puzzle jug of red earth, with Masonic symbols in pierced work, is supposed to have been made for a lodge of Masons about the year 1600. The butter trade, and how cheating was prevented in the 17th century, are shown by an earthenware pot perhaps eighteen inches deep, and a quotation from Dr. Plot in the catalogue. Writing in 1686, the doctor said:—"The butter they buy by the pot, of a long cylindrical form, made at Burslem in this county, of a certain size, so as not to weigh above six pounds at most, and yet to contain at least fourteen pounds of butter, according to an Act of Parliament made about fourteen or sixteen years ago, for regulating the abuses of this trade in the make of pots and false packing of the butter, which before was sometimes layed good for a little depth at top and bad at the bottom; and sometimes set in rolls only touching at the top, and standing hollow below at a great distance from the sides of the pot. To prevent these little Moorlandish cheats (than whom no people whatever are esteemed more subtle), the factors keep a surveyor all the summer here, who, if he have ground to suspect any of the pots, tries them with an instrument of iron, made like a cheese-taster, only much larger and longer, called an auger or butter boare with which he makes proof, thrusting it obliquely to the bottom of the pot."

Bro. James Clarke.—In the year 1787, Bro. James Clarke, a land surveyor at Penrith, in Cumberland, published "A Survey of the Lakes of Cumberland, Westmorland, and Lancashire; together with an Account, Historical, Topographical, and Descriptive, of the adjacent Country. To which is added a Sketch of the Border Laws and Customs." It is a folio volume of 194 pages, and contains the following Masonic dedication: "To His Royal Highness Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland and Strathern, Earl of Dublin, Ranger of Windsor Great Park, Admiral of the Blue Squadron, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, Grand Master, &c., &c., &c.; the Right Honourable Thomas Howard, Earl of Effingham, Lord Howard, Acting Grand Master; Sir Peter Parker, Bart., Deputy Grand Master; the Grand Wardens, Past and Present Grand Officers of the Grand Lodge of England, and Brethren of the Most Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons: this Book is humbly Dedicated, by their most obedient Brother and Servant, James Clarke." I will be glad to receive any further particulars relating to Bro. James Clarke either as a man or a Mason.—GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDDELL.

At the Rose Show at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last, the first prize was awarded to Bro. W. S. Dobson, of St. James' street, for his beautiful designs in glass for ornamental flower stands for the table. The flowers were very beautiful, and were supplied by Mr. J. Dickson, of the Centre Avenue, Covent Garden. Bros. Bertram and Roberts, the well known caterers to the Crystal Palace, exhibited a table magnificently laid out with fruit and flowers, suitable for a dinner a la Russe; it was labelled "Not for competition," and reflected great credit on their exquisite taste. It was one of the great attractions of the day.

UNIFORMITY OF RITUAL AND CEREMONY.
(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It must be a matter of congratulation to all lovers of Masonry pure and undefiled, to see the interest you are taking in the question of uniformity, for it has long been a subject of regret to those who boast that Masonry is spread over the globe, and that we are able to recognise a Continental or American Mason when we meet him in company as readily as a Bro. of our own Lodge, to find that even in Lodges in one town there is such a marked diversity in the ceremonies, and such variations in the ritual. Though this state of things is lamentable it is not to be wondered at; our forms and ceremonies having been handed down by tradition, like all else human, reliable to change. The imperfect recollection of one good man may lead to very serious errors, and there is no better mode of correcting them than a conference of bright skilled Past Masters; the suggestion of uniformity in your last impression is good, but I would venture to push it a little further, for though I do not go quite to the length that he does as to the divergence of work in the Scotch Lodges, there is quite enough there, and also in Ireland, as well as in England and Wales, to call for immediate steps to remedy it.

I would therefore suggest that when the Grand Lodge shall sanction a Conference for this purpose, they should invite the sister Grand Lodges to co-operate with them in this noble work, and thus make it a truly Masonic revision.

We must not, as English Masons, think that we possess all the light, and that which shone at Kilwinning centuries ago has been quite obscured by the mist of ages. It has been my good fortune to listen to what I humbly conceive to be pure Masonry, and to see impressive ceremonies very effectively rendered in the land of Burns, and this revision to be effective, should have light from every source from which it is attainable.

As a member of lodges in England and Scotland, and as a Companion under both English and Scotch Constitutions, I know that as English Masons we have much to impart to our brethren, yet we have also something to learn; and the benefit of a United Conference would be reciprocal. Should Grand Lodge, as I trust it will, take up this subject, the Grand Chapter should do the same, for in the Royal Arch there is more diversity, both of ritual and ceremony, than there is in Craft working. Should this controversy in the pages of THE FREEMASON have the effect of inducing the Grand Lodge, to take up this important question, it will have conferred an inestimable boon on the Craft, that will be appreciated by more than

ALLEGORICAL SCULPTURES IN MEDIÆVAL CHURCHES.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—At page 9 of THE FREEMASON for April 24th, I called our Bro. "Cryptonymus" in question regarding his remarks upon the above subject. He now, at page 3 of May 22nd, returns to the subject in answer to me, and quotes Bro. Findel as his authority. Now I agree with "Cryptonymus" that Bro. Findel's history is about the best yet out, and it is valuable not only for what it contains, but for what it suggests; however, I differ from Bro. Findel upon several matters, as to which more again. And I have still to assert that the Masons did not put these curious sculptures referred to where they are, "in defiance," but that they were allegorical, or were done with consent, sometimes—but not that I am aware of—tacit, at other times to order. Even in Scotland, where, until the Reformation, Catholicism was so strong, we find these curious sculptures; yet who would dare to try and prove that Scottish masons cut these "in defiance," say in either the thirteenth or fourteenth centuries? No; the life or liberty of the workman who did so would not be worth many hours purchase. The fact is, by the end of the fifteenth century, even the Catholic clergy were quite capable of doing such things, either in ridicule or as practical jokes, although at first they were strictly allegorical. About 1511, when Luther went to Rome, he was rather astonished at the way the churchmen went on. He performed the services in a decent manner, but that did not suit the others, who said, "Passa! passa!" that is, "Haste you, haste, now do be done with it!" It was the fashion of the Papal Court to attack Christianity, and no man could pass for a well-bred person who did not hold some wrong, or heretical notion on the doctrines of the Church. Luther was one day at dinner with several prelates, and among other ludicrous stories which they told in the monk's hearing, they related with laughter and glorification, how, in saying Mass at the altar, instead of the sacramental words which were to transubstantiate the bread and the wine into the Saviour's body and blood, they pronounced over the bread and wine the following words in derision: "Panis eset panis manebis, vinum es et vinum manebis" (bread thou art and bread thou shalt remain; wine thou art, and wine thou shalt remain). "Then," continued they, "we raise the ostensory and all the people worship!"

I need not, as I could, multiply such examples; therefore, I think that it is unnecessary for me to add that the masons did not execute the curious sculptures we are speaking of "in defiance."

I am, yours fraternally,
LEO.

FREEMASONS AS ARBITRATORS.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

SIR,—No man, be he Freemason or not, can shut his eyes to the incalculable mischief brought about by strikes, both to employers and employed; and I think the suggestion of calling in a lodge, or deputation of a lodge, to act as arbitrators, is worthy a place in your paper.

Freemasons as a body are both universally known and respected, and would, no doubt, act impartially between capital and labour.

Yours fraternally,
R. W. BANCROFT.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

SIR,—In your interesting paper of the 5th inst., I see an article on Freemasonry by the "Son of Salathiel," wherein, to substantiate the origin of Freemasonry, he tells us of certain revelations made to Enoch, son of Jared, by God Almighty, who appeared to him twice in a dream. As an admirer of Freemasonry and a lover of truth, I have searched all biblical traditions and commentaries, but have failed in my diligent search to find any such mention. I am sure that the Craft in general and your humble correspondent in particular, will feel grateful to the "Son of Salathiel," or any one else who will show from whence that idea has sprung. Hoping you will give space to the above in your next, by so doing you will greatly oblige,

Yours thankfully and fraternally,
G. R. HOLLANDER,
Bute Lodge, 960.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND MASONRY.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—With all due loyalty and expedient subjection to rulers with regard to social and political matters, I would, nevertheless, call in question the equity of promoting to the high dignity of P.G.M., any personage who had not obtained that honour by passing through the trodden curriculum. The Prince of Wales has been thus promoted. Being a mere junior in Masonry, he has not had time to tread his upward way per force of merit, so that his passing to such an elevated stage is a leap which can only be made where justice and truth are practically contemned, and where rank or some other corrupt consideration rides the high horse over them. Are not the laws and rules of the highest fraternity in the world coincident with attributes divine—synonymous with those of the Grand Master of the universe Himself? They are. The pillars and columns of the building rest ever on His eternal foundations; therefore, in principle unerring and exact. But peccancy is in the midst of us, and our brilliant panoply has become tarnished. The builders are fallible, and their plummet is not true. A fellow-creature, whom the accident of birth has made more fortunate than most others, is permitted to take a lengthened leap—de jure, but not de facto—to one of Truth's distant towers, without traversing his weary, noble way with others. Excuses, such as—compliment to royalty, present prestige, future patronage, &c., are but exponents of corrupt allowances. Ah, Masonry! thy tenets are beautiful, but thy votaries are vacillating and wayward. Grand Lodge, which is the nucleus of thy temple here below, is not, itself, beyond the influence of current temptation; its columns lack perpendicularity, and some of its stones are unhewn—not chiselled—after the fashion of its own dictates, nor formed in the approved style of perfection's level.

Yours truly,
A. C.

THE CHAIR DEGREE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—From his remarks in page 4 of THE FREEMASON for 29th ult., I judged that Bro. "Ammi" is now off "the chair degree," and on to the "status" of the Lodge of Glasgow, St. John, which "status" (No. 3 bis) he says is "usurped," having been based—so he says—"on a charter since declared to be a forgery," therefore any finding based upon the said St. John's Lodge falls to the ground.

If Bro. "Ammi's" assertion be true—which I think not—this is a serious matter; however I shall inquire into it, and see if the Lodge of Glasgow St. John attained its present "status" in virtue of its supposed connection with the pretended Malcolm Charter (which I admit to be a "forgery"), or on account of other documents or evidence of antiquity. I therefore pray the brethren to suspend their judgement till next week, when I hope to be able to state the facts of the case, whatever they may be.

I am, yours fraternally,
LEO.

H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

It is reported that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will be affiliated to the English Craft in the Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 259, in the course of next week; and, further, that preparations are being made for the Prince's exaltation to the Royal Arch degree at an early date.

FRENCH MASONIC LITERATURE.

"Le Monde Maconnique," May 1869.

The publication of our esteemed contemporary for May has been delayed in consequence of the elections to the French Chamber of Deputies. The following is a brief synopsis of its contents:

There is a long article on the proposition of Bro. Ducarre, to increase the fees payable to the Grand Orient by the Parisian lodges. Our brethren at Marseilles have, to their great credit, inaugurated adult schools, and the opening ceremony took place on the 1st May, when Bro. J. B. Brochier, President of the Schools Committee, delivered a discourse upon the principles of the Masonic Institution, and the absolute necessity of primary instruction for the young of both sexes. We also learn that Bro. Cesar Bartholon, of the Lodge Belisaire, Orient d'Alger, pronounced a fine oration on "Morals."

The installation meeting of the Grand Orient of Belgium was held on the 17th April. There is also an interesting account of the funeral of Bro. Vassel, Vénérable de la Triple Unité, Orient de Fecamp, whose eulogy was delivered by Bro. Cazavan, editor of the Journal du Havre. There is a touching letter from the widow of the deceased, forwarding to the lodge the Masonic papers and brochures of her late husband. Reviews of new French works close the "Monde Maconnique" for May.

BEADON CHAPTER, No. 619.

A convocation of this Chapter was held at the Greyhound, Dulwich, on Thursday, the 10th inst., under the presidency of Comps. A. Avery, A. P. Leonard, and J. W. Avery, the three Principals, assisted by Comps. F. Walters, P. Z. and S. E.; H. Massey, S. N., and other Companions, including Comp. H. G. Buss, P. Z. 177, a visitor.

The success of this Chapter since its consecration by Comp. R. W. Little in August last, has been very gratifying, and under such able management it will doubtless have a long career of prosperity. We were glad to notice that our old friend and excellent Companion, Frederick Walters was able to attend to his duties on this occasion, although he is still scarcely recovered from a severe illness. The Craft could ill spare the services of such a hard-working Mason, who is worth a hundred of the drones in the hive.

THE BRETT TESTIMONIAL.

Brethren holding subscription cards for the above fund are requested to forward them either to Bro. H. G. Buss (Treasurer), 127, Offord-road, Islington, N., or to the Hon. Secretaries, Bros. R. W. Little, 7, Gilbert-road, Kennington, S. E., and R. Tanner, 18, North-street, Westminster, S. W.

We are happy to announce that Bro. W. J. Hughan's forthcoming work on the "Constitutions of Freemasonry," is to be dedicated, by permission, to the Right Honourable the Earl of Zetland, Most Worshipful Grand Master of England.

The design of nature is for the preservation of life in man to the full extent of permitted existence. Should circumstance or chance cause damage, nature will work at repair, and may be assisted by art; but should nature be overcome, art is of no avail. Life is the gift of God.—Ellie.

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

X.—MASONRY AND ATHEISM.

"I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. O, when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within my house with a perfect heart."—Psalms ci, v. 2.

"A Mason is obliged, by his tenure, to obey the moral law; and, if he rightly understand the Art, he will never be a stupid Atheist, nor an irreligious libertine."—Ancient Charges.

Of modern—that is, "speculative"—Freemasonry, the genius of England has unquestionably the right to consider itself the creator. The "Institutions" of Anderson, collected from older sources, from the traditions of the operative Masons, breathe—indued as they were by the affectionate care of the compiler with a life—and form, a "landmark" of no mean order. Even hazy traditions of the past attribute to Britain no inconsiderable influence over the moral and religious conduct of mankind. Hence the Druids promulgated the vast and cheering idea of a circulation of souls. Here the pious Joseph of Arimathea is—in the neighbourhood of Glastonbury—supposed to have rested, after the holy office he performed towards the founder of the Christian Faith. From this land passed forth, without hesitation, pilgrims of good to all mankind. Noble Cœur de Lion was our own; Tyndale was of us; and Latimer's honest sense of right and justice illustrated a great page of our history. The Anglo-Saxon Church was, to an extent, by him restored. In his own words—he lighted up a fire in England not easily to be put out. Masons, even, affectionately cling to the Athelstane Charter; but none of this leads to Atheism. Do not the very first words of the ancient charges directly contravene the idea?

T.G.A.O.T.U. rules supreme; but I learn from various reports that in some Masonic quarters it is proposed to substitute Lucretius for The Ineffable. I am neither astonished nor afraid. In so many words—It can't be done. To whomsoever this may come I bid him count the drops in the seas, or arrest the river's course, than really and utterly shake any man's true faith in a Supreme Being.

Tallyrand, bishop and diplomatist, said, "If there were not a God it would be necessary to invent one." Such is the verdict of humanity, and humanity is right. Details may be wanting, but while we cannot raise the veil we can see the outline. Even suppose that Nature is God, then, as men and Masons—in the universal sense—we see His robe, though His face remain hidden. If we enter into the minds of men—and it is possible—we see that the physical form does not, as vain phrenologists presume, give any indication as to the glorious mind within; the fine animal is generally the stupid animal rem genus homo. Socrates, one of the ugliest, was one of the wisest of men; Alcibiades, one of the most handsome, and the most reckless. The one, contented to obey the laws of his country, swallowed the poisoned cup, and died, remembering the cock due to Æsculapius; the other, after profaning the Hermaic Statues, became an outcast from his great estate.

We need not start from a skeleton when we know it is contrived by a great and glorious Creator; and, therefore, why recoil from the necessary corollary of His existence?

Although myself only a Lewis—in which sense I have written these papers, and shall continue to write them so long as it appears to give pleasure—I am not without some light. But for English Masons to consent to the removal of the First Great Light from the appointed place—to substitute a vague worship of powers in nature for the innate reverence for the cause, would be a step backward never to be taken! In science we proceed inductively, and French science has produced us an Auguste Comte. Would he, now some time deceased—he, who wished and attempted the foundation of the religion of humanity, desire us to relapse into the metaphysical or fetichistic period? For one, I say—No!

Let us consider rather the motto I indignantly wrote at the beginning of this paper. Let us consider its magnitude. "I will behave myself in a perfect way." Is the Ark of the Covenant never to be transported in peace? I ask it symbolically and straightforwardly. Whatever sense we may attach to the first clause, it is indissolubly connected with the second. T.G.A.O.T.U. says He will walk in a perfect way, and thus invites all mankind to walk with him. When will you come to Him? Freemasonry, or any other organization, were useless without the Divine invitation. To quote the excellent Hebrew translation of M. Cohen—"I will walk, in the integrity of my heart, in the centre of my own house."

And now it is proposed to rend the veil in twain, to part man from the hopes of heaven, and render earth endurable by the abnegation of that which alone can render life, with its innumerable troubles, endurable!

O! monstrous! England the birthplace, the cradle, of western civilization, will not have it! Let it be tried; Masonry is so charitable that it will forgive the error, perhaps seek to gather a lesson from this stress and storm. Is this Unity? Is it Brotherhood? All submitted to the same test, and yet those who know how hard it is to kick against the pricks are to emulate the Romish priesthood in absurdity! To abrogate God—to use the Pope's recent words, "to drive God out of heaven" (a pretty piece of blasphemy for the occupant of St. Peter's (?) chair!) would be to destroy Masonry, and introduce Apollyon. Stones would supersede bread, and serpents take the place of fishes.

Even the Roman Catholics have defended the Freemasons against the imputation of Atheism. I find in the work of a very learned and bigoted Roman Catholic who attacks the Protestants zealously, published in 1736, a long note in defence of the Craft (Ceremonies et Coutumes Religieuses de tous les Peuples du Monde, 7 vols. folio.) The author, Bernard Picart, (vol. iv., p.p. 251-2, note b) does not hesitate to say that the respectability of the members of the Fraternity in his day totally refutes the possibility of Atheism. It were to be wished that modern Roman Catholic ecclesiastics were as tolerant and reasonable.

Indeed, without a higher incentive to exertion than mere self-indulgence and enjoyment life would be worthless, and razors or pistols acceptable. Personally, I would not be harsh; I would allow every one to select his own path as he thinks best, provided always that he can see his way. But what would be the result of the flat equality of Rebold and his school? Where would the inspiring principle of Charity hide itself? Our ideal would be thrown down—not as a Dragon is cast down—but in the manner of a moral, intellectual, and physical cataclysm. Then, indeed, might we call for the hills to hide us, and the mountains to cover us.

T.G.A.O.T.U. gave us universal love from man to man—indiscriminately to be shown where worthily sought—the labourer being worthy of his hire. But the employer destroyed, lost, hidden, and found at last a very carcass, must we not deem traitors to be in the camp, and all the most useful and excellent labours suspended?

For my part, I trust, believe, and hope that these idle rumours fostered by bastard, not real, Masonry, will come to naught.

Continental Masonry, to my certain knowledge, has never, for a long time past, pursued the ancient time-honoured channels. It has, on the Lesseps principle, been cutting a Suez Canal over which the angry sand simooms of those devoted to the study of the Art will ultimately burst and fill up. I can only deeply deplore the position in which Rebold and his school, although his work contains much that is both interesting and valuable, have placed the Fraternity of Charity.

CRYPTONYMUS.

INELIGIBILITY OF BASTARDS AS FREEMASONS.

It is an imperative law in Freemasonry—obligatory on every member of the Craft—that the ancient landmarks shall be upheld in their entirety. All our present laws are derived from the ancient landmarks of the Order, and the crowning landmark of all is that these landmarks can never be changed. Now, in the eighteenth landmark it is declared among the necessary qualifications of a candidate for admission into the Order, that he "be able in all degrees—that is, freeborn, no bastard, of a good kindred, true, and no bondman, and that he have his right limbs as a man ought to have." And the old charges give the qualifications as follows:—

"The persons admitted members of a lodge must be good and true men, free-born, no bastard, and of mature and discreet age; no bondman, no woman, no immoral and scandalous men; but men of good report. Nor can any who do not possess these qualifications, even although they may have been initiated, continue to act as Freemasons or to practice the rights or receive the benefits of the Order." The qualifications arise from the very nature of the Masonic institution, and from its symbolic teachings, and have always existed as landmarks.

It has been an indisputable rule, and constantly acted upon in lodges in Britain in olden times, that no bastard could be received as a Freemason. It was quite customary to inquire if the candidate was born in lawful wedlock; and along with his petition for admission into the lodge, he presented a certificate of his birth or of his baptism, or some other equally authoritative document, as a proof that he was born in lawful wedlock.

In Scotland, this ancient landmark and law has been maintained with almost no exception; and it is not long since, in a lodge holding a high position in the Craft, two men were positively rejected on no other ground than that they could not show the legitimacy of their birth.

In other parts of the world the same landmarks and law of Freemasonry is steadily maintained. The M.W. Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Virginia, in addressing the Grand Lodge of Virginia, just a very few months since, in a speech which would have done credit to the G. M. of any Grand Lodge in the world, showed clearly and distinctly that by the Constitution of our Order no bastard can be admitted into it. A person coming under this description does not approach our portals with the necessary qualifications.

It is easy to see whence this landmark and ancient law of Freemasonry is derived. It is from the old Jewish law, which we find in Deut. xxiii. 2, "A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the congregation of the Lord." The reasons on which the law is founded are also evidently the same. It may seem to be hard to subject a man to exclusion from an honourable Order because of a sin which is not his own, but that of his parents. No country, however, has by its laws done otherwise in this matter than to accept and act upon the principle that the sins of parents must be visited upon their children. A bastard has the ordinary rights of a citizen or subject, but he is filius nullius—the son of no one. He cannot inherit property, nor can he transmit inheritance to any except his own children. The hardship of his case results from the very circumstances of his birth, and to do away with this hardship would be a wrong to society. The Jewish law, which has been adopted as a landmark by Freemasons, and which has been preserved amongst them from the earliest times, has evident respect to the maintenance of purity in the relations of human life. It discourages every thing that is evil, and upholds all that is good. Freemasonry has always reprobated violations of domestic purity, and nothing is more derogatory to the character of a member of the Order. If it were possible to relieve bastards from the disadvantage of their position, one of the barriers against vice would be removed. But, indeed, it is impossible, without shaking the very foundations of society. We may pity the man who, in consequence of the sin of his parents, is excluded from privileges common to others; but we cannot wish his position improved, when we consider what would be involved in its improvement. We cannot wish the law of the land to be changed so as to be made more favourable to him, nor the ancient landmarks, laws, and charges of Freemasonry to be overlooked that he may be received as if there were no stain on his birth. A strict regard for the moral law, and a continual enforcement of every rule which tends to maintain it, are the chief honour of our Order.

Numerous Masonic authorities have advocated the maintenance of this landmark in its entirety; and among them the late Bro. Dr. Oliver, whose name will long be remembered with respect among Freemasons throughout the whole world, strenuously advocated the enforcement of the old law. It is a law which, when its purpose and operation are considered, must receive the approbation of every worthy Freemason. An inclination may be felt to relax it in particular cases, when they are viewed merely by themselves; but a wider view of the subject to which it relates must lead not only to an approbation of it, but to its constant enforcement. A man who knows the illegitimacy of his own birth, and knows also the ancient landmark of Freemasonry precluding the admission of bastards—as he ought or must know it from the very form of petition which he has to sign previous to his admission—exhibits consummate impudence in presenting himself as a candidate for the privileges of our ancient and honourable Order; and if admitted can only be so on false pretences and through very culpable deceit on the part of those who recommend him to the lodge. How can he answer the questions which must be put to him before his admission? There is one thing, however, which saves the credit of the Order, that the moment the fact of the case is discovered, the law comes into operation to prevent his continuing to act as a Freemason, to practice the rights, or enjoy any of the privileges or advantages of the Order.

It is very evident that, as Freemasons on becoming members of the Order are required to make certain professions and to comply with certain conditions, according to the ancient landmarks, laws, and charges, so the obligations under which they lie to the Order are connected with the maintenance of these landmarks, laws and charges. If any of these landmarks are violated, it becomes the duty of a Freemason who knows it to point out the violation, and then of the lodge to rectify the evil, which, if the lodge fail to do, the party informing the lodge of the facts, ought to appeal to the Grand Lodge. The appeal could not be unsuccessful in the Grand Lodge; or if it were, the party who made it, and all who along with him take the landmarks of the Order for their rule, would be free from the obligations under which they had come as members of the Order, on the faith that these landmarks were to be maintained as forming an essential part of its constitution. Freemasonry, however, is too pure ever to allow so monstrous an innovation. Nothing but what was perfect was allowed to enter our first Temple. Let all strive still to keep it so, and give it to those who shall succeed us, without adding to it, or taking from it, and in the same pure state that it has come down to us.

THE MASONIC SECRET DISCOVERED.

As Mr. Forester stood till the last stroke of twelve should admit him into the citadel (as he was told to call it), a profane ear might have caught sounds which were, at all events, a good imitation of boisterous laughter; but, in the perturbed state of our hero's mind, they only represented the mocking groans of the ghostly visitants of that haunted mill.

Presently, just as a policeman on his beat passed him with a sharp "Good night, Sir," in reply to his polite salutation, the clock struck twelve. A door was opened, and our hero entered. All was darkness, and a voice cried out, in deep tragic tones—

"Who goes there?"

"A spy," was the rejoinder, from another corner of the room, in a sepulchral voice.

"Seize him, and bring him before the Grand Sophos."

Two hands seized his, and he was marched forward five steps, and told that he was to stamp upon the ground at the first, third, and fifth steps, and to say Ver-y-rum-my-ah!

This he did—taking due pains to give each syllable distinctly, and evidently feeling that there was some mysterious meaning in the same. He was told to kneel, and the voice which appeared to be that of the Grand Sophos, who had spoken before, exclaimed—

"To arms brethren, and light the citadel."

A sudden lurid glare shone out for a moment, revealing the interior of a lofty chamber; a number of figures were seen dressed in fantastic guise, all being armed with swords which were drawn and were held pointed at the unlucky wight, who looked wistfully round upon the scene. Standing on what might have been thought a beer barrel—if anything so out of place could have been there—was a figure clothed in white, with its head in its hands, or what looked like a head.

This was all taken in at a glance, for the flame burnt but for a moment and then died out, leaving a murky darkness, and a faint smell of brimstone.

"Behold," said a voice, "the form of one who hath betrayed his craft!"

"Are you prepared to pass through the ordeal which all neophytes who aspire to a knowledge of our mysteries have to undergo?"

"I am, Sir," said our hero bravely.

"Jove, the fellow's got pluck!" a familiar voice muttered, sotto voce, unheard, however, by Mr. Forester.

"Will you take the oath?"

"I will, Sir."

"Then repeat your name, and take this book, which is the Volume of the Law, place the same upon your breast, and say after me—

"To arms, most venerable Masons."

The oath was then administered to the candidate in the Egyptian language, as the Grand Sophos stated:—

"I, Marmaduke Forester, a neophyte candidate for Freemasonry, solemnly swear unto you, masters and brethren, by the holy pyramids of Egypt, and by the goddess Isis—that—

"That I never," said the Sophos, speaking as if it were all one word.

"That never," answered Forester.

"Erwillma," continued the Sophos.

"Erwillma," responded the neophyte.

"Keafoo," said the voice.

"Keafoo," replied the candidate.

"Lofmyselfany more bloat."

The candidate reiterated the last word with difficulty, and some indistinctness.

"Edbreth," said the Grand Sophos, sharply.

"Edbreth," repeated our friend.

"Ren," muttered the headless one.

"Ren," said Forester, trembling.

"Stochumpollywog and hachidundering!!!" the Sophos uttered in a loud voice.

"It is done, brethren! Blindfold the neophyte!"

In a minute Forester is seized from behind—his hands are tied, a bandage is placed over his eyes. At the same time a light is produced, and a sound as of suppressed laughter is heard. Our hero's fears are, however, too keen to allow of his taking any notice.

Another voice is now heard saying, "Let the four elements bear witness to the oath."

It has been said that outside the mill there lay upon the banks of the stream a huge pipe, but some distance from the road. To this was the candidate led. Here a pause ensued, and a voice (uncommonly like Frank Ashburn's) was heard to say, "I'm tired of this; don't let's have any more fun out of the fellow—we have tried him enough." To this several voices objected, saying that as Ashburn had brought them out at that time of night for his and Raymond's benefit, they meant to go on with the ceremony. It need hardly be stated that Forester heard nothing of the altercation which was going on. At length some one produced a sack, into which the candidate was put; a rope was passed through the tube, fastened under his arms, and a number of hands taking hold of the other end of the rope which had been passed through the tube, he was unceremoniously lugged through it; a little of the soil was thrown on his face as he emerged, and "Earth" was uttered in a loud tone by many voices. He was then swung upon something, thrown three times into the air, being each time, however, caught by unseen hands, and "Air" resounded upon the ear.

Here another pause ensued.

"I say I shan't have any more of this," Frank Ashburn was heard to say. "The fellow's frightened out of his wits already."

"Nonsense, my dear fellow."

"But I tell you he is," said Frank.

"Well ask him; but don't spoil the business."

Assuming the deep sepulchral voice which the Grand Sophos had adopted, the candidate was then asked if he would proceed.

"Yes," firmly replied our hero.

"There's some stuff in the fellow after all," said young Spark, a stripling of twenty years, who was among the number of practical jokers, in an undertone, to his friend and ally, Fred Maxted.

"You are right; he's a brick."

"Proceed, then, with the mystic emblems." Something was put over his eyes, and a sudden flame enveloped him from head to foot, which, however, passed away almost as suddenly as it came. "Fire!" shouted the voices. And again there is a pause.

"He shall not be put into the water," some one said decidedly.

"I hope it will soon be over," sighed our hero almost unconsciously.

A sound as of merriment—it might be the wind, though—is the only response. The candidate is, after some little delay, led into the room which he first entered, some liquid is dashed about his face, and "Water" is shouted by the voices.

Then the bandage is taken from his eyes, and he sees twelve phantoms with lurid light in the sightless eyes, and a smell as of burning phosphorus is wafted through the space. "It is enough," utters a voice; and the phantoms vanish. "Light," says the Grand Sophos. "Light," mutter the voices.

A bandage is placed again over the eyes of the candidate, who stands motionless before the pedestal upon which had stood the headless man. In a few minutes the bandage is removed, and the candidate for Masonic honours sees before him twelve gentlemen in black clothes, with green scarfs upon them. Before him stands Mr. Frank Ashburn, the Grand Sophos, who thus addresses him:—

"Brother Forester, henceforth to be known as Brother Asteroid, receive from me the symbol of membership of our august fraternity. I now admit you to the Order of Egyptian Coptic Masons. May you ever show courage, fidelity, and obedience, as you have to night!"

Our friend Marmaduke was then arrayed in a green sash, and informed that a green velvet rosette must be made by the woman he loved best in the world, which was to be embroidered with the letters "H.C.I.R.," which the Grand Sophos declared were mystic letters, which would be explained to the candidate at the next meeting of the fraternity. "You are at liberty to state that you are a Freemason now, but you are not to state when and where you were made. I have also to require of you, as a Coptic Mason, an oath, that you will keep your name secret for two months from all strangers, and to acknowledge no name but that of Asteroid. Will you swear?"

"I will."

The form was gone through as before.

"The Grand Egyptian secret is revealed in 'the letters L.S.D.," the Grand Sophos resumed. "L. stands for lux, light; S. for signam, a sign; D. for dux, a leader. If you have but these three lights—a sign, and a leader—you cannot fail to penetrate the Egyptian Mysteries. To the outside world, L.S.D. has another meaning, but be assured Masonry has nothing to do with that other meaning. You will take the earliest opportunity of wearing the Tau or Greek cross upon your person. The Greek or Nile cross was one of the most sacred symbols of the Egyptian Mysteries, and is formed like a T. The whiskers and beard of the new candidate are in all cases to be removed immediately after initiation, and the moustache and imperial left to imitate the 'tau cross.' Thus you will be at once recognised by the brethren from your outward appearance."

"Do you promise 'obedience' to these directions?"

"I do, Sir, certainly."

The proceedings were then declared concluded. Several of the Masons present came forward and congratulated Forester cordially for the courage he had shown, and they all adjourned to young Spark's lodgings, who insisted upon entertaining them, one and all,—much, to his landlady's disgust, who, awakened by the noise in the dead of the night, which came from her lodger's sitting-room, mentally resolved to give him warning next day.

As the men go home, the same policeman passes a group of them talking at a corner of a street, and observes our hero's green scarf under his overcoat, which he had forgotten to remove when he left the mill. The policeman, who has just joined the force, and whose name is Forbes, 982, also observes that several of the men have weapons with them which look uncommonly like swords.

P.-c. Forbes deems it his duty to make a communication to the Superintendent.

CHAPTER III.

"MR. FORESTER AGAIN."

Such was the heading of a paragraph which appeared in the Marton Gazette on the Saturday week following that of our hero's initiation into Egyptian Masonry.

Mr. Forester had not been progressing in the world's good opinion of late; but the world—that is, the little world of Marton—seemed to delight in his escapades since they gave the quidnuncs of that worthy borough, of whom there were many, something to talk about.

Fathers warned their sons not to have anything to do with that young scamp Forester, to which advice the said sons, I regret to say, paid little attention; mothers warned their daughters on no account to allow that misguided young man to be introduced to them, and the young ladies were, it must be owned, more obedient. Madge Raymond had told his wife of the conversation he and Frank had had about Forester; and, whether it was that she was touched by Frank's eloquence, or whether it was that her own kind heart told her, that perhaps after all, "poor Mr. Forester," as she called him, had been rather ill-treated by the people of Marton, I do not know, but she begged her husband to tell Mr. Forester she would be very glad to see him any evening he liked to come in a friendly way to take a cup of tea with them. Master Marmaduke had been getting into debt, too, and only three days since he had been served with a County Court summons for a bill of £30 due to his tailor, and which had been outstanding a long time. He had been to Frank about it, and he, good-hearted fellow, lent him the money in a minute, without taking the smallest security in return, telling Mayduke (as he had nicknamed him as being less complimentary than Miss Fanny), that he would trust him, on his honour as a gentleman, to repay it when he could.

Poor Forester accepted the loan with tears in his eyes, assuring Mr. Ashburn that he was the only real friend he had.

"Don't say that," said Frank, "I am sure Raymond is a good friend to you. Do you know, it was he who bailed you out and paid the fine for you yesterday?"

"No!"

"Well, it was. By the way Forester, you will excuse me asking, but I thought you told me the other day that you had £100 left you?"

"So I have; but my uncle has not sent it to me yet. I had a letter from him to-day, though, and he says that he expects my aunt's affairs will be settled in about a fortnight, when he will transmit the money. They have invited me over to Killmallock, and I intend to go as soon as the needful arrives."

The above colloquy takes places in our friend Frank Ashburn's rooms, whither Marmaduke Forester had gone to thank his friend for defending him in his professional capacity in the County Court yesterday.

Whilst they were talking, Raymond strolls in, with a

"Hallo, Frank, old boy, how are you?"

"How d'ye do, Mr. Forester?"

"Don't let me disturb you," he continues, as young Forester, muttering clumsily his thanks for Raymond's good offices, rises to go.

Poor fellow, he is rather ashamed of himself, and nothing will induce him to sit down again.

"Well, if you will go," Frank says cheerily, "Good night, my boy. Don't go on the loose now to-night; and don't go to the billiard-room at the Vulture. You are much better away."

"Good night," Madge echoes. "And by-the-bye, Forester, my wife told me to tell you she would be glad to see you any evening you like to come in. We always dine early, and we tea at six o'clock. Come to-morrow, if you like."

"Thank you, I shall be very pleased to come some other evening, but to-morrow I can't—I'm engaged."

"Well, whenever you like: ta-ta," and, so saying, Forester was allowed to depart.

"That fellow's an uncommonly odd fish; I don't know what you will do with him, Frank."

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE DR. OLIVER.

THE Committee (consisting of the undersigned five Members of the Witham Lodge, Lincoln), formed for the purpose of collecting subscriptions towards a Memorial to the above distinguished Mason, being anxious to close their labours, will be glad if Brethren wishing to subscribe will intimate their intention at once to the Hon. Sec., Bro. W. G. MOORE, P.M., Witham Lodge, 297, Lincoln.

It is suggested that the Memorial shall take the form of a Scholarship in connection with one of the Masonic Schools, or such other form as may be determined upon by the Subscribers.

(Signed) RICHARD HALL, P.G.S.W. and P.P.G. Sec. Lincolnshire, P.M. 297.

JOHN NORTON, P.P.G.P. Lincolnshire, P.M. 297.
CHARLES HARRISON, P.F.G.D., Lincolnshire, P.M. 297.

WM. GEO. MOORE, P.M. 297.
GEO. BACON, Sec. 297.

Now Ready,

The Investors' Guardian Almanack For 1869.

THE object of this publication is to meet a want generally expressed to the proprietors of the Investors' Guardian newspaper for some Handy Book for Investors, published annually at a moderate rate, which, furnishing unquestioned and positive data from official documents, might enable small or larger capitalist to regulate his own investments by his own judgment grounded on certified facts.

THE INVESTORS' GUARDIAN ALMANACK,

Price One Shilling and Sixpence,

supplies the fullest particulars relating to all Public Companies, with a correct classification of them as investments—whether as regards their capital (nominal and actual), their liabilities and their assets, their incomes and their reserves, their bonuses and their dividends; together with their value as investments, and the return yielded to purchasers at present prices.

The would-be Investor will find in the INVESTORS' GUARDIAN ALMANACK every possible information relating to

1. The English Government Funds.
2. Colonial Government Securities.
3. Foreign Government Securities.
4. Railway Debenture Stocks.
5. Preference Railway Stocks.
6. Railway Ordinary Stocks.
7. Banks.
8. Insurance Companies.
9. Finance Companies—their present position and prospects.
10. Miscellaneous Companies—their relative position as investments.
11. An authorised List of Members of the London Stock Exchange.
12. List of Official Liquidators.
13. List of Companies in Liquidation.
14. Rules for Registration of Companies, and fees payable.
15. List of Officers and Offices of all Public Companies.
16. List of Private Banks in London and the Country, with Names of Partners.
17. An alphabetically-arranged List of the Directors in the Public Companies throughout Great Britain and Ireland, &c., &c.

A work of such magnitude, importance, and precision would not be within the power of any other firm than that of the Proprietors of the Investors' Guardian newspaper, through whose hands the official documents—from which it has been carefully eliminated—are daily passing, and to whom they are matters of constant reference.

Let the reader judge for himself the value of being able, on hearing the name of any Company mentioned, to turn at once, in this Almanack, to its name in the Alphabetical List and be informed of its Capital, its Shares, the amount subscribed and paid, their present value, the Dividend paid on them, the Reserve held back as guarantee, the Income accruing, its application, and its indebtedness. The information given as to Directors is of equal importance.

In matters such as these, not the Investor only but the Insurer is deeply interested, as will be found by a reference to the pages containing the account of all INSURANCE COMPANIES, and the Editorial remarks and advice appended thereto.

Price, free by Post, 1s. 6d., in limp cover; bound in stiff boards. 2s. 6d.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—THE HOUR OF

DANGER.—Disease commonly comes on with slight symptoms, which, when neglected, increase in intensity and gradually grow dangerous—a condition which betrays the grossest remissness when the Pills, taken in accordance with their accompanying directions would not only have checked but conquered the incipient disorder. Patients daily forward details of the most remarkable and instructive cases, in which timely attention and Holloway's advice have undoubtedly saved them from severe illness. The Pills act primarily on the digestive organs, which they stimulate when slow and imperfect; and, secondly, upon the blood, which is thoroughly purified by them, whence is derived the general tone they impart, and their power of subjugating hypochondriasis, dyspepsia, and nervous complaints.

The principles of business in the Retail Department are specially recommended to the Craft and others seeking the best market. The unvarying rule is to give good value for money, to sell cheap when cheapness is consistent with quality, and to make a reduction on the price of an article when a quantity is taken. From this system of business—first established in 1805—their Wholesale Trade has grown, and GANN, JONES & CO.'s Shirts and Clothing are fast finding favour with Merchants, Shippers, and the best Houses in Town and Country.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

BY THE SON OF SALATHIEL.

[The rights of translation and reproduction reserved.]

Before quitting the subject of the Sacred Name, it will be well to quote the following remarks by Brother Albert G. Mackey, in his "Book of the Chapter," and we shall then proceed to the elucidation of the triple tau—a celebrated emblem of antiquity—as well as one held in high esteem by English Royal Arch Masons.

"The name of God, which we, at a venture, pronounce JEHOVAH—and which is called the 'Tetragrammaton,' (from the Greek tetra, four, and gramma, letter,) because it consists in Hebrew of four letters, and the 'Ineffable name,' because it was unlawful to pronounce it, was ever held by the Jews in the most profound veneration. They claim to have derived its origin from the immediate inspiration of the Almighty, who communicated it to Moses, as his especial appellation, to be used only by his chosen people. This communication was first made at the Burning Bush, when God said to the Jewish lawgiver: 'Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel: Jehovah the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob hath sent me unto you: this [Jehovah] is my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations.' And at a subsequent period, he still more emphatically declared this to be his peculiar name, when he said: 'I am Jehovah: and I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of El Shaddai; but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known unto them.'

"Ushered to their notice by the utmost solemnity and religious consecration, this name of God became invested among the Israelites with the profoundest veneration and awe. To add to this mysticism, the Kabbalists, by the change of a single letter in the original, read the passage which is, 'this is my name for ever,' as if it had been written 'this is my name to be concealed.'

"This interpretation, though founded on an error, and probably an intentional one, soon became a precept, and has been strictly obeyed to this day. The word Jehovah is never pronounced by a pious Jew, who, whenever he meets with it in Scripture, substitutes for it the word Adonai or Lord, a practice that has been followed by the translators of the common English version of the Bible with almost Jewish scrupulosity, the word Jehovah in the original being always translated by the word 'Lord.' The use of this word being thus abandoned, its pronunciation was ultimately lost, since by the peculiar construction of the Hebrew language, which is entirely without vowel letters, the vocal sounds being supplied to the ear by oral teaching, the consonants, which alone constitute the alphabet, can, in their combination, give no possible indication, to one who has not heard it before, of the true pronunciation of any given word.

"There was one person, however, who, it is said, was in possession of the proper sound of the letters and the true pronunciation of the word. This was the High Priest, who, receiving it through his predecessor, preserved the recollection of the sound by pronouncing it three times, once a year, on the day of Atonement, when he entered the holy of holies of the tabernacle or the temple.

"If the traditions of masonry on this subject are correct, the kings, after the establishment of the monarchy, must sometimes have participated in this privilege, for Solomon is said to have been in possession of the word, and to have communicated it to his two colleagues at the building of the temple. The Kabbalists and Talmudists have enveloped this ineffable name of God in a host of mystical superstitions, most of which are as absurd as they are incredible, but all of them tend to show the great veneration that has always been paid to it. Thus they say that it is possessed of unlimited powers, and that he who pronounces it shakes heaven and earth, and inspires the very angels with terror and astonishment. The Rabbins call it 'shem hamphorash,' that is to say, 'the name that was declared,' and they assert that David found it engraved on a stone while digging into the earth.

"Besides the tetragrammaton or ineffable word, there are many varieties of the name which have been adopted with almost equal veneration among other nations of antiquity.

"All these names of God are eminently symbolical. In fact, the name of God must be taken, in Freemasonry, as the symbol of TRUTH, and then the search for it will be nothing but the search after truth, which is the true end and aim of the masonic science of symbolism. The subordinate names are the subordinate modifications of truth, but the ineffable tetragrammaton is the symbol of the sublimity and perfection of divine truth, to which all good masons and all good men are seeking to advance, whether it be by the aid of the theological ladder, or by passing between the pillars of Strength and Establishment, or by wandering in darkness, beset on all sides by dangers, or by travelling, weary, and worn, over rough and rugged roads—whatever be the direction of our journey, or how accomplished, light and truth, the Urim and Thummim, are the ultimate objects of our search and our labor as Freemasons.

"The equilateral triangle was adopted by nearly all the nations of antiquity as a symbol of the Deity. The Egyptians, for instance, considered it as the representative of the great principle of animated existence. Among the Hebrews it was often used as a symbol of the tetragrammaton, and in masonry it retains the same signification, being the symbol of the Grand Architect of the Universe and Bestower of Light, its three sides representing the Past, the Present and the Future, all of which are contained in the eternal existence of Jehovah."

"Masonic Monthly." Boston, U.S.A. No. 65, for May.

We welcome again our old friend the Masonic Monthly, the editor of which speaks out boldly on the negro question, and we are glad to find that his sentiments are in perfect accord not merely with our own, but with those of all enlightened members of the Craft. Bro. Evans writes as follows:—

When the Masonic descendants of the black men to whom the Grand Lodge of England legally and properly gave a charter in 1784, since and to this time ostracised as Masons in the United States by their white brethren on the pretext of irregularity of organisation, but really by an unmasonic prejudice against the race to which they belong,—when these men venture to petition the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts for recognition as Masons, then must war be pronounced against them also by the men who cry "Let us have peace," and war against all who dared to say, investigate, and, if all found right, recognise.

Bro. Findel, of Leipzig, contributes a first letter on Freemasonry in Germany, France, and England, in which the worthy brother comments on the fact that "American and English Masonic periodicals do not give reports on Masonic affairs in Germany, France," &c. He will find, however, that THE FREEMASON is not obnoxious to this charge. Bro. Findel's language respecting the spurious Rite of Memphis is quite as strong as our own was recently:—

There was in existence in France an absurd Rite, an offspring of human vanity and nonsense, and a very modern invention, called the "Rite of Memphis," of ninety-nine degrees. To this Rite belonged some French lodges, to the honour of which it must be confessed, that they have changed this Rite for the French.

The following will be found interesting, and proves the correctness of our opinions respecting the African Lodge at Boston:—

LETTER FROM LONDON.

The writer of the following London letter, a well-known correspondent of our journal, has returned to this country, and has verified with his own voice what he has therein set down with his pen. It is strange, but true, that crows and other black things will come home to roost. The "highest Masonic authority in the world" has frequently announced that it was Lord Montague and not Montague who issued the commission to Henry Price, under which it is claimed that organized Masonry in Massachusetts originated. We have ourselves in former volumes more than once asserted that it was Montague, and not Montacute. The coat of arms of the Montacute hung up in our Boston Temple is against us; but our correspondent assures us that we are right,—that the records, the original records, of the Grand Lodge of England, which with his own eyes he has seen, says Montague, not Montacute. The escutcheon will have to come down. The herald's book will have to be studied once more. We are sorry, on account of the expense; but, on account of historical truth, let us have a change. It is exceedingly funny. But in company with the writer of the following letter, we examined a copy of the "English Peerage," which our Boston readers may also examine for themselves at Piper's in Washington-street, and find that the title of Montacute became extinct in the year 1361, and will not be able to find that it was ever revived. This is another pill for "the highest Masonic authority in the world" to put in his pipe the next time he smoketh. Then about that omission of the date, our correspondent makes a very damaging exposure of the way in which the "highest Masonic authority in the world" makes up history for the Masons of America. In this we think that same "highest authority," &c., has exhibited a species of immorality which the speculative Scotch Rite and High Degreeism might be able to explain away, but which simple Master Masonry must, in the strongest manner, condemn. The "highest authority," &c., is a member of the Committee on the petition of the coloured Masons of Massachusetts. Let that Committee see to it, and purge itself in its report which some time in the future it ought to make, by showing that such histories as "the highest authority" makes are not its guides. Your report, whenever it comes, will be closely scrutinised.—[En. Masonic Monthly.]

London, April 23rd, 1869.

Bro. EVANS.—You doubtless recollect the letter of the Grand Secretary of England published in the article "Negro Lodges," in the Feb. No. of Bro. C. W. Moore's Magazine. You remember in the article I then wrote for the American Freemason, I intimated my doubt with regard to a paragraph in the said letter, where Bro. Hervey was made to state that "Henry Price was Grand Master of America from 1733 to 17—." And I then further asked Bro. Moore why he did not at the same time ask Bro. Hervey to enlighten us whether it was Lord Montague or Montacute who granted the commission to Henry Price in 1733.

Well, then, shortly after my arrival here, I called on Bro. Hervey, and am glad to state that I met with a truly brotherly reception. Every facility was afforded me to clear up that, though unimportant, yet vexed question. I was permitted to examine the records of the Grand Lodge of England. Neither the names of Montacute, nor that of Henry Price, could I find there; but I did see that Montague was elected Grand Master in 1732. This point being settled, it will now become the duty of the present Grand Master of Massachusetts to have the name and arms of Lord Montacute erased from the Grand East of the Boston Masonic Temple, and either substitute that of Montague, or not, as he may deem proper.

But that is not all. You remember the brother from Worcester County, who objected to the naming of a lodge "Montacute Lodge," and how he was bluffed and pooh-poohed by the last Grand Master and Grand Secretary when he remonstrated and protested against the name of Montacute. Now, as there can be no doubt of the correctness of the said brother's position, I think they are in duty bound to rename the said lodge accordingly.

Having cleared up that question, I next asked Bro. Hervey the meaning of that dubious part of the letter, viz. "Henry Price was Grand Master of America from 1733 to 17—." Here Bro. Hervey expressed his surprise at Bro. Moore's mis-stating his letter. Bro. H. showed me the copy of the said letter. The copy was taken with the usual process of a copying press, and it read thus: "Henry Price was Grand Master of America from 1713 to 1804, since which time his name disappears." When I pointed out to Bro. Hervey that the statement was erroneous, that Henry Price died in 1775, he said, "That may be so, but it was the duty of Bro. Moore to have had the letter printed as it was written, and then he might have corrected my error." I could not very well defend Bro. Moore's conduct. I might have pleaded that 1783 might be mistaken for 1733, though even that would have been difficult to do; but how to find an excuse for mistaking "1804" for "17—" was entirely out of my power.

I must now explain the cause of Bro. Hervey's mistake. When the three categorical questions of Bro. Moore reached Bro. H., he naturally turned to the minutes of the Grand Lodge, 1733. There, as already stated, the name of Price was not to be found. The next thing Bro. H. consulted was the "Freemasons' Almanac," 1783. Therein he found that Henry Price was G.M. of America. He then followed up the successive almanacs until 1804, when Price was still G.M.; but in 1805 his name disappears. Bro. H. further informed me, that he has, since his letter to Bro. Moore was written, examined the almanacs back to 1770, in all of which copies Price reigns supreme over the American Masons. Indeed, I do not know whether, if Bro. Hervey had looked up the almanacs still further back, he might not have found Henry Price G.M. from the very origin of that publication; and this is but an additional proof that there could have been no correspondence carried on during the last century, between the G.L. of England and the lodges of the colonies; for otherwise, that error would not have been repeated for so many successive years in such a publication. It is evident that either the first projector of the almanac, in 1754, or a little later, wishing to furnish a list of Masonic information to his subscribers, very naturally must have asked the then "greatest masonic authority in the world" as to who was the G.M. of America, and received for answer, "Henry Price." So, either himself or his successor continued Price in office nearly thirty years after his death. But, in 1805, either suspecting that the longevity of Price was already extended beyond the duration allotted to humanity, or, may be, having received some dim information that Price and his Grand Lodge seceded from the G.L. of England, the name was thenceforth discontinued.

I next asked Bro. Hervey the period when the English G.L. erased the American Lodges from its list. Bro. H. replied, that he had no doubt that all the American Lodges were erased from the English register at the same time when the African Lodge were erased, viz., 1813.

In the course of our conversation, Bro. Hervey expressed his firm opinion, that the members of the African Lodge were as legally entitled to visit English Lodges, as the members of any other American Lodges.

To-day I paid a second visit to the Grand Secretary of the G.L. of England, and was permitted to see the first record of the said Grand Lodge. It begins with "June 24, 1723. The Rt. Hon. Francis Earl of Dalkeith, Grand Master." I have also been permitted to go through the whole building, and through the adjoining building, called Freemasons' Tavern; but as I hope, very shortly to return home, I must leave its description, and other interesting matters, for a future time.

Fraternally yours,

JACOB NORTON.

We shall look out with hopeful expectation for the next number of the Masonic Monthly, a magazine which we can heartily commend to our numerous subscribers in the United Kingdom, and on the Continent of Europe.

A MASONIC HYMN.

Unto Thee, great God, belong
Mystic rites and sacred song!
Lowly bending at thy shrine,
We hail thy Majesty divine!
Glorious Architect above,
Source of Light, and source of Love,
Here thy light and love prevail—
Hail! Almighty Master, hail!

Whilst in yonder regions bright,
The Sun by day, the Moon by night,
And the Stars that gild the sky,
Blazon forth thy praise on high—
Join, O Earth, and as you roll
From East to West, from pole to pole
Lift to Heaven your grateful lays;
Join the universal praise.

Warmed by thy benignant grace,
Sweet Friendship link'd the human race
Pity lodged within her breast,
Charity became her guest,
There the naked raiment found;
Sickness, balsam for its wound;
Sorrow, comfort; hunger, bread;
Strangers, there, a welcome shed.

Still to us, O God, dispense
Thy divine benevolence!
Teach the tender tear to flow,
Melting at a Brother's woe!
Like Samaria's son, that we
Blest with boundless charity,
To the admiring world may prove
They dwell in God who dwell in Love.

A MASONIC PRAYER.

O, Being of Beings! prime Spring of Knowledge! sprung from Thyself, before Time knew his rise! existent with Eternity! omnipotently great! whose span extends beyond the bounds of space; and step outruns Infinity herself! O God! all Nature's Lord! whose incomprehensible might creative, rose from nothing, inert matter!—thence formed, O Architect Divine, a fabric vast, beyond conception's eye to view! The universal mass; chaotic heap! then, how? Thou giv'st to matter instinctive energy to, through attractive combination, huge concrete rise of varied forms!—thence, organizing part, gav'st power thereto of vegetative growth for life! and—thence, to part, exalted high, a power of animated will, volition, gave'st—this done; Thou further went'st and formed a man; from Thy all-bounteous will, with reason! an attribute most like Thyself! a spark divine! for which—this blessing great!—good God, accept our grateful thanks! and grant, that with each sense, we may with admiration view thy vast stupendous work throughout this mundane spot, we here behold, of the vast universal whole!—Give us, good God, with reason's increase, a grateful soul to thank the fountain-source thereof, Thyself! May sun, may moon, may star, yea, may all free-accepted Geometry unite in one loud shout of praise to their great Architect divine; till time shall be no more! all Nature, cry Amen! Amen!—Bro. SPRY, LL.D.

MASONIC MYSTERIES.

The following letter, which on the principle of audiam alteram partem we print, appeared in the Morning Advertiser a few days ago:—

(To the Editor.)

"Sir,—It will be in the recollection of those who take an interest in Freemasonry that, on the occasion of the installation of the Grand Master of Nottingham, he said, 'It is my determination to go deeper into the mysteries of the Craft;' and in another part of the speech he said, 'There are many people now-a-days, I regret to state, who taunt us about being a secret society, and that being the case, that we may have evil secrets. It is, therefore, our bounden duty to show them by our outward actions that there never was a baser libel upon us. Our secrets are founded upon the purest principles of religion.'

"Now, sir, without meaning the slightest offence to the Craft, I beg leave to remark that it seems very strange that men professing to act on the true principles of religion, brotherly love, and universal benevolence, should think a system of secrecy necessary for the accomplishment of their laudable designs, because it is positively antagonistic to the spirit of benevolence to keep a secret from mankind the publication of which would diffuse any sort of good among our fellow-creatures.

"A true philanthropist making a discovery of anything for the good of the people, would not think of turning it to account by imparting the secret only to those who paid him a fee for permission to make a vow that they would not disclose it, but he would generously give it to the world for the world's benefit; and if the Masons' secret is good for anything they ought to do the same; if it is not, they should not take oaths on trivial matters, as religion strictly prohibits swearing except when oaths are required by legal authority; so that, in reality, in this respect, it is opposed to the principles of religion.

"If the Masons were to keep the whole of their proceedings secret, and not allow them to be published in the daily newspapers, they would perhaps be entitled to pass without observation; but when we see day after day, their banquets and their speeches set forth in the public Press, they become popular topics, and challenge criticism like other subjects in the newspapers; at least I suppose that Freemasonry is not screened from national controversy; if it is, it argues that there is but little reason to be advanced in support of it, for it cannot be denied that the day is gone by for mystic symbols and silly incantations, which, like the Cock-lane ghost and spirit-rapping, are only worth remembering for their glaring absurdity.

"But the Masons, judging from what we read, not only revel in 'mysteries,' but claim a sort of confederate monopoly in universal benevolence, although at the same time we know that in all cases they give a decided preference to a brother Mason, which is certainly a very one-sided sort of universal benevolence, because any one not a Mason, with a shilling to spare, meeting two poor hungry creatures, would give them sixpence a piece. A free and accepted Mason meeting two persons under similar circumstances, one of whom being of the craft and able to give the sign, would receive ninepence, and the other equally distressed, and may be the more deserving of the two, would only get threepence; and he would be bound to act thus, as a brother must have a preference.

"As I said before, if they kept their rules and regulations to themselves, the non-masonic portion of mankind would have no manner of right to interfere on the proceeding; but as they are present to the public in print, they can have no just cause to complain if those who object to secret associations as being at variance with the enlightened spirit of the age, deprecate a system of 'mysteries,' and when we read of the Almighty described as 'The Great Architect of the Universe,' we, as rational men, denounce the application of a mechanical title to the Deity, as if his works were produced by the line and rule of human labour. It is presumptuous.

"As long as men please to unite in societies for mutual benefit or amusement, which in no way interferes with the progress of reason and common sense of the nation, so long may they claim exemption from all interference; for example, 'The Foresters,' 'The Odd Fellows,' and many others, not forgetting a very numerous body known as 'The Society of Antediluvian Buffaloes,' and the members consider themselves buffaloes, and are addressed as such from the hour of their installation. The principal of the herd is styled 'Primo.' This is merely mentioned in order to show, as far as we know, no society, excepting the Masons, swear their members to secrecy, which, as before remarked, is contrary to religion, law, and right.

"These few observations are made solely with the view of eliciting facts which may remove all unfavourable impressions concerning the Craft; and I respectfully ask you, sir, as the editor of an impartial journal, to place them within view of the public, in order that, if right, their claims to consideration may be rationally discussed; if wrong, their fallacies dispassionately exposed.

"I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

"June 9, 1869.

MEETING OF THE PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF KENT.

The preparatory meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Kent was held on Saturday afternoon, at the Albion Hotel, Ramsgate, on which occasion there was a large attendance of Freemasons from all parts of Kent, every district in the province being well represented. Lord Holmesdale, M.P., Provincial Grand Master of Kent, presided, and among those present were Bros. Dobson, Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Kent; Thorpe, Provincial Grand Treasurer; Wates, Provincial Grand Secretary; Warne, Provincial Grand Assistant Secretary; Patten, P.G.S.B., Secretary to the Freemasons' Girls' School; Snowden, P.P.J.G.W.; Twyman, P.G.S.B.; Snow, P.P.G.S.W.; Turtle (W.M. 184), Wyles (W.M. 1050), Boits, P.P.A.D.C.; Boys, P.D.G.P.M.; Cramp (W.M. 429), Burfield (W.M. 20), Palmer (W.M. 913), Mackney (W.M. 290), Sheer (W.M. 77), Fleming (W.M. 158), Boys (W.M. 127), Kite (W.M. 503), Newsom (W.M. 1223), Paget, P.M., P.G.O., Watson (1050), and numerous other brethren.

The Grand Secretary announced that the returns had been received from the whole of the lodges in Kent, the aggregate number of subscribing members in the province being 1350. The Grand Treasurer's accounts showed the available fund on the general account to be £377 13s. 6d., and on the charity account £280.

On the motion of Bro. Dobson it was resolved unanimously to present a donation of twenty guineas from each of the following lodges to the Freemasons' Boys' School—namely, Faversham, Gravesend, Erith, and Canterbury. The two lodges having the highest number of subscribing members—Ramsgate and Gravesend—received each twenty guineas to be presented in their names to the Freemasons' School for Girls. The sum of £50 was also voted to the Old Men's Asylum for decayed Freemasons, and £20 from the Grand Lodge Funds to the 'Zetland Commemoration Fund.'

On the initiation of the Worshipful Master and Brethren of Lodge 184, it was unanimously decided to hold the Provincial Grand Meeting at Brompton, Chatham, on Wednesday, July 14th, the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company promising to convey Freemasons attending the meeting at single fares from any station on their line.

At the close of the formal business of the day the brethren present partook of a sumptuous banquet, under the presidency of the P.G.M., who was supported by most of the Present and Past Provincial Grand Officers, and the various Masters and Wardens of lodges.

MASONRY AND POLITICS.

The enemies of the Masonic fraternity have ever tried to arouse popular prejudice against this time-honoured Institution, by raising the clamour of the political demagogue, that, as a social organization, we are dangerous to government. This charge is without foundation, as is evident from the past history and present position of Masons in relation to the respective governments under which they live, the world over. Masons have never been a revolutionary people, and Masonry as a social institution, is Conservative in its teachings and its practices. It takes no position in politics, and prohibits the introduction of political questions into its discussions. It has existed under every form of government known to history, and done its work for society peacefully, but successfully, under the administration of all the great political parties in Europe and America. It teaches obedience to the laws, submission to authority, and reverence for the usages of the past. It is therefore impossible for an institution that teaches the practice of such social and political virtues to favor political revolutions and social outbreaks, that would disturb the peace of society or sap the foundation of government. It is surprising how any rational or sane mind could exist for a moment, the base slander circulated by our enemies to awaken popular prejudice against us. Are not the husbands, brothers, fathers, sons, friends and neighbours of these individuals Masons? Do they not all testify that there is nothing in either the teaching or practice of Masonry at war with our republican institutions, or that will in any way endanger our civil, political, and religious liberties? We receive their testimony on all other subjects, nor can we constantly refuse to receive it when they positively affirm that such is the character of the Masonic Institution. Besides, would it not be a strange phenomenon that Methodists and Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians, Quakers and Catholics, Lutherans and Universalists, Democrats and Whigs, though they are opposed to each other on nearly all other subjects, should league together as nations to undermine our Republican institutions and subvert our government? No sane mind can believe this possible. It would be a social miracle. But if Masonry be opposed to our government, if its influence on society is calculated to endanger our liberties, how did it happen that all the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the framers of our Republican Constitution were Masons, but six? If Masonry be opposed to Republican Government, how shall we account for the fact that all the generals in the American army were Masons? These facts should for ever silence objections to Masonry. Really and truly, Masonry as a benevolent institution, has no political character, has no political purpose, and does not aim or try to exert any political influence. Her work is a higher and nobler work than that of the politician and statesman.—The Square and Compass, U.S.A.

THE TALLEST FREEMASON IN THE WORLD.—An emergency meeting of the Lodge Clyde, No. 408, was held within the Hall, 170, Buchanan-street, Glasgow, on Thursday, 10th inst. The lodge was opened by the R.W.M., John Buchanan, assisted by Bro. William Lindsay, S.W., George Ferguson, acting J.W., Robert Burns, Thomson Chaplain. Major Ole Andreas Hansen, of the United States army, a native of Norway, having passed the ballot, was initiated, and passed the degree of F.C.; and on the lodge being raised, he was raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The ceremony was very impressing and ably performed by Bro. Thomas M. Campbell, P.M., Proxy Master, 489; Bro. James Wallace, P.M. 360, Proxy Master 440, acting Deacon. We believe Bro. Hansen is the tallest Freemason in the world, being nearly eight feet high, and thirty-three stone weight.

RAILWAYS.—No one can view with greater horror the desecration of the fine rustic scenery of our dear old England, than he whose hand has penned these pages. I pity, from my inmost soul, that man or woman who possesses no healthy love for our heather-clad hills, our rural dales, and our pleasant plains, studded with comfortable farmsteads and cosy cottages, with "green fields to the very back door;" I have sickened at the sight of once-pleasant watercourses, where the clear rivulet erst wimpled, and the troutlet disported, now polluted with the stinking refuse of printworks, dyehouses, and factories, and the waste of towns; and I have sighed for the time when our great "hives of industry" shall possess a smokeless atmosphere, and turn their sewerage to profitable account; but I must confess, I like to see the steam ascending from a railway train, as the swift locomotive glides onward, past village and grange; and I think our great poet, Wordsworth, was never much farther from the mark than when he wrote that well-known sonnet denouncing the introduction of a railway into the Lake districts.—The History of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, by Bro. GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDDELL, F.S.A. Scot. and Newc., &c.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths.

BIRTH.

WALTERS.—On the 18th June, at 372, New Cross-road, Deptford, the wife of Bro. Frederick Walters of a daughter.

Answers to Correspondents.

All communications for THE FREEMASON should be written legibly, on one side of the paper only, and, if intended for insertion in the current number must be received not later than 10 o'clock a.m. on Thursdays, unless in very special cases. The name and address of every writer must be sent to us in confidence.

A STEWARD.—We believe the Inauguration Jewels will be ready in July.

P.Z.—We are glad to be able to assure you that brethren serving as Stewards to any two of the Charities, and qualifying as Life Governors, will, in future, be entitled to wear the Charity Jewel. The Grand Master so decided at the last Grand Lodge, although, by some means or other, the reporters did not record his remark.

ALPHA.—The 43rd rule of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution reads thus:—"The accounts of receipts and disbursements of the Male Funds and of the Widows' Fund, shall be kept separate and distinct, and a general statement of the finances of the Institution shall be annually prepared; and, after having been duly audited, shall, together with a report of the proceedings of the Committee of Management, be presented to the Annual General Meeting in May, and to Grand Lodge in June following." It is, to our judgement, perfectly clear that the objection to the reception of the report, raised by Bro. Savage at the last Quarterly Communication, was wholly untenable as the rule (which has been sanctioned by Grand Lodge) expressly states that the report shall be presented to the Grand Lodge in June, and there is, consequently, no necessity whatever for its prior submission to the Board of Masters.

THE LONDON MASONIC SEASON.

THE summer brings with it, for metropolitan brethren, a cessation from Masonic labors. Lodge after lodge closes, and, until October, as a rule, few meetings are held in London. Master and warden, fellow-craft and apprentice, alike lay aside the apron and don the tourist's suit, in quest of well-earned relaxation by the sea shore or on the breezy hill. At this period of comparative leisure let us take a brief review of the season which has just closed, and which has been an eventful one in many respects. Not only have we had to record the birth of several new lodges in the metropolis, but the prosperity of the Craft has been still further evinced by the immense sums contributed to the Masonic Charities at their annual festivals. We have also seen the completion of our magnificent Masonic temple in Great Queen-street, and witnessed its inauguration under circumstances eminently auspicious and gratifying. Our Grand Master has completed his quarter of a century's sway over the Craft, and has been re-installed as the ruler of English Masonry amidst demonstrations of unabated esteem and affection.

Moreover, within the last few days, we have welcomed into the ranks of English Freemasonry the Prince of Wales, who, we trust, will emulate the royal Sussex in true and earnest devotion to the sublime principles of the Order, and prove himself the First Freemason, as well as the first gentleman in the empire. We have not lost through death any very prominent member of the Craft during the past Masonic season, nor have we had to lament over the extinction of lodges or the secession of brethren. In a word, the condition of Freemasonry in England at the present time is highly satisfactory, and the Order bids fair to increase both in strength and influence. Turning to Scotland, we find that under the vigorous rule of the Earl Dalhousie, Freemasonry maintains its high prestige in the land of the Gael, while our Irish brethren are progressing in spite of the unscrupulous opposition of Cardinal Cullen and his priesthood.

It is much to be desired, however, that the ties which bind the Craft together should be still more closely drawn, by the adoption of something like uniformity of working in the three kingdoms. We are aware that the establishment of an orthodox and recognized ritual for the Craft degrees will be a herculean task; and, doubtless, this feeling exercises a deterrent influence against making the attempt. But, surely, when the object to be attained is so great and so praiseworthy, qualified brethren willing to devote time and attention to the subject will come forward and lend their assistance. Now that the Masonic London season is over, there is more leisure for conference and discussion, and we hope yet to see the matter dealt with by the authorities of the several Grand Lodges of the United Kingdom.

It is a matter of congratulation that the importance of the Masonic Press is now becoming generally and thoroughly realized in England; our brethren in America, it is well known, have long appreciated its value, and we are proud to acknowledge that the support which has been extended by the Craft to our own Journal is a gigantic stride in the same direction.

To all our friends whose Masonic labours in the metropolis have now temporarily ceased—we earnestly wish the refreshment of renovated health and spirits, to engage again with renewed vigor in the work of beautifying and adorning the Masonic edifice.

THE RED CROSS OF ROME AND CONSTANTINE.

THE annual report of the Executive Committee of the Imperial, Ecclesiastical, and Military Order of Knights of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, for 1868-9, contains a record of the proceedings of the General Grand Conclave of the Order on March 6th, 1868; a statement of the accounts from date of re-organization in May, 1865, to March, 1869, showing a balance in favour of the general fund of £79 6s. 8d., and in the Grand Almoner's, or charity fund, £11 11s. 1d. We also gather the following statistical information from its pages:—

The Grand Council consists of 12 members. The Grand Senate is also composed of 12 members. There are 20 local Inspectors General in the United Kingdom and foreign parts. The Knights of the Grand Cross are 9 in number. There are 15 officers of the Grand College of Viceroys, and 18 representatives of the 18 Conclaves acting under the Grand Council. The K.H.S. are represented by the Patriarchal Council, which is composed of 18 members. In the appendix the form of petition for a charter is given, and two memorial pages are allotted to Sir Knts. Wm. Turner, and Dr. Vincent Westlake Bates, G. Senators, who died during the year.

Brethren who may desire to make themselves acquainted with the progress of this ancient chivalric order, will do well to obtain this Report, which is published by Bro. G. Kenning, 3 and 4, Little Britain.

We are much pleased to announce that Bro. W. Wither Bramston Beach, M.P., has been appointed Prov. Grand Master for Hampshire, in succession to the late Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Lucius Curtis, Bart., K.C.B., and we are sure that Bro. Beach's appointment will give the greatest possible satisfaction to the Hampshire lodges and brethren generally.

Philolaus, a native of Crotona, and the scholar of Pythagoras, first taught publicly the diurnal motion of the earth round its axis, and its annual motion round the sun.—ANCIENT YORK LECTURER.

Can the degree of Most Excellent Master be obtained in England?—The two other intermediate degrees, between M.M. and R.A., worked in America are given here, but I believe the M.E.M. is not.—X. P.

Nehemiah, a Jew, was cup-bearer to Artaxerxes Longimanus. He came to Jerusalem A.M. 3609, and having finished the temple, at the dedication thereof, the sacred fire, which had been hidden by Jeremiah, was found; as likewise, they say, the ark of the covenant, and the altar of incense. He returned a second time to Jerusalem about 3629.—SON OF SALATHIEL.

The 1722 Constitutions and the High Grades.—Bro. W. J. Hughan very kindly writes to me to say that Bro. Rd. Spencer has the "Old Constitutions" printed in 1722, and that he (Bro. Hughan) had seen them, and taken extracts from them, but that there is no mention of High Grades in them. I presume therefore that the allusions made have been to some low country reprint of the 1722 Constitutions. The learned Brother Dr. Leeson would confer a great obligation upon the Order, if he would set our minds at ease on this subject and the 1721 Warrant of James III., by giving full particulars. Bro. Hughan adds that this 1722 pamphlet is very similar to a 1728 one he is reprinting.—JOHN YARKER, Manchester.

Red Cross of Constantine.—I had hoped to have seen Bro. Lambert's reply to R.W.L. on the Red Cross and the Rite of Bro. Rosa. Following the usual authorities, it is considered that about 1728-9, the Chevalier Ramsay invented three degrees of Knights of St. Andrew (which he proposed to our G.A.). These were an innovation upon the rite of the Chapter of Arras, and also differed from the York rite, but if the account given by Bro. Dr. Oliver of his three degrees are reliable, they could not have originated the Royal Arch-Templar rite of York, the traditions of which they rather seem to follow. About 1754, Baron Hunde (a member of the High Grades of the Jesuit Chapter of Clermont), established his Templar rite of seven degrees, and from this in a very short time branched the rite of Clerks of Relaxed Observance, who being all members of the Church of Rome, added three more degrees, including the Red Cross, which we are informed is found also in the Swedish rite of twelve degrees.

Queries.—1. What is Oliver's authority for Ramsay's proposal, and was it really so far back as 1728-9, and did it contain a Templar Order? Oliver seems to imply that it did not.

2. Can any of the Jesuit Brothers (Knights of the Order of Constantine) or of the Romish rite of Clerks of Relaxed Observance, be shown to have had Romish authority for the revival of the Red Cross? Are any of the names known?

PAPERS ON MASONRY.

BY A LEWIS.

XI.—MASONRY AND SWEDENBORG.

"For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracle of God."—Hebrews v. 12.

Since the initiation of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales in Sweden much curiosity has been expressed in many Masonic quarters as to the nature of the rite according to which his admission took place, the numbers of degrees or steps not corresponding with those adopted in Johannite Masonry.

It would appear that two, if not three, rites savouring of the high grades are worked in Sweden; the first culminating in the Honorary Knighthood of Charles XIII., the second professing to be instituted according to the principles of that remarkable and enigmatical man Emanuel Swedenborg, and the third being an adaptation of the Illuminism of Avignon, with additions from the Rite of Swedenborg, known as the Rite of Zinnendorff.

The Swedish rite proper, as worked under the sanction of the Grand Lodge of Sweden, consists of twelve degrees, the fifth of which ennobles the possessor of it in a social and political sense. These degrees are respectively—1, Apprentice; 2, Fellow Craft; 3, Master; 4, Apprentice and Fellow Craft of St. Andrew; 5, Master of St. Andrew; 6, Brother Stuart; 7, Favourite Brother of Solomon; 8, Favourite Brother of St. John, or White Ribbon; 9, Favourite Brother of St. Andrew, or Violet Ribbon; 10, Member of the Chapter; 11, Dignitary of the Chapter; and 12, Reigning Grand Master. I do not know whether any modifications have taken place in this arrangement, but perhaps the degree of Brother Stuart has been in some instances replaced by the Order of Charles XIII., a distinction existing since 1811. At any rate, this last was established in honour of Freemasonry. The manifesto constituting the Order contains the following decree:—"To give this (the Masonic) Society a proof of our gracious sentiments towards it, we will and ordain, that its first dignitaries, to the number which we may determine, shall, in future, be decorated with the most intimate proof of our confidence, and which shall be for them a distinctive mark of the highest dignity." There are altogether twenty-seven knights, and the reigning sovereign of Sweden is the Perpetual Grand Master. It is evidently rather an honourable distinction, like other sovereign orders, than a symbolical degree.

Whether Swedenborg himself was ever a Mason, I think, may be fairly answered in the negative. Neither the brilliant and eloquent biography of Dr. Garth Wilkinson, the analytical work of Professor Bush, nor the exhaustive and intensely critical and searching memoir recently published by Mr. William White, lead us to any such conclusion. Whatever opinions may be held as to the theological value of the singular series of hermeneutical works of the Swedish philosopher, it is certain that they contain many things easily applicable for the purposes of a ritual. But the absolute actual history of the establishment of the Rite of Swedenborg appears to be this. About the year 1760, at a time when Swedenborg was engaged in publishing his Arcana Cælestia (the first volume of which appeared in 1749) and his other voluminous writings and treatises, a Benedictine monk, named Perneti, together with a Polish nobleman, the Baron Gabrianca, established a rite called the Illuminati of Avignon, mingling in this rite the reveries of Boehme with those of the Swede. In 1783 this rite was reformed and set up de novo by the Marquis de Thorné, and from it arose what is now known as Swedenborg's Rite. This rite had the six grades of Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master Theosophite, Illuminated Theosophite, Blue Brother, and Red Brother. It is said to be still practiced in some Swedish lodges.

The Rite of Zinnendorff was a further adaptation of the philosophy and theosophy of Swedenborg. Count Zinnendorff, its founder, was principal physician to the Emperor Charles VI. This system is divided into seven degrees, and these into three sections, the first of which comprises Johannite or Blue Masonry, the second Red Masonry, with the (4) Scotch Apprentice and Fellow Craft, and the (5) Scotch Master; the third, denominated Capitular Masonry, consists of the (6) Favorite of St. John, and (7) Elected Brother.

It may appear a paradox to say that Swedenborg, with all his mysticism, was anything but a mystic, but such was truly the case. That his works contain veiled allusions, even in the theosophical portions, to secrets in nature which his early philosophical career had opened to him, there can be little doubt to any one carefully reading his works. And that he was fully aware of the existence of the institution of Freemasonry cannot also be doubted. Before, however, proceeding to prove this by quoting a remarkable vision, I wish to cite here a singular narrative to be found in Nicæphorus Callistus (Book x. c. 133), in reference to the discovery of a portion of the Ancient Word under the foundations of the Temple of Jerusalem. At the time, he says, when the foundation was laid, one of the stones to which the lowest part of the foundation was attached was removed from its place, and discovered the mouth of a cavern which had been hollowed out of the rock. Now, since the workmen could not see to the bottom on account of its depth, the overseers of the work, wishing to be perfectly acquainted with the place, let down one of their number by means of a long rope into the cavern. When he came to the bottom he found himself in water as high as his ankles, and examining every part of the cavern, he found it to be square, so far as he could ascertain by feeling. On searching near the cavern's mouth he discovered a short pillar, very little higher than the water, and having placed his hand upon it he found lying there a book, carefully folded up in linen. This book he put up in his vest, and was drawn up by the rope to his companions. On producing the book the company were astonished to find it perfectly fresh and clean, although it had probably lain in the vault for many ages. But on opening it, not only the Jews present but the Greeks also, were amazed at finding it to begin with—"In the beginning was the Word," &c.

I give the story just as it is reported. It is evidently a distortion of some legend, as no Greeks were present at the foundation of either the first or second temple, unless under Greeks we are to understand Javanim or Ionians, i.e., Tyrians or Phœnicians. Some authors, indeed, argue—as does the writer whence I extract the legend, "Book of God," London, without date or author's name)—that this was the primeval Apocalypse, and that the gospel of St. John quoted that document, now known as the Revelations. Be that as it may, the legend is well worthy of preservation.

To return, however, to the Swedish seer. Whether he truly believed himself to have witnessed the following scene, I know not. To my own mind it would rather appear that he wished to allude to what he conceived in his mind's eye to be the interior ceremonies of a Masonic lodge, and certainly the statement is both curious and striking. That he was constantly in the habit of alluding to the affairs passing in the world around him, numberless passages show, and this might have been one method of veiling his opinions.

"In departing from this place," he says, "I found myself with spirits and angels who had passed their mortal life in Great Tartary. They informed me they had from all antiquity possessed a Divine Word, which regulated their worship, and which was entirely by correspondences [i.e., symbols]. These people, who worshipped Ieue, or Jehovah, only—some as an invisible God, and some as an invisible Power—dwelt in the spiritual world, upon a plain very much elevated, in the southern regions bordering upon the eastern. They allow no Christian to be among them; but if any one enter their territories, they retain him, and never suffer him to depart again. They live separate, because they possess another Word or Scripture. Some angels then told me that Moses took from the Sacred Book of these people the first chapter of Genesis, which treats of the creation of the garden of Eden, &c. While meditating upon the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet, of which the Revelations speak, an angel appeared to me and said, 'Come, I will show you into a place where you shall see those that the Word denotes by the false prophets, and by the Beast issuing out of the earth with two horns like a lamb, and speaking as a dragon.' I followed him, and saw a great body of people, in the midst of which were prelates who taught that faith alone in the merits of Jesus Christ was sufficient to salvation; that in order to govern the simple, it was necessary to preach good works, though they were not necessary to salvation. One of these prelates invited me to enter his temple, that I might see an image which represented his faith and that of his adherents. I accordingly entered the temple, which was magnificent, and in the midst of which a woman was represented clothed in purple, holding in her right hand a golden crown piece, and in her left a chain of pearls. The statue and the representation were only fantastic representations; for these infernal spirits, by closing the interior degree and opening the exterior only, are able at the pleasure of their imagination to represent magnificent objects. Perceiving that they were illusions, I prayed to the Lord. Immediately the interior of my spirit was opened, and I saw, instead of the superb temple, a tottering house, open to the weather from the top to the bottom. In the place of the woman-statue, an image was suspended having the head of a dragon, the body of a leopard, the feet of a bear, and the mouth of a lion—in short, it was the Beast rising out of the sea, as described in the Apocalypse xiii. 2. In the place of a park there was a marsh full of frogs, and I was informed that under this marsh there was a great HEWN STONE, beneath which the WORD was entirely hidden. Afterwards I said to the prelate, who was the fabricator of these illusions, 'Is that your temple?' 'Yes,' replied he, 'it is.' Immediately his interior sight was opened, like mine, and he saw what I did. 'How now, what do I see?' cried he. I told him that it was the effect of the celestial light, which discovers the interior quality of everything, and which taught him at that very moment, what faith separated from good works was. While I was speaking, a wind blowing from the east destroyed the temple and the image, dried up the marsh, and discovered the stone under which the Sacred Word was concealed. A genial warmth, like that of the spring, descended from heaven; and in the place of the temple we saw a tent, the exterior of which was very plain. I looked into the interior of it, and there I saw the foundation stone beneath which the Sacred Word was concealed, ornamented with precious stones, the splendour of which diffusing itself over the walls of the temple diversified the colours of the paintings, which represented cherubims. The angels perceiving me to be filled with admiration, told me that I should see still greater wonders than these. They were then permitted to open the third heaven, inhabited by the celestial angels who dwell in love. All on a sudden the splendour of a light of fire caused the temple to disappear, and left nothing to be seen but the Lord himself, standing upon the foundation stone—the Lord, who was the Word, such as he showed Himself. (Apocal. i. 13-16.) Holiness immediately filled all the interior of the spirit of the angels, upon which they made an effort to prostrate themselves, but the Lord shut the passage to the light from the third heaven, opening the passage to the light of the second, which caused the temple to reappear with the tent in the midst."

The latter portion of this remarkable vision is, perhaps, the most interesting to Freemasons. I need hardly say why. The chorus of frogs reminds one of the frogs in the comedy of Aristophanes, and so points to the "ancient mysteries." At the same time it must be remarked that some have applied the sense of this vision purely to that section of Christians who exalt faith above works; in which case it would not apply to the sons of candour and the brotherhood of charity. But that partially there are points of contact between this vision and the legend reported by Nicæphorus cannot be denied.

No doubt, passages of this kind led ritual-makers of the last century to use much of Swedenborg's machinery, and, by ingenious dovetailing, produce something coherent, although of a character not suited to original traditions. I give them for what they may be worth.

CRYPTONYMUS.

P.S.—As to "Allegorical Sculptures in Mediæval Churches," Bro. "Leo," I am pleased to see, is a persistent critic. He will not let me have it all my own way. But, surely, his position is not very tenable, for now he has shifted his ground of attack, basing it, in his return to the assault, upon the practices of the Romish priests in the time of Luther. His very anecdote proves the necessity of Luther's protest which ended in the Reformation. It is very natural, that a monk brought up in the sombre and simple North should gaze with amazement and sorrow at the pedantic and idolatrous South, where the primeval Spirit had fallen before the Letter. To keep faith to the eye and lip, and break faith to the heart, marks an era in every institution becoming untrue to itself and its higher signification. But Bro. "Leo" cannot but see that the actions of prelates in the sixteenth century cannot explain the causes of certain carving completed in the thirteenth and fourteenth. There is another view which might be advanced with some show of reason. The ludicrous carvings might have been intended as solemn reproofs in stone to vice, in some cases; or as evidences of the heretical notions of fanatics, in others. A third way of accounting for them would be to ascribe their origin to the confused conceptions current in those days of classic symbolism which, as the works of demons, the builders of churches perpetuated in contrast to the new and growing Christian faith. But the Romish Church, differing widely from the primitive and pure Church, the centre of which was the British Islands, loved to adopt into its body corporate, all of Paganism that might render the transition from Polytheism more easy, in this following the ancient policy of the Roman people of the republic and the empire. Referring to Bro. "Leo's" anecdote, it might be worth while to discover the time of year in which such a circumstance took place, as in that case there is another explanation of it. The semi-paganized Popes would wink, with their infallibility, at heresy in high places, when combined with wit. For many other reasons, however, I retain my previously expressed opinions, as otherwise I can see little reason to be alleged for the continued hostility of the Romish Church, either in very remote times, through the butchery of Molay, to the anathema of Pius IX. (himself said to have been made a Freemason in Switzerland) hurled at the Fraternity in 1865, with a mild pendant in the form of Cardinal Cullen's letter in 1869. I would rather say, in termination of this long note, Fiat Lux in perpetuis! C.

DURING the Derby and Ascot Races, the police arrangements were admirably carried out by the Chief Superintendent, Bro. Mott, assisted by Bros. Grant, Graham, Fife, Roberts, Trycson, &c. Bro. Mott, previous to his leaving the Islington district, was presented by the inhabitants with an elegant and substantial testimonial, in testimony of the great esteem he was held in; and it was stated that a more worthy successor to the late Superintendent Walker (who had filled that post for 25 years) could not have been selected.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL. Mariner's Lodge, No. 249.—The last regular meeting of this lodge was held on Thursday evening, June 3rd, Bro. Geo. De la Perelle, W.M., in the chair. After the minutes of the previous lodge, and also the lodge of emergency held May 21st, were duly confirmed, the following persons were balloted for and declared duly elected, viz., Mr. Jonathan Sellers and Mr. D. T. McCullough for initiation, and Bro. Edwd. Denton for joining. Messrs. McCullough and Sellers being in attendance, as also Mr. William Cotter, duly elected March 4th, were then properly prepared, admitted in due form, and initiated into the mysteries and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. The vote of the lodge was then taken upon a motion of which notice had been given at the last regular meeting of the lodge. It was formally proposed this evening by Bro. E. Roberts, Secretary, seconded by Bro. Amos Walker, S.D., and carried unanimously, to the following effect:

"That a committee be formed with the following objects:—I. To investigate all cases of application for relief, and, through the Chairman, or in his absence the Vice-Chairman, or providing both are absent, by reference to minutes of said committee, to recommend to the General Lodge Meeting following, such cases, and to such extent, as they feel justified by the circumstances which transpire. II. To make enquiries and ascertain as far as possible if Candidates for Initiation, are fit and proper persons to be made Masons; and also, whether Candidates for joining, have left their previous lodge clear on the books, and with good repute. III. To perform such other duties as the lodge may, by resolution, decide to entrust to the labours of a committee.

"That the committee be elected annually by ballot, (in the same manner as those of W.M. and Treasurer,) and to consist of nine members, three to form a quorum; vacancies, as they arise, to be filled up by ballot in like manner, a notice of election being stated in circular issued for the General Lodge Meeting at which the election will take place. The committee to elect its own Chairman and Vice-Chairman. The Secretary of the lodge to be Secretary of the committee. The committee to make its own bye-laws. The committee to meet on the Thursday next preceding each General Lodge Night, to receive particulars of such applications (except in cases of extreme distress from members of our own lodge) as may have been sent in (no application to be received subsequently for such regular lodge meeting), and to reassemble on a subsequent evening, previous to said regular lodge meeting, to communicate to each other the result of their investigations, and to decide upon their recommendation to the brethren in Lodge assembled. The facts ascertained by enquiries, whether in cases of relief, initiation, or joining, to be used simply in connexion with the same or like cases; and, if adverse to the applicant, under no circumstances to be communicated to the outside world, and the proceedings of the committee to be kept secret, so as to prevent ill-feeling arising between members of the craft."

The lodge then proceeded to the election of a W.M. for the ensuing year, when, on the votes being taken, they were declared to be almost unanimous in favour of Bro. Pinnington, S.W., who was therefore declared duly elected. On the motion of Bro. Healing, P.M., seconded by Bro. Dr. Smith, Bro. Pearson was unanimously re-elected Treasurer; Bros. Dr. Smith and James Taylor were appointed to audit the accounts for the past year; Bros. Pearson, Treasurer, Goswell, S.D., and Dr. Smith were appointed, in addition to the W.M. and his Wardens, to act as a banquet committee. It was also resolved to admit ladies to the forthcoming banquet on the installation day, on the payment of 5s. each. It was resolved to vote a certain sum of money (in accordance with standing rule) towards the cost of a Past Master's jewel, about to be presented to Bro. De la Perelle, W.M. In accordance with a request from Bro. Healing, W.M. of the Neptune Lodge, 1264, it was resolved to grant the use of the lodge furniture to that lodge for a time. Bro. Banning, J.W., of 343, was present, and thanked the brethren for their vote of three guineas towards the Masonic Life Boat Fund. Mr. John Hayes, decorative painter, 251, Athol-street, was proposed for initiation; and Bro. Wm. J. Underwood, of 1021, as joining member. Nothing more appearing for the good of Masonry, the lodge was closed in the usual solemn manner.

Gresham Lodge, No. 869.—On Saturday, the 12th inst., the members of the Gresham Lodge met at the Four Swans, Waltham Cross, for the purpose of installing the W.M. for the ensuing year. The lodge was opened by Bro. Muggeridge, P.M., and Bro. Ethrington was raised by him, in a most eloquent and impressive manner; after which Bro. Lewis, having given proofs of his proficiency, was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. Bro. Walter E. Gompertz, S.W., and P.G.P. Herts, was then presented by Bro. Rook to the presiding W.M., and, having replied to the usual questions, was duly installed by Bro. Muggeridge in a most solemn and impressive manner; his addresses being listened to with marked attention and evident effect. After the newly-installed Master had been duly greeted, he proceeded to appoint the following Brethren his officers, Bros. Vallentine, P.M., Treas.; Swan, P.G.J.D. and P.M., Sec.; Dr. Bruce, S.W.; Forsyth, J.W.; J. E. Grocott, S.D.; Capt. Barnes, J.D.; Glover, I.G.; F. Copestick and W. E. Barnes, jun., Stewards; J. Copestick, O.; Ed. Farthing, D.C. Several names were then proposed for initiation, and the lodge closed in solemn form, the brethren then adjourned to a most sumptuous and handsomely laid out banquet. Amongst the visitors we noticed, Bro. Muggeridge, P.M., &c.; Dubois, P.M. 142, and S.D. 1216; Terry, P.M., Sims, Martin, Birdseye, P.M., Bryant, sen., Blake, and many brethren. After ample justice had been done to the good things provided and the cloth cleared, the W.M. rose and proposed the first toast, "The Queen and the Craft," and said that on this occasion as His Royal Highness had signified his intention to join in English Masonry and take his seat in Grand Lodge, he should also include the name of "His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales," which was duly honoured, as also that of the "Earl of Zetland, Grand Master of England, Earl De Grey and Ripon, and the rest of the Grand Officers," also "Bro. Wm. Stuart, P.G. Master, the Deputy G. Master, and the rest of the P.G. Officers." Bro. J. H. Thompson replied in a very affecting manner for the G. Officers, the W. Bro. Mitch, the I.P.M. then proposed the W. Master's health, and said he congratulated him on being so unanimously elected to the chair of the lodge, in which he, like himself, had been initiated, and on the prosperous condition of the affairs of the lodge, and he also congratulated the brethren on the appointment they had made; for from the high estimation in which he was held in by the brethren, and shared in by those who knew him from without, he had every confidence in saying, that the duties of the chair would be performed in a manner that would reflect credit on himself, and pleasure and satisfaction to the lodge. Due honor was paid to this toast, and the W.M. thanked the brethren for the kind manner in which it had been received; he certainly felt proud of the position he occupied, not from any empty vanity, but from the manner in which they had acknowledged his efforts to make himself master of the very beautiful ceremonies and ritual, which it would now be his pride and pleasure to render, with all the effect that he had received them, for he could say in truth that ever since he first saw the Light he had desired to make himself more and more acquainted with its practical tendencies, and he had found it to be a real and genuine practice of every generous sentiment and moral and social virtue, and he hoped that while the Great A.O.T.U. preserved to him the possession of health to practice them, to preserve to himself the good opinion of those friends he had found in Masonry.

Solway Lodge, No. 1220.—The members of this highly flourishing lodge met on Tuesday, the 8th inst., at the Albion Hotel, Silloth, to expatiate on the principles of Freemasonry, under the able presidency of Bro. F. W. Hayward, P.M. 310, P.P.G.S.W.; supported by Bros. J. Hutton, P.M. 327, S.W. and Treas.; A. Routledge, J.W., P.M. 327, P.P.G.P.; and assisted by Bros. J. Stubbs, S.D.; G. Stodart, J.D.; A. Woodhouse, Sec. 310 and 1220, P.M. 412; J. Thorpe, Org.; J. H. Howes, I.G.; J. Howe, Tyler; also present, W. Dickson, R. Lambert, J. Duff, G. Holmes, D. Furnas, R. Pattinson, Capt. W. Brough, and visiting Bro. J. Halliday, of 327 Wigton. The lodge was opened, and the minutes read and confirmed. Bro. W. Brough, a candidate for advancement, was tested as to his proficiency as an E.A., and being found worthy, was entrusted and retired. The lodge was opened in the second degree, when Bro. Pattinson, who claimed the exalted position of the third degree in Masonry, was also tested and found to be qualified for his claim; after being empowered he retired to be prepared, and was afterwards admitted and raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason. Business was then resumed in the second degree, and Bro. Brough was duly advanced to a F.C. The lodge was again lowered to the first degree, when the questions for the second degree were passed round for the benefit of the candidates. A gentleman was proposed to be initiated at the next meeting. The lodge was then duly closed and all parted in harmony.

SCARBOROUGH.—Denison Lodge, No. 1248.—This lodge met on the 17th June, in the lodge rooms at the Grand Hotel, Scarborough. The following officers and brethren were present:—Bros. J. O. Surtees, W.M.; C. B. Brearey, S.W.; G. H. Walshaw, J.W.; J. Donner, Sec.; J. E. Green, S.D.; H. W. Garnett, J.D.; H. C. Martin, P.M., J.G.; J. Verity, Tyler; J. Knight, J. S. Cook, V. Stewart, A. Fricour, J. Fisher, P.M., G. Taylor, T. Jarvis, N. H. Delemare, and J. Mason. Visitors, Bros. W. Reeve (237), H. Scott (236), and H. A. Williamson (P.M. 200). The lodge was opened at 7 p.m. The minutes were read and confirmed. Bros. G. Taylor and J. S. Clook passed an examination in the first degree and retired, and were re admitted and passed to the second degree. The work was performed by the W.M., in his usual very impressive manner. Bros. V. Stewart and J. Mason passed an examination in the second degree and retired, and were re-admitted and raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. Bro. H. A. Williamson, P.M., Old Globe Lodge, No. 200, took the greater part of the duties of this degree. He has justly earned for himself a very high reputation in Scarborough, for his correct, impressive, and excellent talent in this very sublime degree. The lodges in Scarborough feel justly proud of his high Masonic worth and talent. The lodge was now worked down to the first degree. An arrangement was made by the W.M. for an emergency meeting to settle the Bye-laws of the lodge, after which the W.M. announced that he had given his authority to pay the only bill standing against the lodge; for, although only a few months old, the lodge was now out of debt, and he hoped out of danger. This announcement was received with general satisfaction by all present. The lodge was closed with solemn prayer at 10 p.m.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Provincial Grand Conclave of Lancashire.—The annual meeting of the above Conclave of the Military Order of Masonic Knights Templar was held at Liverpool, on the 10th inst., in the beautiful new room, at the Adelphi Hotel. The Jacques de Molay Encampment was opened in due form by Sir Knt. Capt. Thomas Berry, the E.C. The P.G. officers entered in procession, and the V.E.P.G. Commander, Sir Knt. Albert Hudson Royds, having taken his place on the throne, proceeded to the transaction of the business of the province, assisted by the E.D.P.G. Commander, Sir Knt. Wright and officers. The officers for the ensuing year being invested, and the committee of general purposes appointed, the Knights adjourned to the banquet.

PYTHAGOREAN LODGE OF INSTRUCTION, No. 79.—The Fifteen Sections will be worked in the above lodge (held at Bro. C. Wall's, Prince of Orange Tavern, Greenwich-road), on Wednesday next, June 23rd, at half-past seven o'clock, Bro. J. A. Berger, J.W. No. 72, S.W. No. 795, presiding. This lodge meets every Wednesday throughout the year, the ceremony and sections of the first, second, and third degrees being respectively worked on the first, second, and third Wednesday in the month.

NEW LODGE AT EGREMENT, CUMBERLAND.—The lodge proposed, seconded, and unanimously carried at the last meeting of the Lewis Lodge, No. 872, held in College-street, Whitehaven, having received the sanction of the R.W.P.G.M., Lord Kenlis, has been granted by the M.W.G. Master. The lodge is to be called "The Kenlis" No. 1267. Bro. C. Morton, P.P.G.S.W., is to act as W.M.; Bro. Lawson, S.W.; Bro. Edward Chapman, J.W. It will be held at the Cat Inn, Egremont, and will shortly be opened by the R.W.P.G.M., Lord Kenlis.

At the Hanover-square Rooms, on Friday evening, the 11th inst., there was a very large assemblage of the élite of the day, including some of the most celebrated members of the literary profession, to hear Bro. John Crawford Wilson (who has lately been initiated in the Urban Lodge) give a series of recitals. Bro. Wilson's prolific pen has produced several well-known farces, poems, &c. The recitals included selections from "Rory O'More," "After Flodden," "Irish Attorney," &c., and were beautifully delivered, eliciting great applause. A poem of Bro. Wilson's own composition, entitled "Home," well merited the encomiums passed upon it by the audience, and it is to be hoped that it will be repeated.

TOO MANY DEGREES.—"We do not set ourselves up as the champion of the 'Rite of Memphis' and the 'Scottish Rite' or any other 'Rite,' or side degrees. We honestly believe there are getting to be far too many degrees in this country for any utility, for the real good which Masonry is intended to accomplish. The great and important truths, the lessons, and glorious precepts taught, almost at the thresholds of our institution, are often forgotten, in the desire to gain possession of the so-called higher degrees."—Bro. Wm. C. Munger, Kentucky.

No encouragement should be given to any person who puts himself forward under colour of any of the antiquated cant of fashion, such as patriot, liberal, radical, conservative, orangeman, &c. On the plea of some of those titles whole masses of the people are used as instruments, tuned up to concert pitch, for monomaniacal declaimers, party advocates, and discordant orators to play upon. Such titles keep asunder the bonds of friendship which should exist between man and man, in religion, commerce, and conversation, and make a masquerade of human nature.—Ellis.

"MR. FORESTER AGAIN."

"Oh, I don't know. I think he's one of those unfortunate fellows who are more sinned against than sinning. Give a dog a bad name, you know the adage—it's musty enough. Well but, you must admit, Frank, that when fellows get into the papers in this way, things look serious," and Madge handed to his friend that day's copy of the Marton Gazette, and pointed to a paragraph which began with the words heading this chapter:—

"MR. FORESTER AGAIN.—Marton County Police Court.—Petty Sessions.—Friday.—(Before Sir Eustace de la Wray, Bart., Chairman; T. Hogarth, T. W. Waldron, and E. Emmith, Esqrs.)—Assault: Marmaduke Forester, clerk in the Marton and County Bank, a young gentleman of good connections, who has before figured in our police reports, was charged by Thos. Cooke, landlord of the Vulture Hotel, with an assault, on the 26th of March. The evidence was somewhat contradictory as to the exact nature of the assault, but it appeared that complainant ordered defendant out of the hotel, as he said he was taking up too much of the time of the people in the house, and preventing them doing their work. He also said something disparaging of defendant with regard to his attentions to a certain lady of the house. Defendant thereupon seized complainant, who is a big powerful man, by the collar, and, after a desperate struggle knocked him down. There was no evidence to show that defendant was the worse for liquor at the time.—Defendant, who was represented by Mr. Frank Ashburn, admitted the assault, but said it was committed under great provocation.—The Chairman remarked that no doubt great provocation had been given, but people had no right to take the law in their own hands; and, considering the position of defendant, the Bench had determined to make an example of him.—Fined £5 and costs, or one month's imprisonment."

"That little innuendo about the girl; what a shame to put that in! Yes it is a shame; all I can say is, 'An enemy hath done this.' The fact is it was all about Miss Robertson, Mayduke's friend. It appears that Cooke got an inkling of Forester's intentions towards her (indeed I believe the fellow has told people openly that he meant to marry her); and, fearing he to lose her services, which I am told are invaluable, for she's a clever girl, and manages his accounts wonderfully, he thought to fasten a quarrel on Forester, who you know is good-nature itself, and so hoped to disgust him with the house and make him leave it. He's rather a bully is Cooke, and flattered himself he could soon cow our friend (no pun intended), but the result showed that Forester, who has some good stuff at bottom, was more than a match for him. However, I am told Miss Robertson is leaving to-morrow, and lots of fellows are going to see her off by train by way of showing their sympathy—one friend among the number, no doubt."

"Well, it's a bad business any way. What right has the fellow to make himself so confoundedly notorious?"

"There's the rub. I say, old fellow, give us a bit of your tobacco; I know you've got some good cavendish. These cigars are awfully bad."

"Help yourself, Madge, you'll find my tobacco-cutter in the corner there, just on the right of the bookcase."

"Thanks—all right."

The two friends sat smoking for some minutes, looking abstractedly into the fire.

Madge broke the silence. "Well, say what you will—a man who calls himself a gentleman has no right to go courting barmaids, even if he does intend to do the proper thing—"

"Matter of opinion, my dear fellow; I knew a man once who got spooney on an actress, and was going to marry her—only she jilted him."

Madge winces as he remembers a certain episode in his history, and comes to the conclusion that he had better change the subject.

"By the way," Frank says, "I beg your pardon for not asking before, how is Mrs. Raymond?"

"Oh! she's very well, thanks—she went away yesterday to see some friends in the country, but she'll be back to-night by the last train; and, now I think of it, I had about forgotten what I came specially to see you about to-night. Will you dine with us to-morrow? It's my wife's birthday. You can go to your high church service at St. Matthew's, you know, and then up afterwards: we don't dine till two."

"Thanks: very glad."

"Good night, then, I must toddle. I suppose it will be about train time," and so saying, Mr. Madge Raymond let himself out at the door, after exchanging a pleasant word with the landlady, whom he met in the passage.

About the middle of April, Frank received a letter from his cousin, Sir Eustace de la Wray, which ran thus:—

Worsley Hall, 16th April, 1866.

My Dear Frank,—Lady Worsley desires me to say that she will be glad to see you to dinner to-morrow, at six. We are alone. I want to talk to you about the Irish business. My agent writes me from Killarney that there is a rumour of a Fenian outbreak there, and he has been evicting a lot of the tenants who are suspects. I don't want any injustice to be done to my people, and I think I shall have to ask you to go over and put matters straight, if you can. At any rate, come up to dinner. Remember, six sharp.—Your affectionate cousin, EUSTACE DE LA WRAY.

Sir Eustace de la Wray had only recently come into the baronetage and property of £6,000 a-year, which he inherited from a distant kinsman. He had formerly been in the Guards, but gave up the army when he married Miss de Verdon. He was a singularly handsome man, admirably proportioned, with regular features, a yellow-brown beard and moustache (which he wore very long). Standing six feet two in his stocking-feet, he was as princely a looking man as you could wish to see—wonderfully fascinating manners, many accomplishments, the very personation of good nature, Sir Eustace was par excellence the popular man of his day.

Lady de la Wray was a woman of perfect breeding, and possessed of fascinations which had struck many a one besides her husband. As, however, she will not figure much in this little story, it would be irrelevant to do more than introduce the reader. Of course Frank went to Worsley, which was only six miles from Marton. After dinner, having settled the Irish business (the firm being the Baronet's local agents), the conversation turned on the case of assault which had been before the magistrates, and Frank detailed the circumstances of the case.

"Isn't this Mr. Forester a tall thin young fellow, a sort of animated lamp-post?" the Baronet asks.

"Yes, that's the man, with sandy beard and whiskers," replied Frank.

"He had no beard when I saw him, which was yesterday. I had driven into Marton, and happened to stop just opposite Brown the barber's shop, in the High-street, when this fellow came out. He had a moustache, which he had got stuck out with bandoline, à la Empereur de France, and he wore an imperial. I should not have known him again, but the policeman Forbes, to whom I was giving some instructions, told me that he had just found out that that was the gentleman who had been before the magistrates for the assault on Mr. Cooke, the landlord of the Vulture."

"Ah," said Frank, drily, "The Greek Tau or Nile Cross."

"What do you mean?"

"Oh, only a joke of ours."

"By the way, Frank, have you heard anything of this?" and Sir Eustace handed to Frank a copy of the last week's Marton Gazette, in which occurred the following:—

FENIANISM IN MARTON.—We have reason to believe that the Fenians are in strong force in Marton. Certain circumstances have recently come to our notice which lead us to warn the public. So long ago as the 17th March last, St. Patrick's Day, a body of men were seen to enter about midnight, the old mill in the Draycot-road, formerly in the possession of Mr. West. Considerable noise was heard at intervals for about an hour or more, lights were observed about the place, and at about half-past one or two o'clock several men emerged, each of whom was armed with defensive weapons; our informant believes they were swords, and one or two of the number wore green sashes (the well-known badge of the Fenians). One of the parties has since been identified, and we regret to learn that he and his intimates are supposed to be members of respectable society. We have only to add that the parties are watched, and we warn them that any breach of the peace, no matter how trifling, will be promptly put down. A woman was seen walking up and down the main streets yesterday afternoon, singing Fenian songs, copies of which were bought up rapidly by the bystanders. Let the Volunteers be prepared, and the Armoury watched!

As Frank finished reading, he burst out into a hearty fit of laughter, which seemed to strike Sir Eustace with astonishment.

"What the deuce is it all about?" he asked.

Frank briefly described young Forester's introduction into Masonry; and the Baronet, who was a Freemason, joined heartily in the laugh as the various questions put to the candidate, and the ceremonies gone through, were detailed for his amusement.

"And you mean to tell me that the young fellow went through it all?"

"He did, indeed."

"And believed in it?"

"Took it all for gospel."

"How did you manage the phantom business?"

"Oh, easily enough. We got a lot of masks, rubbed the eyes with phosphorus, fastened these on sticks, and each fellow held one over his head, which was covered with a sheet. The effect in the gloom was fine, I can tell you."

"How about the flames?"

"Oh, we covered his head and face with a worsted night-cap, and Spark who had got a tin of powdered resin, threw it into the air, and some one held a piece of lighted paper, which sent it into a blaze as it fell. The thing is harmless enough."

"Well, Frank," the Baronet said, as he wished him good night, "I shall be really obliged to you for going to Ireland for me at a moment's notice. You'll start to-morrow."

"I will start by the first train in the morning. Good night, Sir Eustace."

CHAPTER IV.

THE LOVERS.—"ANOTHER FENIAN OUTRAGE."

Barton-le-Bar is a small watering-place on the East coast of England, situated about three miles to the southward of the town of Hartsea. It is a pleasant little village in summer, but very bleak and exposed in the winter months. The Barton Station, on the N.E. Railway, lies away from the village about a mile, and the road between it and the little watering-place is dignified with the name of "The Lovers' Walk." It is the 4th of May, and a lovely evening. A bright spring day it has been, full of cheerfulness and pleasant sunshine. The new moon is shining over head, her slender crescent being hid awhile by swiftly-flying clouds that hurry on their journey towards the sea. The sun has sunk beneath the horizon, leaving behind him crimson bars of glory to mark where he has set. The angry flush which grows upon the sky casts its bright glow upon a pair of lovers wandering down the lane arm in arm.

Fair is she as the dreams young poets weave,
Bright eyes and dainty lips and tresses curly,
In outward loveliness a child of Eve,
But cold as nymph of Lurley.

That description of the Maid of Cologne, from Hood's sad poem, very well describes the woman; but, as for the outward presentment of the man, it is enough to say that he was tall and very thin—not bad-looking, but yet wanting something to make him handsome. There was a womanly irresolution about the mouth, a certain pallor about the face, which seemed to speak of feeble health or dissipation, an awkwardness of gait which took from the appearance of the man. Yet was there nothing vicious in the face; and, as he bent down over the pretty girl who was walking by his side, and seemed to be pleading with her, an expression of kindly earnestness came into the great blue eye, which made you think there was some goodness in the countenance after all. As the reader will probably have conjectured, the young pair are none other than Marmaduke Forester and Miss Maggie Robertson. It has been hinted that Miss Robertson left the Vulture immediately after the fracas related in the last chapter, and she was now staying with her aunt, who kept a lodging-house at Barton-le-Bar. Young Forester had had a row at the bank with the manager, who was an ill-conditioned fellow, and afterwards went mad, and, as a consequence of his insubordination, was called upon to resign his situation. He was now going to visit his relations in the South of Ireland, but had determined, as his uncle had thoughtfully remitted the £100 a few days previous, to see pretty Maggie Robertson before he started. Of course she was pleased at this attention, and, though he had as yet made no declaration, she knew in her heart of hearts it would not be far to seek. That she was prepared to accept him, there can be no doubt; nor can the reader blame her for so doing. She had been brought up in a hard school. Her father, who had been in a superior station in life, had come to an early grave through his intemperate habits, and had left his widow and two daughters utterly unprovided for. Mrs. Robertson, poor creature, eked out a miserable livelihood by teaching the pianoforte in a second-rate town in the West of England. Maggie had taken the place of a barmaid, partly because she would be paid much higher than if she went out as a governess, and so would be better able to keep her younger sister at school, and partly because she was quite ignorant of the position and temptations incident to such a situation. At first, she had laughed at poor Forester, who was the butt of the young fellows who frequented the bar (a very favourite place of meeting every day at noon), just as the rest laughed; but her woman's instinct soon discovered that, under that queer exterior, that eccentric manner, there was a depth which no one dreamed of except herself. She saw that he was an affectionate, warm-hearted ne'er-do-well, and she thought it no unworthy task to try and recall our hero to his better self. That she succeeded in touching his too-susceptible heart, there can be no doubt; and, knowing that, one cannot blame her for hoping, by an honourable marriage, to remove herself from her trials (to her they were not temptations) of hotel life. And on that bright spring evening, as she walked with him down to the train, he unburthened himself to her; told her how he had left the bank, and how everyone seemed turning against him; and then suddenly blurted out, in impassioned words which grew more eloquent as he went on and waxed in earnestness, all of his love for her.
